The Advocate reported that boys playing baseball in a park in New Canaan at about 3:30 p.m. Friday saw a woman walking alone near railroad tracks about 30 yards from the field. When the woman apparently attempted to catch their attention, the boys assumed she was waving and waved back.

Soon they heard an explosion and saw flames four or five feet high.

"The preliminary autopsy report showed no signs of trauma and the preliminary police investigation showed no evidence of foul play," Sgt. Nicholas Warren of the New Canaan Police Department n said in a statement released shortly after the incident.

A man who answered the phone at Frazier's Amherst apartment declined to comment.

A New Canaan neighbor who has lived next door to the Fraziers for about 18 years told the Advocate that Adrienne "seemed well-adjusted and happy" while in high school.

"She was a lovely girl in every way," he said. "Whatever happened was clearly unbelievable. I don't know any explanation for it, and my heart goes out to her family."

On Feb. 18, Gregory Levey, 30, a 1984 University graduate, died on the Amherst Town Common after pouring paint thinner on his body and setting himself on fire.

Weld files to cut state employees' pay 5 percent

Boston (AP) — Gov. William Weld filed legislation Monday to cut pay of state employees earning $60,000 or more by 5 percent.

The proposed pay cut would save the state more than $6.5 million.

The governor's pay cut proposal dictates that 1,835 state employees would lose a total of $6.5 million in fiscal 1991 and 1992, and "countless" workers at independent authorities would also make a "small sacrifice" to help the state balance its books, Weld said.

The state faces an $850 million deficit in fiscal 1991 — which could be driven up by stale revenues and rising unemployment — and a projected $1.2 billion deficit in fiscal 1992, which begins July 1.

Weld said the state could save another $1 million if the Legislature passes the pay cut measure before May 1.

Figures supplied by Weld's office indicated that 1,110 employees in the state's higher education system would lose a combined $3.9 million — an average of $3,525 — with the 5 percent cuts, the largest among state agencies and departments.

The average salary of those who would be affected by the cut in higher education was $70,508.

Six people in the governor's office — including Weld, who is paid $75,000 annually — earn more than $60,000. The average of those six salaries is $78,333, and the measure's total reduction there would be $23,500.

Peter Lucas, spokesman for House Speaker Charles Flaherty, said the speaker would have no comment Monday on Weld's pay cut proposal.

Weld said Monday he would take his unpaid furlough next week for a vacation with his family in Virginia. Last month, the Legislature approved the employee furlough plan as part of a $400 million deficit reduction package for the current fiscal year.

The plan requires employees such as Weld, who make more that $70,000, to take a total of three weeks without pay this year. All employees can choose one of three options: take the time off without pay, work and receive deferred compensation when they leave state service or work and accumulate vacation days next year.

Congress focuses on domestic issues

WASHINGTON (AP) — The conflict with Iraq left most members of Congress like the rest of the country spellbound observers.

But now, after a two-week Easter vacation, lawmakers are likely to shed their preoccupation with the Persian Gulf and enter a partisan thicket of kitchen-table issues like taxes and education that have been relegated to the background.

"The break basically represents a hiatus that kind of separates the war and the politics surrounding the war from a return to the domestic agenda," said Rep. leon Panetta, D-Calif.

Lawmakers return to work on Tuesday. A return to the domestic agenda, however, means partisan battling, spiced by both parties' awareness that the 1992 campaign season is not too far off.

"The Democrats will try to create the impression that they're moving forward on domestic issues despite opposition from the White House," says Rep. Norman Lent, R-NY, ranking Republican on the House Energy and Commerce Committee. "They'll be trying to discredit Bush with the election coming up."

Democrats counter that they will take on Bush if they have to, knowing that polls show the public trusts them over Republicans on domestic issues. A battle with the president over the domestic agenda, they say, is up to Bush.

"It depends on whether he'll exercise the same kind of leadership he exercised during the war," says Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, who might be interested in challenging Bush next year. "Up to this point, he hasn't exercised that kind of leadership on domestic issues."

One of the first items awaiting Congress is enacting a $1.4 trillion budget for fiscal 1992, which starts Oct. 1.

The House Budget Committee, which Panetta chairs, plans to write a spending plan this week. Panetta and fellow Democrats want to give more money to education, health care and children's programs than Bush recommended in February.

"The president's budget, frankly gave us a lot of room for modifying and improving priorities," says Panetta.

Bush's budget proposed several minor tax increases and cuts and a five-year $25 billion slash in the Medicare health care program for the elderly and handicapped.

Panetta says his plan won't suggest increases or cuts in taxes or benefit programs such as Medicare or Social Security. Instead, it will offer a menu of possible initiatives, such as increasing unemployment insurance

Kennedy test results to take 7-14 days

PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Results from analysis of blood and hair samples from William Kennedy Smith, a suspect in an alleged rape at the Kennedy family's oceanfront estate, will take seven to 14 days, police said yesterday.

Meanwhile, police confirmed yesterday they were also looking into the disappearance of an antique urn from the estate as part of their investigation.

The urn and other objects from the home were allegedly taken from the estate by the 29-year-old woman who reported the assault, according to published reports yesterday.

Police spokesman Craig Gunkel refused to comment on the theft allegations, or who turned in the urn to police. He also would not elaborate on how the urn's removal may be linked to the assault.

"It was brought to our attention that [the urn] was missing from the Kennedy estate," Gunkel said, adding he was unaware of anything else being taken from the estate. The urn is being held as evidence in the investigation, he said.

Smith, 30, voluntarily turned over hair and blood samples to a Palm Beach police detective in Washington over the weekend, but has refused to be interviewed by police on the advice of his attorney.

A Palm Beach woman has accused Smith, a medical student at Georgetown University in Washington, of sexually assaulting her in the predawn hours of March 30 on the grounds of the walled mansion.

Smith, the nephew of Massachusetts Sen. Edward Kennedy, has denied any wrongdoing. His attorney, Mark Schnapp, refused to comment on Smith being identified as the suspect, or why he hasn't talked to police.

Palm Beach detectives also interviewed Kennedy and his 23-year-old son, Patrick, a Rhode Island legislator — both of whom were at the estate over the Easter weekend — about the alleged assault. They have denied any involvement.

Patrick Kennedy, who was interviewed Saturday in Washington, told reporters Sunday from his Providence home that he wouldn't discuss the interview.

"It really troubles me that [it's] being perceived that I'm not being forthcoming. But quite frankly I'm simply honoring the request made by the Palm Beach police to keep my interview with them confidential," he said.

The senator was questioned about a half hour Sunday at his home in suburban Virginia outside Washington, his spokesman Paul Donovan said.

US at fault for continued abuses in Central America

By AHVA DAVIS
Collegian Correspondent

The United States is to blame for the ongoing killings and human rights violations in Central America, a Central American activist said yesterday.

Fausto Amador, the Executive Director of a non-profit organization to help promote self-help housing construction project in Central America, spoke about the intervention of the U.S. Military in Central America.

"What the United States must do now is to unconditionally stop sending weapons to Central America," Amador said.

The U.S. supplies weapons, along with academies to train the natives to become soldiers, creating "an American army made of Nicaraguan officers," Amador said.

"Now that the United States is giving them weapons, we can ask them for more human rights," Amador said.

He gave a history of the land, and the people. "Central America is the most populated area of America, and of the world," Amador said.

The land in Costa Rica was previously owned by Indians, but was soon taken over by people that were trying to escape, according to Amador. "Colonization was made up of families, people trying escape from persecution, and oppression," he said.

Armies were not needed in Central America, but were constituted for the rights of the land and their owners, said Amador.

After the second World War, the social problems of Central America were not the same. "Central American leaders started to believe that whoever is your enemy might be your friend," Amador said.

The United States is to blame for the violence because they are the ones that provide the weapons, and the money needed for fighting. If the United States wants cooperation from a Central American country, then they must give that country what they want, Amador said.

To Central Americans "every violation of human rights is better than a Communist takeover," continued Amador.

Chambers resigns, joins Collins campaign

By MARC ELLIOTT
Collegian Staff

Commuter Area Government President Ted Chambers resigned yesterday to a become a paid staff member on the campaign to elect Jim Collins. Chambers will coordinate campaign efforts in Hamden County.

Former Vice President Susan Church will be acting president of the commuter area until the end of the semester.

Chambers, a senior History major, said he resigned to avoid compromising the Commuter Area Government's student voter drive.

"Commuter Area Government is running a get out to vote campaign for students and I have just been hired as a paid staffer on the campaign for Collins," he said. "I want to see both efforts succeed. I want to see a lot of students voting and I want to see Jim Collins get elected. So I don't want to compromise either campaign."

Chambers said he is supporting Jim Collins because he has proven himself as the candidate for UMass.

"As far as the campus is concerned there are only two candidates: Jim Collins and John Oliver," Chambers said.

Commission okays new student government setup

By JEFF CLEARY
Collegian Correspondent

The Commission on Student Governance agreed this weekend on a new structure for student government that would eliminate the Student Senate and shrink the Student Government Association to roughly 30 members, while creating three boards under one council.

Students would run for either the Student Organization Board or the Student Advocacy Board while the area governments would stay the same, according to Dan Chesnicka, co-chair of the Commission.

The plan will face a campus-wide referendum in May and must still be adopted by the Board of Trustees.

"This structure creates a functional body instead of a government. This way we have a special interest group that works for the students," Chesnicka said.

"I'm very happy with the progress and pace of the Commission," said Student Attorney General Adam Scales.

Membership of the Council would include the President, Vice President, the Trustee, Area Government Presidents, all chairmembers of the subcommittees and ex-officio members including faculty, administrators and a newly created Research and Training professional hired by the students, Chesnicka said.

Money for each board would be allotted by percentage and each of the three

Israeli government to free 1,000 Palestinian prisoners

By ALLYN FISHER
Associated Press Writer

JERUSALEM – Israel will free more than 1,000 Palestinian prisoners, the government announced yesterday, just hours before the arrival of Secretary of State James A. Baker III for talks on Middle East peace.

The statement by the Defense Ministry also pledged tax concessions for new businesses in the occupied Gaza Strip.

On a visit one month ago, Baker urged that "confidence building" steps be taken by Israel to coax Arab states and the Palestinians into peace talks.

But the Defense Ministry said in the statement that the prisoner release and tax concessions were "not gestures made in connection with the visit of the U.S. secretary of state. . . but rather are measures that have been under consideration in the defense establishment in recent weeks."

Still, newspaper and radio reports earlier yesterday said Israel planned goodwill gestures toward the Palestinians and linked them to Baker's visit.

The announcement said that more than 1,000 prisoners from the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip would be freed "on the occasion of Eid el-Fitr." The feast, which marks the end of the Muslim holy month of Ramadan, occurs this weekend.

The statement did not say, however, when the actual releases would be.

Israeli army figures in mid-March said there were 10,528 Palestinians jailed for protest activities and crimes stemming from the nearly 40-month-old Palestinian uprising against Israeli occupation in the West Bank and Gaza.

Of those, 4,221 were convicted and serving sentences, 988 are charged and awaiting trial, 3,992 were held for investigation in anticipation of charges and 1,327 were administrative detainees.

Under the administrative detention system, Arabs can be held for up to one year without charge or trial.

The tax measures will be implemented in the Gaza Strip, home to 750,000 Palestinians.

The Defense Ministry statement did not give specifics of the plans but said it was designed "to ease the lives of the Arab population." It added: "The reform will provide relief for the residents of the area as well as assist in encouraging investments to establish local industries."

It said there would be a three-year tax exemption for new industries and tax benefits for existing plants, but gave no specifics.

The Gaza and the West Bank, where one million Palestinians live, have been hard hit by strict work rules imposed by Israel after the Gulf War to limit the number of Arab workers entering the Jewish state.

The work permit system was instituted as a security measure after a series of stabbing attacks by Arabs against Jews. Under the tighter work rules and travel restrictions, just 70,000 Palestinians now have permission to work in Israel compared with just about 120,000 before the war.

The statement said further steps were under study, but gave no details.

The news reports earlier yesterday said Israel also was considering reopening Arab colleges as a gesture to Baker. Four of the six Palestinian universities in the territories have been shut since the uprising began in December 1987. But yesterday's statement did not mention anything about reopening universities.

Baker was to arrive in Israel last night for his second Middle East peace-seeking trip in a month.

Signs of spring flourish across Massachusetts

By TRUDY TYNAN
Associated Press Writer

SPRINGFIELD – The signs are all there: The bald eagles are on the nest. The salamanders and Atlantic salmon are on the move. And the peregrine falcons are on television. It's spring in Massachusetts.

The birds and the beasts were not the only ones taking the sun yesterday. A sea breeze kept temperatures in the 50s in Boston, but they reached into the 80s inland, drawing office workers and college students outside to bask at lunchtime.

A record high of 87 degrees was reported at Westover Air Force Base in Chicopee at 1 p.m., according to forecaster Jeff Soja. The previous high was 73 in 1959, he said.

Biologists were keeping a close watch on the Connecticut River figuring the unseasonable warmth could mean an early start to the salmon run, said Ted Meyers of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service in Turners Falls.

"Four out of our five nesting pairs of bald eagles are incubating eggs, and we expect them to start hatching toward the end of the month," said Bill Davis, head of the state's eagle restoration program. The fifth pair is rebuilding their nest, which blew down last winter, he said.

The return of a breeding population of the national symbol to Massachusetts after an absence of nearly a century is the result of a seven-year state effort, launched in 1982, that included raising and releasing 42 young eagles at the Quabbin Reservoir. The first chick was hatched in 1989.

Three of the active nests this spring are at the wild reservoir, Davis said. The fourth pair of eagles has returned to a nest on an island in the Connecticut River off a busy boat yard in Gill. Last spring three pairs of eagles hatched chicks.

"We don't know what the saturation point is going to be, but I feel the Quabbin can maintain at least a couple more nests and there is the rest of the Connecticut River and some of the more remote reservoirs," Davis said.

In Springfield, a local cable company has a camera turned on a pair of peregrine falcons nesting on a 21st-floor ledge of a downtown office building for the third straight year.

Presidential hopefuls begin to surface

By JOHN KING
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON – Sen. Bob Kerrey caused quite a stir when he walked into a recent Democratic Party meeting with the guys who ran Gary Hart's New Hampshire campaign.

The immediate question: Is Kerrey running for president?

He says no. But his office recently asked around for a list of national political reporters.

House Majority Leader Richard Gephardt delivered a fiery speech to the Democratic National Committee last month, promising to push an aggressive economic agenda he said the party needs to win back the White House.

So, is Gephardt running for president?

He says no. But he's hired a top party strategist to raise money for his political action committee, and tells close associates he may change his mind.

With the 1992 election 19 months away and the Iowa caucuses 10 months down the road, former Massachusetts Sen. Paul Tsongas is the only Democrat who says yes when asked if he's running for president.

He's coming to Washington this week to explain why and to urge others to join him. "I think the more of us who are out there the better," says Tsongas.

But most other potential candidates dance and duck when asked if they're running. They'd rather keep their thoughts to themselves as they assess their chances of winning the nomination and then the even more formidable challenge of taking on President Bush, currently basking in record postwar popularity.

Complicating the deliberations of most potential candidates is their January opposition to giving Bush authority to begin the Persian Gulf War.

"As spring turns to summer, I think you'll see a few more people enter the race," says Paul Tully, the Democratic National Committee's political director. "Iowa will get a little crowded in due time."

In the meantime, every move by the potential candidates is scrutinized by party operatives and potential opponents. Following, in no particular order, is a listing of prospective Democratic contenders and the latest on their intentions:

- Sen. Al Gore of Tennessee. Gore, an unsuccessful candidate for the 1988 nomination, says he is seriously considering running in 1992.
- Gov. Mario Cuomo of New York. Cuomo plans trips to Israel and Japan and then a round of speeches across the country during which he is expected to decide whether or not to run.
- Sen. Lloyd Bentsen of Texas. Bentsen has the luxury of waiting because of high name recognition and a crack fund-raising operation.
- Kerrey. Mentioned more frequently as a 1996 presidential candidate and perhaps a vice presidential pick for 1992, the Nebraska senator is watching others closely.
- Gephardt. He said last month he isn't running, but he has given mixed signals to associates and fund-raisers.

Souter's voting record mirrors O'Connor's

By RICHARD CARELLI
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON – David H. Souter, the Supreme Court's newest member, so far has been a statistical twin of Justice Sandra Day O'Connor when voting in cases that yield split decisions.

Souter, whose every move is being charted by court watchers because he's considered a key vote on such issues as abortion, affirmative action and religious freedom, has participated in 13 decisions in which the justices were not unanimous. His vote in each ruling mirrored O'Connor's.

In those 13 cases, Souter's vote was in the same column as the conservative Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist seven times: the same as liberal Justice Thurgood Marshall six times.

Souter joined O'Connor, Marshall and Justices Harry A. Blackmun and John Paul Stevens in a 5-4 decision that said women may not be barred from hazardous jobs just to protect potential fetuses. Liberals and feminists cheered while conservatives grumbled.

But Souter soon thereafter joined Rehnquist, O'Connor and conservative Justices Antonin Scalia and Anthony M. Kennedy in a 5-4 decision that said the wrongful use of coerced confessions sometimes can be considered harmless error. That caused some teeth-gnashing among liberals.

Early in his tenure, it appears Souter is most comfortable on the court's middle ground – also occupied by O'Connor and Justice Byron R. White. If one is willing to sacrifice numerous nuances and subtleties, here's what a left-to-right Supreme Court political and jurisprudential chart might look like today:

- Column 1: Marshall, the most consistent liberal.
- Column 2: Blackmun and Stevens, who most often vote the same way as Marshall in closely contested cases.
- Column 3: O'Connor, White and Souter, to date proving to be the court's centrists.

"There is just no question that Jim Collins is better for students. He is a graduate of the University and he's not afraid to rock the boat. In 1986 he took on Michael Dukakis and Michael Dukakis fired him as chair of the regents because he spoke out against some of the things Dukakis was doing to higher education."

Collins is running for the first district congressional seat left vacant by Silvio Conte's death earlier this year.

During Chambers' reign as Commuter Area Government, the body ran a voter registration drive to get students to register in Amherst and was active in getting eight UMass students elected to the Amherst Town Meeting.

American Express Announces A Great New Travel Program.

Now students can get the Card and get 3 roundtrips on Continental Airlines, for only $129 or $189 each.

There's only one way to cover a lot of territory without spending a lot of money. And that's by getting the American Express® Card. It's the only card that offers an exciting new travel program exclusively for students—including three roundtrip certificates on Continental Airlines.

Just look at the map and pick the place you'd like to visit. If it's on your side of the Mississippi River, you can use a certificate to fly for only $129 roundtrip. Or, you can cross the Mississippi for $189 roundtrip.

You have your pick of more than 150 cities in the 48 contiguous states. And you can fly almost anytime—because there are no blackout dates. But you must make your reservations within 14 days of the day you leave. And the maximum stay is 7 days/6 nights and must include a Saturday night.

In addition to this great travel program, you'll also enjoy all the benefits of Cardmembership as well as other exclusive student privileges. They include a quarterly magazine filled with informative articles on summer jobs, careers, campus life. Plus valuable discounts from leading retailers.

But remember, there's only one way to get all this—and that's by getting the American Express Card. Just call us (have your bank address and account number on hand). What's more, with our special student offer, it's easier to get the Card now while you're still in school than it may ever be again.

So get the Card. And get ready to cover new territory on either side of our Great Continental Divide.

What gives them the right?

She walked into the convenience store to buy a newspaper and pre-pay for $5 worth of gas. Not saying anything, she walked up to the counter and waited in line behind two men.

These two men standing in front of her, probably around 30 years old, were wearing tank tops, exposing their tattooed arms, and jeans. While they laid their crumpled dollar bills on the counter to pay for a few packs of cigarettes, one man signaled to the other with his eyes and turned around to stare at the woman behind them.

Meredith O'Brien

She shifted her weight uncomfortably, pretending she didn't see them looking at her and rummaged through her purse like she was trying to find something.

The two men grinned and laughed as they left the store, blatantly gaping at her as they walked through the doorway.

"Five dollars regular unleaded," she told the cashier in a quiet, apprehensive voice. "Oh, and a Boston Globe too."

The cashier, a man in his 20s, nodded and handed her her change, glancing out the window at the two men who were getting into the white van.

"Have a nice day," he said looking at her strangely, almost as though he understood her discomfort.

Donning her sunglasses, she headed toward the car. As she threw her pocketbook and paper onto the front seat, she noticed that the two men were just sitting in the van, about 20 yards away from her car.

Once again, pretending she didn't see them, she unscrewed the car's gas cap and started pumping the gas, staring straight at the pump.

The driver revved the van's engine, slowly driving by her car and toward the exit.

Her face grew hot because she knew they were gawking at her. Her fists clenched as she wished they would just go away and leave her alone.

Glancing up as the van reached the exit, she saw their grinning faces.

"Eeewwwww!" they hooted.

"Look at that thang pumping the gas," the driver yelled. "Eeewww look at her pump."

Her anger boiled, but she said nothing. Her mouth was restrained by the fear that they might turn around and harass her more, or even worse. . . .

She heard them laugh loudly as they pulled out into the street. In vain she gave them the "finger" but they were too busy laughing to notice.

Waiting for her $5 worth of gas to be pumped, she mentally kicked herself. She felt stupid, wishing she had said something, anything instead of just standing there and taking it.

She looked down at her clothes. Wearing a simple crew-necked cotton shirt, a long denim skirt and flat shoes she didn't understand why they chose to hoot at her.

Then, out of sheer frustration she told herself that it doesn't and shouldn't matter what she was wearing. She should be able to wear whatever she wants without the fear of being subjected to such harassment.

The knot in her stomach tightened.

"It was only two jerks, probably hard-up," she told herself. "I shouldn't care about what they say anyway."

But as she drove down the road, she couldn't shake her anger.

"Who gave them the right to do this to me? Who do they think they are tormenting me like this?" she asked. "I know I shouldn't care about what they say, but then why do I feel so awful?"

African-Americans express rage at Collegian's Frotter

An enormous number of the African-American community found the Frotter comic strip, printed on Friday, Apr. 5, to be extremely insulting, not to mention demeaning, ignorant, and absurd.

Did Gary Porter honestly think that African-Americans were going to tolerate this? Wrong! Not only will a copy of Gary Porter's "comic strip" be sent to The Boston Globe and The Boston Herald, but arrangements have already been made to inform the NAACP and CORE.

The reason we feel Gary Porter wrote this particular comic episode is as another put down to African-Americans. Gary Porter and the newspaper staff who allowed this comic to be printed did so out of their own fear and ignorance. David Duke was right; African-Americans will take over white collar jobs, and all other jobs.

In the future, The Collegian should take into consideration that they have a diverse group of readers and should not allow racial, ethnic, sexual, or any other type of discrimination to make its way into the paper if they want it to be considered a reputable or credible one.

We will not rest until an acceptable public apology is made and the Frotter comic strip is removed from The Collegian.

Joke about that!

We vote pro-choice for congress

We represent the student pro-choice majority at the Five College network and the 1st Congressional District.

There are thousands of students in this district who will vote in the upcoming special election for Congress. We are mobilizing students to make our pro-choice voices heard loud and clear.

The women of his country live in a state of emergency.

Every state legislature is a battleground under siege from anti-choice fire. Thousands of women's lives have been sacrificed while Congress turned a blind eye. There is no negotiation and no truce in this war on women. We fight back and win or die.

Every seat counts in this Congress bitterly divided on a woman's right to choose. It is vitally important to advance federal legislation to secure choice. The Freedom of Choice Act codifies the principles of Roe vs. Wade into federal law. We must have a representative who will proudly join this bill's 127 House cosponsers and make freedom of choice the law of the land.

This district is a pro-choice district and deserves a committed pro-choice representative. There can be no waffling on the issue of women's lives. There can be no exceptions for young women in the form of parental consent laws, or for poor women in eliminating Medicaid funding for abortions.

Linda Melconian, Steven Pierce and Leonard Collamore may attempt to fudge their records on the issue of abortion. yet their voting records have made their anti-choice dogma very clear.

Voters must know the difference when the stakes are so high.

Know the candidates' stands and vote pro-choice on Apr. 30. It's the only way to end this senseless war on women's right to choose.

If we want a voice, today's student elections are vital

On April 9, I am going to cast my vote to elect a new SGA president and trustee. As I'm sure that many of you have heard reports of the recent demise of student government, I'd like to take a few moments to explain why.

Adam Scales

At the beginning of this semester, the five officers of the SGA, of whom only two were elected by you, requested that the University administration suspend student government and form a commission to restructure it. As the SGA Attorney General, I shared and respected many of the concerns which prompted them to take this unpecedented step. I could not, however, share in their resolve to deny other student leaders any input into their decision, or respect their arrogance and contempt for their colleagues in student government.

Although the Student Senate voted overwhelmingly to disapprove of their actions, the administration sided with the officers, and has effectively suspended student government. Moreover, Interim Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Dr. Jo-Anne Vanin has declared that she will refuse to recognize any SGA election until the Commission presents its recommendations to the campus on May 1. Why, then, are we going to hold the campus-wide election nevertheless? Because failing to do so would deny the students on this campus their vital right to democratically choose who is going to represent their interests in the coming months.

Under the administration's scheme students would vote on May 1 to determine whether to approve a new structure for student government. While the election of the Student Trustee — your representative on the University's Board of Trustees — would also be held in May, the election of all the other SGA officers, including the president and treasurer, would not be held until sometime next semester. This would effectively leave you without leadership, without a voice from June through October, and possibly beyond. Without SGA officers, who will represent your interests and concerns over the summer? When budget cuts result in policy changes necessitating action on the part of student government, who will provide it? In sum, who will advocate before the administration on your behalf for the duration of this indefinite period of transition? The answer offered by this plan to all these questions is simple: The administration.

PEACE WITH HONOR

Moreover, it is an all-too-familiar arrogance which presupposes that you will accept the commission proposals in May. No provisions beyond a few incoherent vagaries from the Director of Student Activities have been articulated by the administration for dealing with the distinct possibility that you might choose otherwise.

Thus, I am voting this Tuesday in the hopes that with a sizable enough student turnout, Dr. Vanin will be loathe to muster the same flatulent evasiveness she displayed when these and other concerns were brought to her attention six weeks ago. More importantly, I firmly believe that the students must express their resolve not to allow the administration to dictate when they will be allowed to choose their leaders. And, I am voting to just say no to the Machiavellian thesis of both the administration and the five officers of the SGA that the students on this campus, along with their elected representatives can be safely ignored in the light of principles they consider to be imperative.

Perhaps the administration will ignore us, but if they so choose, they will at least be forced to admit that they are doing precisely that. I urge you to vote on Tuesday.

This entire process has been both enlightening and profoundly disappointing to me, and I would like to conclude by relating to you an experience which illustrates how I believed student government worked, or rather, how it didn't work:

A colleague of mine with whom I've had a running disagreement about student government revealed to me her suspicion that I intended to go to the administration, in order to ensure that my view prevailed. Surprised, I pointed our that I regarded as unthinkable the idea that one should attempt to circumvent or ignore one's fellow student leaders simply because they disagree. I concluded by noting that although it would be nice to have position in which I could unilaterally impose my world view upon student government, it wasn't the job I had.

Perhaps I should run for SGA President boards will make up the budgets of their subcommittees, Chesnicka said.

The SOB deals with activities and programs campus-wide including hiring of professionals for student activities, setting policies and budgeting for RSOs and SAO and their agencies. Membership includes the President as chair, about 10-20 students elected to the SOB with ex-officio representatives from Auxiliary Services, faculty, SAO director, and a professional SAB director, Chesnicka said.

The SAB would organize data and make recommendations on avenues of advocacy, and implement them to the Council through its subcommittees and the Research professional. The Vice President would chair this board, whose membership is similar to the SOB. It's subcommittees would include Rents and Fees, Quality of Life, Academic Advocacy and Ad Hoc, Chesnicka said.

Area Governments would keep their current status and provide the "grassroots" participation of the students for the new structure. The Conference, made up of area government and house council members and ex-officio SAO, SAB, OCHO and Greek Affairs staff, would deal with Housing problems for students and provide judicial advocacy for students between Residential Education, Greek Affairs and the Town of Amherst, Chesnicka said.

Rugby ruins Hartford, No. Adams

By KURT MOFFETT
Collegian Correspondent

Following a very disappointing loss to URI, the University of Massachusetts rugby club rebounded and demolished the University of Hartford and North Adams State College Saturday afternoon. They were inspired by the largest crowd of the season as Teams A through D outscored their opponents by a total of 100-11.

UMass' A Team shut out Hartford 38-0. Despite the heat, players such as Ricky Dever, "Boomer" Kenneally and Greg Champeau performed outstandingly, according to coach Francis Buttle. He said the back row performance was a "full 80 minutes played with passion."

"They played a much better game than they did on Wednesday [against Amherst]," he added. "The players were so disappointed against Amherst. We should've beaten Amherst. They had much more determination this time out."

By outhustling and outpacing the Hartford players, UMass was able to set up for several scoring opportunities. Apparently, the performance of the A Team rubbed off on to the B Team as well as they, too, won 45-0 over North Adams State.

UMass' C Team swept Hartford's B Team 13-7, scoring two tries to one. In an ugly battle with North Adams' second team that included four ejections for foul play, the UMass D Team tied 4-4.

The team continues their schedule this Saturday against the Mystic River Club and Worcester State College. The games will be begin at noon at Boyden Field as all five teams, A through E, will participate.

The rugby club's A through D Teams thrashed the University of Hartford and North Adams State College with a combined score of 100-11 this weekend.

Ryder plays blue collar rock at Pearl Street

By JOHN PURIN
Collegian Staff

Mitch Ryder
Pearl Street
Saturday, April 6

You may not know his name, but you probably know his songs. And even if you don't actually know the songs themselves, you know the sound. That's because the obscure legend Mitch Ryder, who played Pearl Street on Saturday night, is a major influence on the likes of Bob Seger and Bruce Springsteen, and just about every other arena rocker who ever stuck a blue collar pose. Actually Ryder is a lot hipper than such a description might suggest, because he still sweats for his money in small clubs, just as he did in Detroit in the 60s. There, Ryder and his band, The Detroit Wheels, were one of the first White acts to explore the predominantly African-American art form known as rhythm and blues. While the show had some definite drawbacks, Ryder proved on Saturday that he is still one of the best belters around.

After an unimpressive opening number, Mitch and company launched into "the song which first established me as an artist in America," his 1966 hit "Jenny Take a Ride." Actually what the song established was his role as a master of the art of interpretation, because the song is actually a medley of two blues standards, "Jenny, Jenny" and "C.C. Rider." The latter tune is well known as a part of the repertoire of the Grateful Dead, but while the Dead slow it down to "Jerryatric" pace, guitarist Robert Gillespie fueled a lively version with his fiery Les Paul.

That was just the first of a number of interesting covers. Others included a killer arrangement of "Money (That's What I Want)" and a competent but undistinguished rendering of Buddy Holly's "Not Fade Away." Mitch also pulled out not one but two Rolling Stones numbers, reminding us that while Mick Jagger nurses ambitions as an rhythm and blues singer, Ryder is the real thing. "Gimme Shelter" was an unexpected but brilliant encore, and though "Heart of Stone" was introduced as a ballad, it was a scorching hyperactive one at that. For most of the tune Mitch's raspy wail was wedded to sweet instrumental harmonies that recalled doo-wop, but at the end he exploded into a bloodcurdling scream which was sheer inspiration.

To nobody's surprise, the show ended with Ryder's greatest hit "Devil With the Blue Dress/Good Golly Miss Molly" in which original Wheels drummer Johnny Bodagik pounded out bliss with a snare roll. Ryder also helped out with the percussive chores throughout the night, shaking a mean tambourine and banging a cowbell with finesse.

As far as the rest of the band went, things could've been better. Keyboardist Billy Cernets played a Roland synthesizer which failed to achieve that big organ sound which makes rhythm and blues so powerful, and bassist David Suhi simply played to loud, which muddied the sound even further. At some points Mitch's vocal nuances were simply overwhelmed by a quasi-mettalic wall of sound reminiscent of the worst of Ryder's imitators. On the plus side, the whole group pulled out impressive back-up vocals. Simple phrases like "shake" and "it's all right" are standard rock and roll exclamations, but rarely have they been shouted with such authority. All in all, the man from Motown provided a solid evening's entertainment, and that's not so bad at all.

The opening act, King Cod and the Blues Sharks, was a somewhat sleazy combo who sounded like a watered down Allman Brothers. While sleaze is certainly no drawback in a blues band, they left this reviewer unmoved. However, a cover of the late Stevie Ray Vaughan's "Cold Shot" was a lot of fun.

The Horse Flies will play at Pearl Street tonight. The group, who have been termed as "new wave folkniks," are touring in support of their latest album Gravity Dance. The 21-and-over show will start at 8 p.m.

Tom Holder for a change

By SARAH ELLIOTT
Collegian Correspondent

Do you urge for a change of pace in your daily hectic schedule of classes piled up one on top of another? One solution to this problem is to visit the latest display of paintings by Tom Holder at the Herter Art Gallery. Up until April 14, anyone can simply drop in for a few minutes for a fascinating break in their day.

Upon first entering Holder's overwhelmingly colorful display of paintings, you suddenly find yourself picked up and forced into a whirlwind of precisely painted and measured geometric shapes. As you slowly walk anticlockwise around the room, you are gradually and eloquently merged into paintings of a far more painterly style continuing an enigmatic theme. A sense of movement is accentuated through the skillful application of vibrant shades of oranges, electric blues rich reds, regal purples and a wide range of other brilliant colors allowing the mind to be almost entirely overcome by the power of each painting, providing a wonderful retreat into a magical atmosphere.

Not only is Holder's incredible sense of color characteristic of his art but so are his inventive borders. Rarely are his paintings simply a rectangle on a square. Rather they represent another means of emphasizing the geometry and liveliness of his subject matter.

Herter Art Gallery is waiting for you to step inside and allow your imagination to step outside of the hustle and bustle of a typical UMass schedule. So remember not to miss this free trip through the enlightening art of Tom Holder before it's too late.

A retrospective look at John Coltrane's life

By JAMES MOLESWORTH
Collegian Staff

September 23, 1926, John Williams Coltrane was born. By the time he was in his early twenties, he was beginning to make some noise in the music world. A few years later he was playing with the great Miles Davis Group of the 50s, and in 1957 he underwent a great spiritual change. He became deeply religious, a vegetarian, did not drink or use drugs, in fact his only "vice" was the occasional cigar or pipe. During the early and middle 60s, Trane forced the edge of the envelope of the jazz world. He sent the music in countless new directions while at the same time influencing saxophonists from Cannonball Adderly to Pharoah Sanders. Yet these are all only brief in highlights in the life of a man whose influence was not only felt in music, but in the people who played with him and heard him play. Of all these "highlights," the one that perhaps is most important is his music of the 60s.

"During the year 1957, I experience, by the grace of God, a spiritual awakening which was to lead me to a richer, fuller, more productive life. At that time, in gratitude, I humbly asked to be given the means and priviledge to make happy through music."

— John Coltrane.

Music is an understatement. African-American music is unique, not only because of its reliance on improvisation, nor because it is America's only truly indigenous art form, but because of its function. All "jazz" music serves a purpose, every single note. The music was spawned out of wretched conditions imposed on the African-American during slavery. A time which many would not have been able to survive were it not for the music which they sang and created while being forced from their homeland to the infamous slave trading ports of America.

The Trane is the embodiment of African-American music. While the music of the 18th and 19th centuries served to help ease the suffering of the people, Trane's music also served a purpose. It provided a haven to a people whose destiny was changing at a furious rate. It still does. Trane's music is functional, for the human spirit, much the way the early spirituals work songs were.

True, there are others who make fine examples of the greatness of African-Americans music. Lester Young, who after spending several debilitating months in the army in 1944, was able to play notes that weigh even the lightest of hearts. Yet during Young's time, the status of the African-American remained steadfastly despondent Trane lived and played though one of the most tumultuous times in the history of the African-American, the Civil Rights movement of the 60s.

As with Lester Young, I also tip my hat with great reverence to people like Max Roach, Dizzy Gillespie, Archie Shepp, Duke Ellington, Sarah Vaughn, who fought an unjust system by remaining graceful and elegant within an ugly and inhospitable world. And also to the people like Charles Mingus, Charlie Parker and Bud Powell, who fought the system by refusing to deal with its ugliness in any way. The list of those who have contributed to the music is endless, but the one name that you must always return to is that of John William Coltrane.

Most people call Trane's music, "free jazz" does not refer to the technical aspect of his music — the chord progressions, the triads, the harmonic structure. What is "free" about Trane's music is the spirit of it. The ability of one to find solace in it.

In today's world of increased violence, and decreased support of art, cultures and the crumbling of our own infrastructure, one can still find solace in Trane's music. That is why he played it. He had feelings for all peoples of the world who were oppressed and deprived, and he told everyone about it through his horn. (One of the best examples is Coltrane's "Alabama" written for the children killed by the bombing of a black school during the 60s.)

"As time and events moved on, a period of irresolution did prevail. I entered into a phase which was contradictory to the pledge and away from the esteemed path. ." — John Coltrane.

Whatever your personal beliefs may be, there can be no denying that today's situation, however bleak, can be reversed. We must all do what we can save our world, to right ourselves, and return to the esteemed path. Then, John William Coltrane's message will finally be realized by all, and it will truly be — A LOVE SUPREME.

Art therapy

The New England Art Therapy Institute will offer a course entitled "Images of the Inner Self." The course will be taught by Dr. Guillermo Cuellar, who will teach his technique of symbol drawing, for the weekend of April 19-21 in Hatfield, Mass.

Participants will learn to find practical solutions to challenges within the symbols of their own unconscious. Applications of the technique to various personal and professional situations will also be explored.

The deadline to register is Friday, April 12. No previous art experience is necessary. Licensed social workers can earn continuing education credits.

Dr. Cuellar is an organizational development consultant, therapist and associate director of the New England Art Therapy Institute in Sunderland.

Contact the New England Art Therapy Institute, located on 216 Silver Lane in Sunderland or call (413) 665-4880.

Deviant Aphrodites peeps in on the darker side of lust

By THOMAS SCULLY
Collegian Correspondent

Deviant Aphrodites
Hampshire College
Thursday, April 4

Sex workers meet feminism and themselves in Sarah Brown's new play Deviant Aphrodites which premiered at Hampshire College last Thursday. (For all you fogies "sex workers" is the P.C. tag for prostitutes.) Part psychiatrist office, part dentist, part whore house, the nicely contained set featured a ballroom-dancing bed on which men with sexual dysfunction come to be liberated and educated by the mother earth type Vera Venus (Abby Kaplan) and her lesbian lover, the neurotic Lolita Haze (Gia V. McGinley), both overseen by the frenetic madam/clinician Sally Mars (Judy Cohen). The story breaks open when white-bread cheerleader Robin Young (Karen Sabo) comes for sex therapy to explore her lesbian tendencies which she discovered while on an acid trip with her boyfriend.

Vera Venus wants to sleep constantly; she thinks she can put her soul to sleep on the shelf while her body plays pleasure on the bed, but the repulsion she feels for the men she "repairs" cannot be repressed for ever. Lolita Haze too represses her true history and emotions about the sexual exploitation of her stepfather. A disco stripper (Amy Baxt) has unwittingly appropriated the persona of the legendary Lolita and so the "real" Lolita Haze kidnaps her and brings her back to the chamber of sin to interrogate feminine identity, sex-work ethics, and the sexual arousal some men have for "innocent" 12-year-old girls.

None of the "sex workers" are able to communicate sincerely in the ordinary way; instead they use the brilliant theatrical device of pretending to be men, female types, each other, and ultimately themselves. When Vera wants to describe her sexual fantasy she instructs Lolita, "pretend to be imaginary," because for them, as for us, sex is the imaginary. They are powerful because they are actors of the imaginary, but in order to exist as sex-workers they have themselves become imaginary, both to their clients and themselves.

Ah, but now you think the play is weird. It tries to be weird but its heart is not in its weirdness — rather it is sophisticated enough to draw dynamic characters who tend to be too safe than too subversive, more vulnerable than threatening. It's thought-provoking in the usual way and funny in the unusual way. At the heart of the piece the playwright meditates on the plight of sex-workers and women, but these personal, often poignant metaphysical revelations jar constantly with the ideological discourse that is being put forward, and the wacky, self-conscious satire which fuels most of the evening's entertainment and keeps the play just a bit over the edge.

Creating a play that would address love, sex, exploitation, gender roles, images of self and body — the whole political basket — plus existential dilemmas and the pathos of a real prostitute, is nearly impossible, though Aphrodites is a bold attempt. The script has poetry, imagination and cleverness all to its credit, but the playwright commits a cardinal sin by making her characters repeatedly state the obvious both politically and personally, when they would've done just fine by themselves.

As an ensemble and all alone all the acting is excellent, particularly considering how difficult the script was. The production, directed by Moira Cutler, struggled through several revisions and apparently provided the actors finally with a full sense of their characters' personality and mannerisms. I was often amazed at how appropriately the actors carried off some awkward moments in the script, and made what would sound geeky or obvious into something witty and sincere. The only odd part was the moody guitar player who provided cool but irrelevant musical interludes in a few transitional scenes.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19) It may pay you to stay put even if greener pastures beckon. Double-check travel arrangements to prevent snags. Your relationship with your mate gets a wonderful new lease on life.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Your reputation is on the line; be careful what you say and do. A partnership rewards you in unexpected ways. Financial pact is sound. To win friends, you must act like one.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Restrict your field of operation. Your financial interests dictate a long overdue decision. Other people are inspired by your resilience. Forge ahead with confidence.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) You can forge a very effective alliance by negotiating behind closed doors today. A private talk will be enlightening. Spending an evening with your colleagues gives you valuable insights.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Working at home will provide the environment you need to tackle complex problems. Take care of your commitments. Children need gentle but firm guidance. A perfect evening for a family get-together.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Let others take the lead at work today. The employment scene offers few problems if you do your homework. Travel is best postponed. Perform more services for yourself to economize.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) An opportunity to join forces with influential people merits prompt consideration. Avoid discussing controversial subjects at your workplace. A trip is tonight's main topic of conversation.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) Pooling your resources with those who share your goals proves lucrative. Use your ingenuity to fatten your savings account. Free-lance assignments may be the answer. A friend shares a secret.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) Domestic and work projects alike flourish in your hands. Tap into your artistic and creative talents. If you try to give directions in romance, you are in for a rough time. Retreat.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) A decision to end a business or domestic project may not be well grounded. Further investigation is in order. A romantic relationship needs more nurturing. Focus on mate's strengths.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) Other people may not live up to their promises. Progress is due solely to your own efforts. Loans may be risky and love elusive. Seek the companionship of friends or family.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) Be prepared to handle new demands from the powers that be. Stay calm; things will ease up by mid-afternoon. Avoid taking out your frustrations on your loved ones. They are on your side!

The terms include:
- a salary scale of $60,000 to $175,000, up from the present $41,000 to $105,000.
- selecting umpires for the playoffs and World Series by merit, rather than on rotation.
- an increase in the umpires' daily expense money from $169 to $185.
- three weeks vacation, up from two.

"The idea was to be sure that we could reward people for working hard and performing well," commissioner Fay Vincent said of the way umpires will be picked for the postseason.

Richie Phillips, head of the umpires' association, said umpires had planned to picket yesterday in Cincinnati, New York and Texas.

At Riverfront Stadium, where the World Series champion Cincinnati Reds played Houston in the traditional NL opener, the replacement crew consisted of home plate umpire Frank Ballino, an NCAA umpire from Lexington, Ky.; Randy Bruns, a former minor-league ump from Waverly, Iowa; John Floras, another former minor-leaguer from Treasure Island, Fla.; and Dick Urlage, an NCAA ump from nearby Fort Thomas, Ky.

In Detroit, where the New York Yankees played the Tigers in the first game of the season, former American League umpire Bill Deegan was to work behind the plate.

The sides began closing in on a deal Friday, but talks broke down shortly before 3 a.m. Saturday over what management negotiator Robert Kheel said was an ultimatum on money from Richie Phillips, head of the umpires association.

At the time, Phillips said the sides were approximately $750,000 apart, but Kheel said he believed the difference was twice that. Throughout Sunday night the differences narrowed.

"We were all working hard," Vincent said. "It's always the last night."

The leagues had put amateur umpires in place to work the final days of exhibition games. The amateurs also had been assigned to work yesterday's openers.

The relationship between the major leagues and their umpires has been strained in recent years, leading to work stoppages in 1978, 1979, 1984 and 1990.

MLB umpires settle contract disputes

By RONALD BLUM
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Major league umpires and baseball reached agreement on a new contract, but it came too late for the regular umpires to work yesterday afternoon's season opener.

Instead, crews of former major league and minor league umpires, along with college umps, worked the six day games. American League spokeswoman Phyllis Merhige said a crew of current major league umpires would be in place for last night's Milwaukee at Texas game, at which President Bush is scheduled to throw out the first ball.

The leagues expected all major league umpires to resume work today.

The umpires walked out Saturday for the sixth time in 21 years following a breakdown in negotiations. But talks resumed Sunday and a settlement was signed at 12:10 p.m. EDT.

Men's crew stirs Dartmouth's wake

The JV eight boat passed the UMass varsity boat and came in 1.8 seconds behind the Wesleyan varsity boat Saturday. Pictured from the top are Laurel Collins, Kim Katzik, Lisa Maloney, Cristin Bullen, Jen Hinds, Jen Koiles, Laura Scollan, Ann Budreski and coxswain Elizabeth Harford.

The University of Massachusetts men's varsity crew team defeated Dartmouth Sunday and came home with their first victory and betting tee of the season.

Traditionally, teams bet their team t-shirts on the race and treasure their prizes.

"It was an exhilarating experience to beat the Dartmouth crew," said sophomore Keith Bourgoyne.

Sophomore Brian Jewett collected his first collegiate victory this weekend. Seniors Dave Ring, Rich Scannell, Chris Marino, Dave Schor, Jeff Vohr, Mike Rademacher and coxswain Mary Lockyer also added another shirt to their collections.

The men beat Wesleyan but lost to New Hampshire on Saturday bringing their regular season record to 2-1.

The varsity women's team lost to Wesleyan, racing an eight and a four Saturday on the Connecticut River.

The JV women's team finished 1.8 seconds behind the Wesleyan varsity crew, surpassing their own varsity crew. Senior Cristin Bullen, a three-year rower, said she felt as though her boat displayed "calm, relaxed power" throughout the race.

The team travels to Trinity college this weekend to challenge one of their long time rivals.

Men's track, field betters Williams, Springfield, UVM

By KEITH BENNETT
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's track team used its depth to defeat teams from Williams College, Springfield College and Vermont in its first meet of the season Saturday.

UMass, Williams and Springfield each won six events on the afternoon but the Minutemen scored points in 16 of the 18 events, taking some vital seconds, thirds and fourths, to win the meet with 78 points. Williams finished second with 54, Springfield was third with 45 and Vermont managed only 17 points in taking fourth.

"We showed some real good team depth in the meet," UMass head coach Ken O'Brien said. "We had 21 individual athletes score points for the team."

Joe Kourafas led the team in the field events with two victories. Kourafas won the high jump with a clearance of 6 feet, 4 inches and the long jump with a distance of 21-8.

Jeff Peterson and Dave Borges each placed in three events for UMass. Peterson took second in the discus (130-1), second in the shot put (42-6 1/2) and third in the triple jump (41-1 1/2). Borges placed second in the long jump (20-4), third in the pole vault (13-0) and fourth in the high jump (6-0).

Luke Simpson and Nelson Simao rounded out field event scoring for the Minutemen. Simpson took second in the hammer throw with a distance of 145-3 and third in the discus with a throw of 126-02. Simao threw the shot put 41-10 for third place.

In the running events, Kevin Walters won the 100-meter dash in 11.1 seconds and placed second in the 200 in 22.2.

Senior Gerry Squires led the Minutemen in sweeping the first three places in the 1,500 with a victory in 3:56.3. Matt Simon finished just .5 seconds behind Squires in second place and freshman John Raach took third in 3:57.2.

The Minutemen also dominated the 800-meter, taking first, second and fourth places. Steve Brown won the race in 1:55.8. Bill Wallace followed Brown in 1:57.2 and sophomore Ben Nichols took fourth in 1:58.5.

Senior Jon Corso won the 5,000 with a time of 15:01 and teammate Pat Ryan finished fourth in 15:19.

Senior Mike Grey finished third in the 400 in 50.4.

Other athletes scoring for the Minutemen were Jeff White and Paul Doyle in the 110 hurdles. White placed second in 15.6 and Doyle was fourth in 16.0. Doyle also placed second in the 400 hurdles in 57.9. He was followed in that event by Arthur Piccolo in third (59.5) and Patrick Lockett in fourth (60.6).

The next meet for the Minutemen is April 13 against Rhode Island.

Softball (12-7) to host Boston College

By THOMAS A. GEORGE
Collegian Correspondent

Standing atop the Atlantic 10, the University of Massachusetts softball team is on a tear. The swingers stand up against the Boston College Eagles at 3 p.m. today on Totman Field for a doubleheader.

BC stands at 12-3, and is ranked fourth in the region. In last year's match up, the teams split wins.

"I'm expecting a tough time tomorrow," said head coach Elaine Sortino. "[The UConn pitching staff] has decent speed and ball movement."

Likely pitchers for BC will be sophomores Tanya Saunders, Patricia Murray and Kelli Weaver.

Taking the mound for UMass will be the dynamic duo of Holly Aprile and Darlene Claffey. The two have conspired on the nine-game streak that has boosted the UMass record to 12-7 overall.

Claffey was named Atlantic-10 Pitcher of the Week, after last week's dual no-hitter and a third shutout performance. Moving to a 6-3 record, Claffey gave up only two hits in 18 innings, striking out 18. Her ERA stands at an impressive 1.84.

All is not well for the sophomore from Ledyard, Conn. Claffey has developed a 'lump' in her throat but x-rays fail to show any sort of growth. She has what feels like "something caught in her throat," according to Sortino. When Claffey becomes winded, the lump presents a respiratory hinderance, Sortino said.

"She's a very tight-mouthed kid," Sortino said. "When she says something hurts, you know something is wrong."

Jen Miller, second baseman from Mendham, N.J., was also named to the A-10 honors list as Player of the Week. In the six games last week, Miller 11 hits in 15 at bats, two homers, five RBIs, and one stolen base. On the field, she had 16 put-outs, seven assists and no errors.

This doubleheader is the end of a fruitful homestand for the Minutewomen. The show goes on the road for a 10-game swing, including a six-game A-10 spin. The next 13 days will see the team play 14 games.

Sox turn Jay blue on opening day

Jack Clark, in his Red Sox debut, hit a grand slam in the third inning off Dave Steib as Boston walked to a 6-2 victory in Toronto on opening day yesterday.

TORONTO (AP) — Roger Clemens made it to opening day and made it worthwhile. He didn't have any problems with the substitute umpires or the Toronto Blue Jays.

Clemens, pitching while his suspension is delayed, allowed one run in eight innings and Jack Clark hit at grand slam in his first game with the Red Sox as Boston beat Toronto 6-2 yesterday.

Clemens, 10-4 lifetime against Toronto, allowed six hits, struck out six and walked none. The last time he took the mound for real, he was ejected in Game 4 of the American League playoffs, drawing a five-game suspension and $10,000 fine that is still being appealed.

Clark, signed as a free agent in December for $8.7 million over three years, hit his eighth career grand slam in the third inning off Dave Steib. The home run, on a 0-2 pitch, snapped a 1-1 tie and was Clark's first grand slam since Sept. 4, 1989, off Atlanta's Mark Eichhorn.

Tony Pena opened the inning with a double and went to third on Tim Neahring's sacrifice. Steib loaded the bases with walks to Wade Boggs and Jody Reed and Mike Greenwell's single tied the game.

Clark followed with only the second grand slam allowed by Steib, who gave up one to Jim Rice on Aug. 20, 1983 at Fenway Park.

John Higgins, a former minor leage umpire, worked behind home plate in place of the regulars, who couldn't make it to Toronto fast enough following Monday's settlement.

Steib, 11-4 on opening day, allowed five runs and four hits in five innings, struck out two and walked two.

Mookie Wilson's sacrifice fly gave the Blue jays a 1-0 lead in the second inning and Joe Carter, playing his first game with Toronto following an offseason trade from San Diego, homered off Jeff Gray in the ninth.

Ellis Burks added a RBI double in the eighth inning for Boston off Al Leiter.

The game drew 50,114 fans, the second-largest crowd to see a baseball game in SkyDome and the 60th straight sellout. The Blue Jays drew 50,286 for the third game of the 1989 playoffs.

Minutemen host UConn Huskies

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

The Harvard baseball team, bolstered by 14 runs in the first four innings and five home runs, earned a split with the University of Massachusetts, taking the second game 15-10.

The loss gave UMass a 2-4 mark for the weekend and an 8-15-1 overall record coming into today's contest with the University of Connecticut (Earl Lorden Field, 3:30 p.m.).

The Huskies squeaked out a rare tie with the Minutemen on April 30, benefiting from a two-out error to deadlock the score at 6-6 just before darkness fell.

Since that time, the Huskies fortunes have paralleled UMass', as both teams have won only two games since.

In their most recent effort, UConn was swept by Big East Conference rival Seton Hall.

Left-hander John Sammarco will start on the mound for the Minutemen. Sammarco has not figured in a decision as of yet this season, but posesses good velocity on his fastball.

The 9-13-1 Huskies did not announce a starting pitcher by press time.

UMass reliever Ron Villone has gotten rave reviews from Minuteman coach Mike Stone for his efforts out of the bullpen.

"Ronnie's done a great job for us, no question about that," said Stone of the 6-foot-3 football tight end turned stopper. "He's always ready — he's a big, strong guy." Villone leads the team in appearances with 11.

Profs to plan furlough protests

By MARC ELLIOTT
Collegian Staff

Many University classes may be cancelled next week by professors angry with public higher education cuts, as the April 12 deadline approaches for faculty and staff to decide which days, if any, they will skip as part of Gov. Welds's furlough plan.

All state workers who earn more than $20,000 must take two to 15 unpaid furlough days between April 16 and June 22, according to a state law passed last month by the state legislature to cope with the state's fiscal crisis.

University employees were sent official notification of the furlough on Monday. That same day, an anonymous group of professors posted flyers across campus encouraging both faculty and staff at the University to take their furlough days all at the same time starting April 16 to show the state they will not take the destruction of UMass "lying down."

"What a lot of faculty feel is that the best option to take is our legal option not to work and to coordinate our not working and all take our days at the same time to make a strong statement that education is important and that when education doesn't happen it really hurts," said Sara Lennox, a professor in the German department.

Professors have two options for dealing with the furlough: either refusing to work during non-paid furlough days or work and receive a lump sum payment for the furlough days when leaving their state job.

Unlike other state employees, professors do not have vacation days and cannot choose a state-proposed third option which is to earn bonus vacation days for each furlough day worked.

The union representing the University's faculty and librarians — the Massachusetts Society of Professors — is joining other unions across the state in filing charges against the state for its implementation of the furlough plan, MSP President John Cole said.

"The furlough and the failure to recommend funding for state employee contracts violates both the United States' and Massachusetts' constitutions," Cole said. "So the Massachusetts Society of Professors and the other unions representing state employees initiated law suits on Friday."

The MSP is expected to decide what additional actions they plan to take in responding to Gov. Weld's furlough program, Cole said. Participation in the rumored collective furlough of faculty being organized by an anonymous group of professors for next week will probably be discussed as well.

"We'll be considering a variety of actions including a letter-writing campaign to urge the parents of students to write their legislators to restore funding for higher education and long term political action."

Weld has not yet responded to the the Board of Regents of Higher Education's request to declare the faculty "essential and critical" which would prevent them from legally choosing not to work during the furlough, but the governor is expected to make a decision sometime today.

The Regents asked Weld to classify the professors as essential personnel at the end of last week claiming that if professors cancelled classes' in the middle of the semester, it "would ruin the educational process," said Press Spokesperson Terry Zoulas.

A letter from Provost Richard O'Brien is to be sent to

Gagne President, Newnan Trustee

By ALEX DERING
Collegian Staff

The administration's refusal to recognize the April 9 elections as valid did not prevent 1,704 students from casting their votes yesterday. David Gagne won the office of Student President and Kevin Newnan won the office of Student Trustee.

David Gagne's election to the office of Student President came as no surprise as he was the only candidate on the ballot for that position. He won with 1,152 votes.

"Considering all the controversy surrounding this election, the student turnout was great," said Gagne. "If the administration is as pro-student as it claims to be, they will have to recognize these elections."

Gagne thanked Bob Monaghan, his campaign manager for, ". . . all his help. And all the students who voted, regardless of how they voted."

In the race for Student Trustee, Kevin Newnan defeated Ken Parker by over 500 votes, winning with 985 votes.

"The students have elected two student leaders," said Newnan. "Given the small field of candidates and the attempts by some to invalidate the election, the turnout was fantastic."

Newnan said the relatively high voter turnout of 10.8 percent should serve as proof to the administration that "the students wanted this election despite what the administration said."

Newnan also thanked "all the students who took the time to exercise their right to choose their own student leaders and have elections without administrative interference. I was elected by the students in an election unanimously set by elected student leaders, so the administration's non-recognition is a farce."

The 1,704 ballots cast represent a 10.8 percent voter turnout for this election. Of those votes, 156 could not be counted last night because they could not be validated. Those votes will be checked today and added to the results.

The average turnout for the Student President/Student Trustee election has averaged between 10 and 13 percent in the past few years, according to Jon Aronson, a member of Governmental Affairs.

"With all the adversity from the administration, this was an exceptionally strong turnout," he said.

In February, the administration, in response to requests by student leaders, said they would restructure student government; one of the changes the administration suggested was postponing elections until May and then only allowing students to elect a student president.

Student Elections Coordinator Stephen McAfee, who oversaw the tallying of the election results agreed the turnout for the election was a strong one.

"It was good to see student apathy diminish during this election," he said.

Both Aronson and McAfee agreed that based on the turnout, the refusal of the administration to recognize the results of this election would be a sign ". . . that [the administration] is ignoring the students."

"Despite all the efforts of the administration and the 'gang of five' to invalidate these elections we were confident the student body would respond by producing a significant turnout," they said.

Ratification of the Student President/Student Trustee election will take place tonight at the Student Senate meeting, providing there is a two-thirds majority present.

The results of the Board of Governors election, which was held at the same time as the Student President/Student Trustee elections, were not available at press time.

Real estate business on the rise

BOSTON (AP) — Despite fears that the savings and loan crisis will cripple its future, the Federal Home Loan Bank System is well capitalized and stands ready to help finance a housing rebound, a government official said yesterday.

Daniel F. Evans Jr., who last year became chairperson of the Federal Housing Finance Board, spoke to a conference of bank officers sponsored by the National Council of Savings Institutions.

Much of the two-day conference focused on the depressed real estate market that has caused problem loans for banks, especially in the Northeast. But many of those attending the conference said the decline appears to have hit bottom, and real estate business has been brisk in recent weeks.

"People are thinking that prices are as good as they're ever going to get," said Nadine Salley, senior loan officer for Merrimack County Savings Bank in Concord, N.H. "And there's a lot of penned up demand."

Evans also said he believes the housing market has ended its plunge and home values should start rising later this year similar to previous times when the nation emerged from a recession.

Evans also said the Federal Home Loan Bank System has the cash available to supply money for home loans when the rebound occurs. The system, which operates through regional banks, provides capital to small savings institutions which then loan the money for homes.

Member institutions buy stock in the system and receive dividends, which can represent a significant amount of their profits.

But the Home Loan Bank System lost many of its members during the collapse of the savings and loan industry, creating the need to attract more institutions, experts say.

At the same time, the government drained profits from the system to help pay for the massive savings and loan bailout. In addition the system will be forced to contribute another $300 million annually.

Amherst says 'yes' to keeping Housing Board

The Amherst Town Meeting Monday night voted to retain the Housing Review Board as it is currently structured.

The Review Board, established in 1985, accepts petitions from tenants and makes decisions about the fairness of the rent level.

Dick Gold, Amherst resident who spoke in favor of the motion to eliminate the Review Board, said the board handled too few cases to justify its existence.

Gold claimed that the board only reviewed four cases last year, and two of those cases were against renters who had not raised their rent in 10 years.

Those in favor of keeping the board said that the Town Meeting itself had established the board, which has one staff member who does all of its clerical work.

The yearly budget of the Rent board is $10,150 which goes toward salary and supplies, as well as the cost of legal expenses.

Amherst's high demand for rental housing was also cited as an extenuating circumstance for keeping the Review Board, as any other system of dealing with renter complaints would cost the city more money than the system currently in place.

Gender distinctions cited in Japanese language

By ELIZABETH BUTTS
Collegian Correspondent

NORTHAMPTON — There is a male and female language within the Japanese language as a whole, journalist Kittredge Cherry told a crowd of over 40 people last night at Smith College.

In a lecture called "Japanese Language and Women," Cherry said the two versions of the Japanese language, male and female, are each strongly defined and distinctly different.

The language used by women has a different intonation, vocabulary and verb forms than that spoken by men, she said.

The female language has enabled women to establish something distinctly their own, exclusive of men, she said.

The sun, in Japanese mythology, is female, Cherry said. This represents a matriarchal heritage, whereas in Western mythology, the sun is male, representing a patriarchal heritage.

At the same time, however, this difference in language between men and women aids in maintaining a patriarchal and sexist culture, she said.

Cherry said, however, that Japanese women may derive strength from their culture and from a history which is matriarchal.

Japanese women have "a psychological independence that I did not experience so much in [women in] the United States," she said.

"We tend to look at [people from other cultures] as the exotic alien and not look deeper," Cherry said.

The stereotypical ideas that Americans often associate with Japanese women are those of the exotic geisha and the submissive housewife, she said.

"The reality is much more complex than that," she said.

Similarly, Cherry said that language reflects the complexity of a culture.

"Language is like a map. It is a representation of reality, not the reality itself," said Cherry. "The things we choose to give a name to shape what we talk about and think about."

"We all contribute to the making of the map [language], but men have more power to determine what is named," she said.

Cherry is a journalist and is the author of Womansword: What Japanese Words Say About Women.

Credit card fraud under investigation

University police said yesterday they are investigating the unauthorized use of a UMass student's credit card after she received a bill for services she did not purchase.

School teaches kids to be tri-lingual

LOWELL (AP) — An experimental preschool here has the same frenetic bustle and noise of any classroom full of young children, but the shouts and squeals are heard in three languages.

Brian Scannel, 5, counts to 20 in Khmer almost as easily as he does in English. When she isn't conversing in Spanish and English, Puerto Rican native Amarilis Sanabria, also 5, delights in teaching her classmates parts of the human body in Khmer.

And when 4-year old Sok Pheap Tep from Cambodia proudly displays a construction paper creation to his teacher, he says, in tentative English, "It's a yellow kite."

Defying the wisdom of those who would have children learn only in English, educators opened the school of 40 White, Cambodian and Hispanic children last fall with a curriculum taught in English, Khmer and Spanish.

Eventually they hope to expand to the fourth grade, teaching up to 250 students. If the program, headquartered at the University of Lowell succeeds, teachers hope it will provide a model for similar programs nationwide.

"We're not denying the realities of children needing to know English," said Libby Chiu, the school's director. "But we're not going to let that reality overwhelm a child's natural capacity to learn more than one language."

The Demonstration School, as it is called, was created to fill a void in this old mill city, where 25,000 Southeast Asian immigrants, mostly Cambodians, have settled in the past 10 years.

Throughout the 1980s Asian children, many speaking little English, filled Lowell's classrooms, and the school system wasn't ready.

■ professors protest furloughs

faculty today asking professors to choose the deferred payment option for the sake of students, but also asked that department chairpeople not interfere should professors choose not to work next week.

"The campus administration prefers they take their furlough deferred payment because it minimizes the impact on the students," O'Brien said. "But [the letter] also tells chairmen of the departments that if the faculty wish to select the no work no pay option on April 16, that they do not object."

The idea to get the faculty to take their furlough days all at the same time originated at an MSP meeting two weeks ago, Lennox said.

"There were over 200 people there and there was a very strong consensus that this was the right thing to do," said Lennox. "That we should all take our furloughs together and do that as a statement to the state of Massachusetts that we support higher education and we need their support."

An unofficial vote taken at an English department meeting yesterday showed a strong sentiment among the majority of the 30 professors present in favor of a united furlough effort, according to English Professor Jules Chametzky.

"An even greater majority was in favor of a two day collective furlough on the 17 and 18," he said.

The Faculty Federation, the faculty union for Southeastern Massachusetts University in South Dartmouth, has threatened to not teach for two weeks and try to shut down the school to protest the furloughs, said the SMU Torch's Editor Kenneth Souza. The SMU administration says that the action would be considered a strike and warn teachers not to participate.

The Graduate Student Senate unanimously decided last night to support the faculty "in their fight against the furlough program."

The MSP will write letters to the parents of students explaining the trouble the University is in and urging them to write to their state representatives, according to MSP Secretary Jeremiah Allen.

Allen, who plans to work through the furlough, said that the letters will be read to students in lecture and if the students want the letter sent to their parents they can write in their parent's address on envelopes that will be handed out.

Allen emphasized the fact that the professors were funding the letter campaign totally without state funds.

"We're concerned about what's happening to this University," he said. "It's not just these furloughs, which was kind of the last straw, we've been getting cut all year and people are getting fed up and leaving. Furthermore, they are not getting replaced so students' educations are suffering."

Pulitzer prize winners announced

NEW YORK (AP) — The Washington Post and The New York Times each won two awards as the 1991 Pulitzer Prizes for journalism were announced yesterday.

The gold medal for public service went to the Des Moines (Iowa) Register for a story about a rape victim who publicly identified herself and discussed the effect of the ordeal on her life. The story, by reporter Jane Schorer, prompted widespread debate about traditional media practice of not identifying rape victims.

The spot news reporting Pulitzer went to the staff of The Miami Herald for stories about a local cult leader and his followers' links to several killings.

Greg Marinovich of The Associated Press won the Pulitzer for spot news photography for pictures showing supporters of South Africa's African National Congress killing a man they believed was a Zulu spy. It is the 35th Pulitzer for the AP.

"I don't believe it," Marinovich said when informed he had won.

"I'm extremely pleased. I never thought I'd be vaguely involved in it, let alone win it. It's a wonderful compliment."

The Washington Post's two prizes went to Caryle Murphy in the international reporting category for her stories filed from occupied Kuwait, and to Jim Hoagland in the commentary category for his columns on events leading up to the Gulf War and the political problems of Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev. The Post has now won 23 Pulitzers.

Rape charge shocks friends of William Kennedy Smith

WASHINGTON (AP) — Willie Smith spent his first year at Georgetown Medical School so quietly that one friend said, "No one even knew he was a Kennedy."

"He's the least political of all of them," said classmate Kathleen Albrecht. "He doesn't flaunt the fact that he is a Kennedy at all."

But that cloak of anonymity was lifted last week when police in Palm Beach, Fla., named William Kennedy Smith a suspect in an alleged rape on the beach outside the Kennedy family compound.

Smith, 30, is in seclusion, refusing to communicate with investigators beyond giving them a sample of his hair and blood.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass), who was at the Florida family compound with his son, Rhode Island state Rep. Patrick Kennedy, and Smith, returned to the Senate yesterday clear of any suspicion he was involved but, once again, under the cloud of scandal.

"It's obviously been a troublesome time, but that's why I hope we get all the facts out and I'm satisfied that when they are that this will have a different connotation," Kennedy said at a news briefing in his office.

Kennedy had a full schedule of meetings hearings and various public appearances this week as the Senate returned from the Easter recess. He said of the investigation, "There's nothing more I can do. We've cooperated in every possible way."

Through a week-long flurry of publicity, Smith issued only one written statement in his own defense: "Any suggestion that I was involved in any offense is erroneous."

Meanwhile Smith is avoiding his home in the fashionable Georgetown neighborhood in Washington but still reports for a required hospital internship according to friends.

"That's why this is so hard on him," one classmate said.

Friends and fellow students describe Smith as a quiet, funny hard-working dedicated to helping the underprivileged and incapable of committing rape.

The Georgetown University telephone directory lists Smith as William K. Smith, leaving little clue that he is the son of Stephen Smith and Jean Kennedy Smith, sister of Edward Kennedy and the late President Kennedy.

The elder Smith was considered the guardian of the Kennedy family name. A suave New York businessman, it was Smith to whom Edward Kennedy turned to in 1969 after the Chappaquiddick incident in which the senator failed to report for several hours the drowning of Mary Jo Kopechne in his car.

William Smith apparently harbored no political aspirations of his own, friends say. But in 1980 he took a year off from Duke University to work for his Uncle Edward's presidential campaign.

"He was a liberal progressive Democrat, very fond of the family philosophy and proud of his uncle," said Mark Mirkin, Smith's college roommate and now an attorney in West Palm Beach, Fla.

Other than the occasional game of tennis, Smith had only a passing interest in sports. Mirkin recalled bringing Smith along to basketball games at Duke, a pastime closer to religion for many students at the North Carolina campus.

After an education that included the best prep schools in New York and Connecticut and then Duke, Smith went to Wall Street to work at a brokerage firm. That lasted only briefly, and Smith followed his passion for travel. He took a train trip across China, the Soviet Union and Europe and spent enough time in China to become fluent in the language, Albrecht said.

U.S. Secretary of State James Baker speaks with a Kurdish refugee during a brief visit Monday to the Iraqi border camp where tens of thousands of refugees are camped.

Democrats push for aid to Kurdish rebels in Iraq

By WALTER R. MEARS
Associated Press Special Correspondent

WASHINGTON (AP) — Among the doves of winter, some hawkish tendencies are showing this spring in Democratic proposals for U.S. protection of Iraqi rebel factions crushed by Saddam Hussein's forces.

Interventionist advice has come from leading congressional opponents to the resolution that authorized President Bush to wage the Persian Gulf War in the first place.

The military counsel, centered on calls for the use of U.S. air power to prevent Iraqi helicopters from attacking rebels, comes after the fact — the uprising had already been crushed. And it suggests a limited American role.

Nevertheless, it's a topic that could one day be used in Democratic attempts to deflect the Republican war issue. In the civil strife and Kurdish refugee crisis that have followed the war, Democrats who voted against the use of force could find basis for rebuttal.

At this point, the Republican administration sounds defensive. Bush insists that he did not incite rebellion with hints of American backing, and then leave the rebels to be destroyed by Saddam.

"I never in any way implied that the United States was going to use force" to overthrow the Baghdad regime, the President said.

The administration says the Iraqi strife that flared in the Kurdish north and the Shiite Muslim south, and the refugees now fleeing the country as a result, are problems to be dealt with by the United Nations.

Bush, Secretary of State James A. Baker III and Brent Scowcroft, the White House national security adviser, have said repeatedly that U.S. forces are not going to be involved in the Iraqi strife. Baker said that would put them on "the slippery slope of being sucked into a civil war." Scowcroft said it would lead into morass.

A successor government installed with Western military backing would be likely to survive long without it.

Democratic skeptics about Bush's January war policy did raise some prophetic questions in advance, saying that the aftermath in Iraq could be chaos and that there should be U.S. plans to deal with that contingency.

But in peace or war, the president still holds the initiative abroad, and he used it to order the airlift of food and supplies to Kurdish refugees who have fled into the mountains in northern Iraq.

That pre-empted the humanitarian argument likely to be heard in Congress, reconvening today after a two-week Easter recess. It leaves the argument over whether Bush invited the uprising with his wartime call for the overthrow of Saddam.

Sen. Albert Gore Jr. (D-Tenn.), a possible 1992 presidential challenger, says the rebels "responded to our request" in trying to topple Saddam and should have had protection at least against helicopters attacks.

Activists clash over whether to test rapists for AIDS

By CHRIS TORCIA
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — Most medical experts agree the risk of getting AIDS from a rape is small, but tell that to someone like Diana.

Diana was raped in 1988, and her assailant was arrested. Her horror was magnified when the man, an intravenous drug user, died of AIDS in prison.

"I know that there was and is a real threat to me," she said. "He didn't kill me that night, but he could still murder me today even though he's dead."

She is not alone in her fears.

"It's a double whammy," said Robin Einbinder, assistant director of the rape program at New York's Mount Sinai Medical Center. "You get raped and you're first reaction is, 'Oh my God, that person probably has AIDS.'"

The second reaction, in cases where a suspect is arrested, is often: "Can this man be tested for AIDS against his will?" And the answer to that question is one that is being grappled with the state legislatures, by doctors and rape counselors across the nation.

"A lot of women are bringing it up," said Sharon Vardatira, director of the Boston Area Rape Crisis Center. "It's clearly a become a really hot topic."

Some who are opposed to this testing say the money is better spent on treatment and counseling, while others say testing is a violation of the suspect's civil liberties. But supporters say early results would ease tension and let victims decide whether to undergo AIDS treatments.

The FBI said 94,500 rapes were reported in 1989, the last year for which figures are available. No one knows how many rapes go unreported, but the Bureau of Justice Statistics estimated there were 135,000 rapes that year.

Statistics on how many people get AIDS from rape are rare, partly because it is difficult to link transmissions of the virus to a single exposure.

The virus cannot be detected in a blood test until at least several months after exposure. So an AIDS test right after an assault would show the victim's HIV status before the rape, but not whether transmission occurred because of the assault.

Similarly, a positive test of a rapist does not always prove the suspect was responsible for passing on the virus.

"There is no medical justification that testing the defendant would be useful," said Liz Cooper, staff counsel of the AIDS Project of the American Civil Liberties Union in New York. "Even if he tests negative, it may be that he himself is in a window period, and he is infected."

Many states have decided that the victim has the right to know whether the attacker carries the virus. At least 22 states, including Florida, Illinois, and California, mandate testing of convicted sex offenders.

"This is information that is valuable and useful to the victim and it's something the victim felt is very important to have," said Pat Gleason, Florida's assistant attorney general. "Any medical questions that might be there the answers are being made available."

But the Washington legislature is considering taking a step farther. A bill to allow testing of suspects charged with rape has passed in the Washington House and is waiting action in the Senate.

If they go out, we should go with them

The buzzword has come down: job action.

The faculty and staff have had enough — besides not getting cost of living raises, or any raises in centuries, they are now expected to take a furlough — work without pay.

All of the people that work on this campus — with the exception of the administration — belong to some union or another.

Gayle Long

They work hard to educate, feed, clean up and provide other services (public safety, health care, mental services and a slew of other things) the students at this University — you and me and the rest of us.

Like all other people in unions across the country and in the world, they sign a contract every few years, to insure the quality of their work life — pay, benefits, vacation — all the good things in life. They sign this contract, expecting to go to work each day — and believe it or not get paid for it.

These people take good care of us, and now they need something back. Our support.

HERE ARE THE FACTS:

Gov. Weld has said he has to pay the secretaries in his cabinet $85,000 — he promised them. Gee, the governor has seemed to forget he has made a promise with all of the other employees in the state too. THESE PROMISES ARE CALLED CONTRACTS.

I feel bad for our governor — he's going to be labeled a liar and a cheat. Too bad for a carrot-top with such a nice smile.

The contracts the state has signed with the unions is legal and binding. He should have thought of that instead of promising state funds to people who will be primarily "yes-men," to his every whim.

The contracts the union signed were in good faith, and if the workers are willing to work, the government has to be willing to pay. NO MONEY FOR SERVICES RENDERED? Give me a break.

I know if I were working for free, though my wages are far from extravagant, I'd be out the door.

We have such a distinguished and prominent staff in the hundreds of majors and departments on this campus. They are going to leave if they aren't getting paid. Professors, graduate students, librarians, engineers, administrators — they're all bailing out. DOESN'T THIS TELL US SOMETHING?

The unions on this campus are scared — if the governor can institute a furlough every time the budget is in trouble, when does it end, they argue. The governor will say this is a one-time thing, but the unions are leery of this "one big happy family" talk.

Who can be happy when the kids are hungry, the telephone has been shut off and the bills are stacking up to Kingdom Come?

The younger faculty at this college, and the new people who are anxious to promote the great University we attend, are going to stick around if the landlord evicts them. I doubt the landlord will care about a furlough.

Let's face it, the furlough, in the words of one of my professors, is the beginning of the "dismembering of the University." I couldn't agree more.

You must remember, of course, who this dismembering will affect — US. Employers will think our degrees aren't worth the toilet paper they'll be printed on.

Support the staff and the faculty in their actions. They are what makes us adults and professionals. They deserve our support.

We need to be a community again

Ally Appreciation Day — the day the lesbian, bisexual and gay community pays homage to those heterosexuals who have gone above and beyond the call of duty in supporting their homosexual counterparts.

Or was it?

Consider this: Friday night was the Ally Appreciation Day sponsored by the Lesbian, Bisexual and Gay Alliance. With this in mind I decided to invite some straight friends who had never been to a gay dance, thinking this would be a good introduction to the UMass gay community.

I was wrong in a big way.

Chris Muther

After dancing for a while, two of my friends decided they wanted a drink from the bar. I told them I would stay on the dance floor.

Thirty minutes later they returned to the dance floor — enraged — and no longer wearing their pink and blue buttons that said "ALLY" across them.

They told me they went to the bar, bought a drink and sat down and started to smoke. At the table in front of them sat a group of gay and bisexual men.

Unknown to my friends, they were sitting in a no-smoking section. One of the gay men at the adjacent table informed the bartender that the women sitting nearby were smoking. The bartender told the women to put out their cigarettes, and they did.

Immediately afterwards, one of the gay men lit a cigarette, and glared over at my friends, smiling. My friends then informed the bartender that these men were smoking and told him it was not fair they could not smoke and these men could.

At this point, the gay and bisexual men were downright nasty to my friends. One of them looked over and chided "Na-Na-Na-Na-Na" because my friends were not allowed to smoke. They also started saying things under their breath, like "Allies, huh."

At this point, my friends had enough of this mature behavior, took off their pins and returned to the dance to inform me they were leaving.

I don't blame them. This is appreciation for supporting the gay community? These people don't deserve allies, all they deserve is a good talking to about the responsibilities of being an adult and a kick in the ass. If someone tries to help you and show support, you don't give them a hard time, you say thank you.

The gay community at UMass can be caring and helpful. But it can also be catty, immature and awful. When someone in the gay community acts poorly, it reflects badly on all of us. A lot of people outside the gay community look at us like one, big happy family, thinking we all act the same. Well guess what, we don't.

Many people outside the gay community were surprised when Jason McDonald was outed by three of his former friends and fellow gay activists. The normal reaction I heard within the gay community was "Oh, yeah — they've been talking about doing that for the past semester."

We know what it is like to be gay and oppressed. Now we have to learn how to stop oppressing ourselves and others.

Watch the cops do their thing

Well, it finally happened, and only in a land where people like David Duke have power.

Police Chief Daryl F. Gates won a court order Tuesday, allowing him to return to work temporarily. For those of you who don't know who this guy is, he's the Los Angeles Police Department's big honcho who the silent majority of decent folks want out because of the recent uncalled-for police beating of a Black motorist.

When I first saw the videotape I was appalled, as I'm sure was everyone else.

Saad Hopkins

That poor Brother could have been me, or you. Meanwhile, I kept reading about this big movement to oust the poor bastard, and I thought to myself, "Hey, this guy didn't do it. Why blame it on him? Why don't we nail it where it counts and screw the police officers who did it?" Then I realized that it is the role of the Chief of Police to assume responsibility for the behavior of his cadets.

Then I thought about how many times those same police officers, and others just like them, have committed crimes just as equally as brutal, racist, and lewd and have gotten away with it. About the tens, if not hundreds, of citizens they've abused for little to no reason. In one argument I had it was brought up that this is just a "singular incident."

"I'm from L.A., and the police don't bother me." "Yeah, but you're White, and your family doesn't live in Compton, or East L.A."

They thought about that for a while, and couldn't retract that fact.

And speaking on the issue of race, what if Gates was Black? Not to say it would happen, but it would probably be the biggest scandal since Mayor Barry. He'd be gone, if not fired on the spot along with the cadets. Thing is, I'd support that. There is no reason why he should be at his desk! If we are to teach our "judicial system" the valuable lesson that we are to be protected and not victimized, it's got to start at the top.

Come on, let's face it. We've all been harassed by the police in an unnecessary manner, regardless if we were in the wrong or right. Personally I have the ability to orally defend myself using language convincing enough to pose a threat, in which to avoid harassment by the police. But those, such as Rodney King in L.A., were the cadets' perfect target. It is exactly that which needs to cease. NWA didn't write the song "Fuck the Police" for nothing.

I'm a taxpayer. And if a chief isn't going to do the right thing and live up to his or her responsibility, then I am in more of the right to say, "Fuck them! Fuck that chief!"

"Fuck the police!"

'Frotter' exposes the 'diversity' scam at a racist institution

This University claims to be diverse in its ways. I don't see it as so. If you're a member of the Third World community it's just another racist institution. A place that is truly diverse in this case wouldn't have constant police harassment of the Third World community; the Third World students wouldn't have to fight for a place to call their own (the New Africa House) and they sure wouldn't allow the newspaper to print a racist comic strip.

What I'm referring to is the Collegian's comic strip "Frotter" by Garry Porter on Friday, April 5, 1991. What was said in this strip has riled up the Third World community, especially the Afro-Americans. To sum it up, Garry Porter through his strip, said that Blacks would never be more than custodians in the work force. In my and many other people's opinions Garry Porter is a racist and more so a coward. Instead of expressing his views straight-out, he hid behind a cartoon character with his racist remarks and hoped that most people would take it as a joke.

The shit wasn't funny.

What you have done, Garry Porter, (unwillingly of course) is open the eyes of the people who didn't want to admit that racism existed on this campus, or for that matter the world. I have no respect for you, Garry Porter.

What I, and the rest of the Third World community wants to know now is what this so-called "diverse University" and the Collegian intends to do about this. A public apology is not enough. That shit washes away faster than Tide.

First, from the Collegian we will settle for no less than:

- The editorial staff be dealt with accordingly for letting this comic strip be printed;
- And, then, a public apology.

From the University we want Garry Porter to be suspended for at least one whole semester; the reason being that he publicly insulted a whole community. If he would have said anything about the Lesbian Gay Bisexual Alliance — first of all, this would not have gotten printed in the first place. And, secondly, he would have been charged with being a "homophobe" immediately. So, charge him with racism. Show your "diversity" and prove that you're not like the rest of the world. Don't let this slide.

As for the rest of the University, believe what David Duke has said: "Blacks will rise and take over the white collar jobs" — in the very least. This country was built on the backs of the Afro-American people and the time has come for us to take back what is rightfully ours. This country owes us all (Afro-Americans) "Forty Acres and a Mule" plus interest. And, it's time to collect. So in peace or violence let the Revolution begin.

Jeff Lawrence Kennedy

The 'Frotter' flap is frivolous

Surely people have better things to do than attack Garry Porter. The cartoonist, whose "Frotter" strip appears irregularly in the Collegian, has recently been criticized for his views on both women and Afro-Americans. The first incidence of complaints against Porter was almost laughably absurd — certain mentally unbalanced individuals expressed concern that by depicting attractive women in his strip he was somehow demeaning them, or creating an unrealistic ideal for women. This latest "Frotter" flap, however, is no laughing matter. Does anyone believe that simply by discussing David Duke, Porter was condoning racism? I think not. Problems don't exist simply because people talk about them. The question of whether politics belong in the comics is too subjective to even bother with.

A careful reading of the strip in question would reveal that Porter is simply telling us we have a long way to go. Is dismissing David Duke's teachings as "racist hype" offensive?

I suggest that those persons who find "Frotter" upsetting should stick to reading "Snooky Lanson"— because whining will only get you so far.

'ZooMass' image of drinking, parties still prominent

UM alcohol use up, as restrictions increase

By DAVID MASSEY
Collegian Staff

Many anxious high school seniors scan the University of Massachusetts viewbook with awe, knowing that behind all the pretty pictures is a University that has long held the image of a major "party school."

Marred by such labels as "ZooMass," University administrators in recent years have devised stricter drinking regulations to widen the gap between two seemingly inseparable words at the University — parties and alcohol.

This University appears to be following national trends in the increased creation and expansion of alcohol education and awareness programs. However, the successes here are, at best, minimal.

Like most major universities, drinking alcoholic beverages is an accepted part of the social scene at UMass.

Most national studies report that 80 to 90 percent of college students drink. UMass studies have documented student drinking habits since 1971, discovering that the number of students who used alcohol in the past year has consistently hovered around 94 percent. The figures are in line with national trends.

But the number of UMass students who have been intoxicated once or more in the past month has slowly risen since the early 70s. From a record low of 44 percent in 1975, this number has crawled up to 75 percent in 1990, according to the latest Project PULSE survey.

In response to these statistics and the related problems that alcohol abuse often sparks — vandalism, rape and drinking and driving — University officials in 1986 created a University Alcoholic Beverages Policy that was considerably stricter than previous alcohol regulations.

In the last five years, the policy has remained the same but the approach has been changed, said Larry Moneta, associate director of Housing Services.

Moneta said the University has had difficulties enforcing the new policy. He said to make the rules more clear and consistent the "If it is seen, it is documented" rule was adopted in the residence halls two and a half years ago. Now, for example, if someone is caught with an open container in the halls, an immediate "write-up" or disciplinary action is taken.

During the last four years, the campus community has also tightened up alcohol regulations. In September 1987, the town of Amherst established bylaws that banned public drinking and "unusually" loud noises, which were often related to alcohol-related disturbances.

A new campus alcohol policy was put into effect in April 1988 which prohibited the consumption of alcohol at spring concerts and other outdoor events, including tailgate parties. Four months later, the Board of Trustees extended this new regulation to the possession and sale of alcohol at such events, sparking one of the biggest public demonstrations in UMass history, with over 2,000 students protesting the policy.

Chancellor Duffey said in a statement at the time of this policy change: "We face continuing abuse and disruption of campus life due to the unwillingness of a few students to take responsibility for their own behavior. We are determined to make clear. . . This campus will not tolerate behavior which threatens the safety of others."

Despite this tightening up of existing rules, not everybody agrees that stricter and harsher rules have helped to promote more responsible drinking.

Karen Jacobus, the coordinator of alcohol and drug education at UMass and an advocate of tough and consistent campus drinking policies, said these new rules have created a risky drinking atmosphere for the students.

Jacobus said many parties are now held off-campus and in addition, the policy has created a "very secretive kind of drinking situation which can be very deadly, because then people are drinking way too much. It is not being done in an open atmosphere." This is causing a real "dilemma" because the laws and regulations still must be followed, she said.

While Moneta agrees with the fact that drinking has become more secretive at UMass, he said alcohol education has been greatly increased at the University. Also, as a result of these firmer policies, drinking has been limited and the quality of life in the residence halls has increased, Moneta said.

"We need more than just rules," said Laurie Prezbindowski, a peer educator with the Alcohol and Drug Education Program. The University must offer students more inexpensive, alternative activities to drinking, she said, and in addition, more methods of promoting responsible drinking must be discovered and implemented.

A staunch supporter of "primary prevention," Prezbindowski said students must be taught responsible drinking in order to prevent dangerous behavior patterns from taking root.

Jacobus also said she agrees education is an essential factor in promoting better alcohol consumption habits. She believes the University must offer students "accurate information about the physiology of alcohol, like what alcohol will do to you, what are the signs when someone is beginning to develop a problem, what the laws are, and really getting people to look at why they drink."

Understanding the attitudes behind college drinking habits might aid in reducing abuse. A 1985 study, conducted by Engs and Hanson, found that while 66 percent of the general adult population drink, 80 to 90 percent of college students drink.

Jacobus explains this discrepancy by noting that many students are away from home for the first time and are free from parental restrictions, drinking is seen as a "rite of passage," and in college there is a greater acceptance of heavy drinking. This atmosphere easily accelerates drinking problems leading to dangerous behavior, she said.

The close quarters of the average residence hall at UMass, Prezbindowski said, indirectly pressures more students to consume more alcohol than they would in regular situations. Everyone lives so close together and "the more people packed into one place, the more influence they have on each other," she said.

Prezbindowski also attributed this statistic to the presence of a subtle type of peer pressure in these crowded environments. Students, many away from home for the first time, drink to assert their new independence and to be part of the crowd, she said.

But times are changing. Jacobus believes that lately "there has been a real shift. People are being more responsible and more moderate." She also said there is a growing number of UMass students who don't drink alcoholic beverages.

"We are just scratching the surface," Moneta said. "There is still an incredible amount of alcohol consumption, an incredible amount of violence related to alcohol consumption, and an incredible amount of life-threatening behavior" at UMass due to alcohol use and abuse.

While Moneta said he feels more comprehensive, wide-ranging efforts are needed, he is "nervous" about imminent budget cuts.

Five years after the University implemented a tough alcoholic beverages policy, drinking habits appear stubbornly similar; however, the approach in dealing with these various behaviors has been seriously altered.

Effects of alcohol a heady ordeal

By MICHAEL MANGIARACINA
Collegian Correspondent

Although most college students are familiar with the effects of alcohol, it is unlikely that many know what happens to their drink once it enters the body. Ethyl alcohol follows a complex path through the body that continues long after the party is over.

Instead of being digested, ethanol, the more common name for ethyl alcohol, is rapidly absorbed directly into the blood stream from the stomach and small intestine. Alcohol absorption is slowed by any food present in the stomach, so a person becomes intoxicated faster on an empty stomach.

Karen Jacobus, coordinator of alcohol and drug education at UMass, said if the drinker has taken any other drugs this can create complications for the body.

"The first drug to be processed is always alcohol, so other drugs will stay in the system longer while the alcohol is being processed," said Jacobus.

Alcohol can then reach the brain in as little as 30 seconds. "The first thing to be affected is your judgement," said Jacobus.

Although people who have been drinking may appear energetic because their inhibitions are reduced, ethanol is a depressant and slows the activity of the brain and heart. As more is inbibed, coordination, balance and sensations become more impaired.

A small amount of alcohol leaves the body through the lungs and kidneys. The rest is processed by the liver where it is converted into water at the rate of approximately one drink per hour, said Jacobus.

Excessive drinking may cause the body to reject any more alcohol. Vomiting results when the stomach's pyloric valve closes to prevent unsafe levels of ethanol from reaching the small intestine.

The cause of the familiar "alcohol withdrawal," or hangover is not fully understood by scientists. The hangover is essentially a result of the body trying to function normally again after having so many of its functions altered. Preventive measures such as cold showers or coffee will not diminish its effects. Only time can cure a hangover.

ROOM CHOOSING PROCESS For Fall 1991

PLEASE READ CAREFULLY: IMPORTANT INFORMATION

RESERVING YOUR CURRENT ROOM ASSIGNMENT

If you intend to keep your present hall room assignment, you must sign up with staff on duty during the room choosing process on Wdenesday, April 17. THE ONLY DAY TO RESERVE YOUR CURRENT ROOM IS WEDNESDAY APRIL 17.

CHANGING YOUR ROOM OR YOUR HALL

If you wish to move to another room in the same residence hall, you must sign up with staff on duty during the room choosing process on Thursday evening, April 18. All room changes will be determined by your seniority and rank. THE ONLY EVENING TO SIGN UP FOR A NEW ROOM IN YOUR CURRENT HALL IS THURSDAY, APRIL 18.

If you wish to move to another residence hall, you must complete a Housing Preference Form. DEADLINE FOR RETURNING HOUSING PREFERENCE FORMS TO THE HOUSING ASSIGNMENT OFFICE IS FRIDAY, APRIL 26.

IF YOU WANT TO KEEP YOUR CURRENT RESIDENCE HALL ASSIGNMENT WHILE ALSO REQUESTING A HALL CHANGE YOU MUST DO THE FOLLOWING:

1. Sign up for the same room Wednesday, April 17 or a new room on Thursday evening, April 18.
2. Fill out a Preference Form. On the Preference Form in the lower right hand corner is a box you must "check" if you wish to be returned to your current hall if your choices cannot be met. YOUR OLD RESIDENCE HALL ASSIGNMENT IS GUARANTEED ONLY IF YOU DO BOTH STEPS.

ROOMMATE REQUESTS

If you wish to move to another residence hall to room with a student already assigned to that residence hall, you must together complete a green ROOMMATE REQUEST FORM. DEADLINE FOR RETURNING ROOMMATE REQUEST FORMS TO THE HOUSING ASSIGNMENT OFFICE IS FRIDAY, APRIL 19.

If you wish to become roommates with a student in a residence hall to which neither of you is currently assigned, you must each complete a Housing Preference Form. These forms should be identical, (with the excception of the "check" box) and stapled together. DEADLINE FOR RETURNING HOUSING PREFERENCE FORMS IS FRIDAY, APRIL 26.

DIDN'T GET THE ROOM YOU WANTED?

If, during the regular Room Choosing period, you were unable to secure a particular room (single or particular double), please contact the Housing Assignment Office to fill out a blue In-House Room Request From. Rooms that become available during the Summer will be assigned, according to seniority, to those students who filled out this form and returned it to the Housing Assignment Office.

RESIDENCE HALL CONTRACT

The 1991-1992 Residence Hall Contract and Contract Card will be mailed to you in your current residence hall on or about April 22 as a part of the Room Choosing process. These cards must be returned to the Housing Assignment Office by Thursday, May 23, 1991. FAILURE TO RETURN YOUR RESIDENCE HALL CONTRACT CARD BY THIS DEADLINE MAY SUBJECT YOUR FALL 1991 ASSIGNMENT TO CANCELLATION.

PAY BILL BY DUE DATE

Your Fall 1991 fee bill will be mailed to your home in early July. If complete payment of this bill is not received by the Bursar's Initial Due Date (usually in early August), your assignment will be subject to cancellation. IF YOU ANTICIPATE HAVING A PROBLEM PAYING YOUR BILL PLEASE CONTACT THE HOUSING ASSIGNMENT OFFICE. WE WILL MAKE ARRANGEMENTS TO HOLD YOUR HOUSING UNTIL YOU ARE ABLE TO MAKE FULL PAYMENT.

OTHER OBLIGATIONS

If you are going to be a junior or a senior you will be required to confirm your room choosing arrangements by completeing the Junior/Senior Room Confirmation Card which will be mailed to your home in late May. This card will be due by June 21, 1991. FAILURE TO RETURN THIS CARD BY THE DEADLINE MAY SUBJECT YOUR ASSIGNMENT TO CANCELLATION.

In addition to properly completing room choosing all students are required to remain in good standing with the University at all times. Being withdrawn for any reason after the end of the semester may automatically subject your assignment to cancellation. Check to make sure you do not owe any fees to the Bursar BEFORE you leave for the summer.

QUESTIONS?

If you still have questions about the Room Choosing process, please contact the Housing Assignment Office (545-2100), 235 Whitmore. Thank you.

Defending Your Life is funny but predictable

By MEREDITH O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff
and SCOTT WEISS
Collegian Correspondent

Defending Your Life, directed, written and starring Albert (Broadcast News) Brooks, is the humorous "first true story" of what happens after you die.

O'BRIEN: Aside from its clever, witty and creative plot,

I really liked Defending Your Life because I could relate to Brooks, who plays Daniel Miller the soft-spoken nice guy who is the constant victim of bad luck. Miller, who died when he accidentally drove his brand-new BMW into an oncoming bus, found himself at a trial "defending" a life full of stupid mistakes and funny mishaps.

WEISS: I feel badly for you if you can relate so well to Miller. This movie does have a very imaginative plot, however, with a disappointingly predictable ending. Brooks created an afterlife sort of purgatory called "Judgment City," modelled after the earth, where each candidate must be evaluated before their future course can be determined. The city, the trial and Miller allow for some frequent laughs but the movie has far too obvious of an ending.

O'BRIEN: Yeah, the ending was kind of sappy, but if you can put aside your feelings about the "obvious" ending, you'll realize that there were plenty of humorous scenes that left you chuckling minutes later — at least that's what happened to me. One of my favorites was a scene where Miller and his newly-found love interest Julia (Meryl Streep, also defending her seemingly error-free life) go to an Italian restaurant where they can eat all they want for free. You see, in Judgment City, you can pig out but you don't get bloated, you don't gain weight, you don't get gas. Between Streep's order of three pounds of pasta and the Italian waiter who insisted that Brooks take home nine pies as a little snack, I was pretty amused.

WEISS: I found it odd to see Meryl Streep in this film, it just doesn't seem like the type of picture I am used to seeing her in. I don't think she'll be nominated for any Oscars for this one. She basically spends all of her time letting Brooks play off of her for his witty one-liners while she represents the opposite of Brooks' fearful character. (The evaluation of Daniel Miller's life is based on his own fear and whether or not he has progressed far enough to overcome it to advance beyond the earthly environment.)

O'BRIEN: While Brooks' dry sense of humor dominated this movie, Streep did not serve as just a sounding board for his wit. Her carefree character, one of boldness and courage, was an integral part of this movie's appeal. The other characters, especially that of Brooks' hard-nosed prosecutor Lena Foster (Lee Grant), worked well together to produce a funny, not stupid, and clever rendition of life after death. The verdict is in. . .thumbs up.

WEISS: Yes, all the characters played integral parts for the movie, but they didn't really need Meryl Streep for this one. You could have even played the part of Julia and the movie would probably have worked just as well. The movie was entertaining, although predicting, and it just seemed like Brooks could have done more with it. I can't condemn the movie, it did make me laugh, but I just can't stand behind this one whole-heartedly. Half-a-thumb.

Don Juan
Rand Theatre
Friday, April 5

Don Juan grins, duels, betrays women, counter-moralizes, and meets his warm comeuppance at the hands of a stone monument — you know, the usual stuff. The "original" Don Juan was written by Tirso de Molina during the seventeenth century in the classical style which Shakespeare used, and it receives a lively tongue-in-cheek production here. The swarmy Jeff Donovan is a pleasure to watch as Don Juan, showing his white teeth, stroking his pirate moustache, and playing the fainting maiden far beyond the hilt. The dozen or so people whom Don Juan treacherously wrongs are well drawn, sometimes with hilarious satire, in the tradition of commedia dell'arte and Saturday Night Live.

From the moral standpoint Don Juan will always be a classical problem for Western culture, because in witnessing his rise and fall (his erection and flaccidity, if you will), we condemn his insensitivity from our pulpit, while simultaneously wishing we could snag as many chicks as he. In this production everyone Don Juan seduces or betrays is played as vain, ignorant, nympho, deceitful, old fogey, or hickish, and naturally we don't take them all that seriously on some level. On the other hand there are moments in Tirso's script where we sense the real tragedy that has occurred in these young women's lives (Tess O'Brian and Robin Lee Heisey have particularly heart-breaking moments as the fishermaiden and farmer's daughter). There is something about this Don Juan which makes him absolutely unredeemable, whereas Molier and G.B. Shaw were able to find a little more social complexity in his character. As morality play it would be over-simplified and over-religious for modern culture, and as dating workshop it would land you with an "anti-social" label and a few nights in the slammer.

The designers thought it would be clever to toss in a few modern props like flashlights, a National Geographic magazine, and a can of spraypaint. We also hear Don Juan gun his cool wheels during a couple of his escapes, though in dialogue he always tells his servant to "saddle up the horses!" I don't know: is this avant-garde theatre a la carte? Does it represent the anachronism of traditional morality in a world which has fast become suave and alienated? Or did the stage hands just switch a few props around for a gaff?

The set design by Larry Novakov-Lawlor is more decorative than functional but I guess the titled stage and swimming colors are supposed to evoke some feelings of the impermeance of this earthly slab. Sigh.

Finally, it has to be said, the play was somewhat slow, and I sensed the audience was frankly eager to ease their seats after perfunctory applause that night. I cannot say it is the fault of the directors and actors, though they get the ultimate blame. There were many moments which were exquisitely humorous and well developed. More likely it's just the choice of script. I'm all in favor of reviving classics, but it's certainly not easy, and despite some creative efforts the jingling rhyme at the end of every line becomes tiresome fast and Tirso's play has the abundance of sub-plots and wordy speeches spoken by old kings that were conventional for his time.

Don Juan will be performed at the Rand Theatre at UMass April 10 through 13. Performance starts at 8 p.m.

Whalers hold Bruins 4-3

By TOM COYNE
The Associated Press

HARTFORD — Mark Hunter had two goals as Hartford did all its scoring in the first 15:55, then held on for a 4-3 victory over the Boston Bruins on Tuesday night to even their Adams Division semifinal series at two wins each.

John Cullen scored once and set up both of Hunter's goals as the Whalers came out flying, then managed to hold off the Bruins after Ken Hodge scored with 5:32 left in the game to cut the lead to 4-3. Hartford goalie Peter Sidorkiewicz, who allowed only four goals on 10 shots in the third period in Sunday's 6-3 loss, made several key saves in the final period.

Game 5 is scheduled for Thursday night in Boston.

Cullen and Hunter, both acquired at the trading deadline last month, scored 59 second apart as Hartford, which fell apart in the third period of Game 3, established the tempo early and matched its best scoring period of the season.

Cullen, who also had a goal and two assists in Hartford's opening-game victory in Boston, scored 2:40 into the game on a 2-on1 break with Hunter. Cullen picked up a clearing pass by Sidorkiewicz, raced up left wing, faked a pass and fired a wrist shot from the left circle past goalie Andy Moog.

Boston's Cam Neely was penalized for roughing 46 seconds later, and the Whalers took advantage.

Cullen faked a wrist shot from the left circle, then fed Zarley Zalapski at the right point. Moog made a right pad save on Zalapski's slap shot, but Hunter fired the rebound into an unguarded net at 3:39.

The Whalers also scored on their next power play after Bob Sweeney was called for interference. Cullen carried the puck into the Boston zone, circled the net and backpassed to Sylvain Cote at the left point. Cote's wrist shot deflected off Hunter's stick and over Moog's glove at 12:15.

Dave Christian cut the Whaler's lead to 3-1 on a wrist shot from the right circle that deflected off Hartford defenseman Doug Houda and past Sidorkiewicz at 15:30. But Zalapski scored 25 seconds later, taking a cross-ice pass from Terry Yake and beating Moog with a wrist shot for a 4-1 lead.

Petri Skriko scored his third goal of the series at 16:57 to cut the lead 4-2. Skriko, standing in the slot, took a pass from Ray Bourque, stepped out of traffic and put a screened backhander past Sidorkiewicz during a power play.

Sidorkiewicz made three key saves five minutes into the third period. He stopped Neely's short wrist shot, turned aside Neely's backhander on the rebound and then plucked Glen Wesley's soft shot out of the air. He also made a right pad save on a short wrist shot by Hodge with three minutes remaining, and defenseman Randy Ladouceur cleared the rebound.

Softball shuts down Boston College

Claffey clinches seventh shutout, Aprile gives up one hit

By CHRIS MIRACLE
Collegian Staff

What happens when two powerhouse teams with hot pitching staffs and solid defensive infielders go head-to-head? Well, coaches' life spans shorten, fans' shouts louden and players' heart rates quicken.

That was the situation yesterday at Totman Field as the University of Massachusets women's softball team tangoed with the Golden Eagles from Boston College.

The Minutewomen's steps were just a tad more precise as the UMass sluggers swept the doubleheader 1-0, 3-0, improving their overall record to 14-7. UMass has also worked their way up to No. 20 in the national rankings.

"BC threw some good games," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "There was no room for error. Coming in I knew it was going to be tough. BC is fourth in the region, but with their tough schedule, they're not far from being number one or two."

The Minutewomen shut off the Boston College Eagles, 1-0, 3-0, yesterday at Totman Field. They stand at No. 20 in the nation and boast a 14-7 record.

In the second game of the double-duel, Darlene Claffey took some of the pressure off of the Minutewomen hitters as she fireballed her pitches over the plate en route to her seventh shutout of the year. Her record now stands at 7-3.

Claffey still has on her mind the 'lump' in her throat which she noticed earlier in the week. According to Sortino, Claffey will undergo a barium X-ray this Thursday to investigate the problem.

"It must effect her. It irritates her more when she gets excited," Sortino said. "Pitching in a 1-0 game, I cannot believe that it wouldn't affect her."

After Claffey shut down the first three hitters of the Eagles' line-up, UMass catcher Cherie DellAnno blasted one of her hits deep into the left field corner to lead off the bottom of the first inning. On an 0-2 count to shortstop Jen Miller, BC pitcher Tanya Saunders threw a wild pitch allowing DellAnno to steal home. That was all the Minutewomen needed.

The Minutewomen would not score again until the bottom of the fifth. Losing some of her control, Saunders walked Stacey Nichols who advanced to third on a DellAnno bunt. Dellanno, with heads-up base running, stole second. Saunders walked her second batter, Miller, to load the bases for UMass. Next shortstop Barbara Marean answered the pressure situation with a sacrifice fly to center, allowing Nichols to tag up and stride safely across home plate.

The Golden Eagles threatened to score in the top of the sixth with two out as second baseman Roseanne Sheehan clubbed a base hit to center, legging it out to a triple. With a runner in scoring position, the UMass defense rose to the occasion as Claffey's tough pitching caused BC's Angela Maserti to ground out ending the inning.

With Tricia Murray in for Saunders, the Minutewomen again exposed the Eagles' weak points for one more run in the bottom of the sixth. Loading the bases once more on a beautiffly laid bunt by outfielder Bonnie Schilling, Miller was walked yet again allowing outfilder Peggy Bush to score the final run.

"Since we've been back [from California], this is the best pitching and defensive display we have had all year," Sortino said.

Starting the first game for the Minutewomen, Holly Aprile poured the heat on early, taking the first three batters down, two of them strikeouts. From then on she was almost flawless, giving up only one hit. Aprile, coming into the game wuith a 2.83 ERA, now posts a 7-4 record.

"Holly did a great job," Sortino said. "She had a lot of movement on the ball and her change-up was working well."

UMass' only run came in the bottom of the seventh. Getting to third on a Schilling sacrifice bunt, Bush was knocked in by pinch hitter Rachel Lawson, her only RBI, producing the winning score.

Bats come alive in 11-4 UMass win

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Correspondent

What's better in baseball, clutch pitching or lots of hitting?

How about both?

The University of Massachusetts baseball team got strong efforts from three pitchers while continuing their recent offensive barrage yesterday, crushing Connecticut 11-4 at Earl Lorden Field.

Starting pitcher John Sammarco pitched 4⅓ innings in a solid performance, but it was Scott Meaney who slammed the door shut in the fifth when Sammarco faltered. Meaney came in and struck out UConn second baseman Craig MacDonald to halt a UConn rally. Rob Graziano chipped in with a scoreless ninth.

Meaney, 1-4, earned the win by cruising for 3⅓ hitless innings. He struck out three Huskies and only walked one.

"He needed it for a confidence builder," said coach Mike Stone. "He just pitched outstanding. It was the best effort of the year so far . . . up north."

While Meaney was shutting down UConn's offense, the Minutemen (9-15-1) were coming alive at the plate. UMass scored five runs in three innings to put the game away.

Steve Corradi's sacrifice fly drove in Glenn DiSarcina after a lead-off double in the fifth, and made the score 7-4.

The Minutemen did much of their damage in the sixth, as Brian Bright drove in his third and fourth runs of the game with a double, driving in catcher Lou Olivieri and leftfielder Corradi. DiSarcina then drove in Bright with one of three of his doubles on the afternoon to put UMass up 10-4.

UMass finished the scoring in the seventh with a heads-up rally. John Carelli singled, advanced on a hit-and-run play, stole third, then scored on an infield hit.

The Minutemen led 1-0 after one, and had a big inning in the second. Carelli, who was 3-for-3 yesterday, led off with a triple. First baseman Jay Dodig drove him in and Dodig scored on centerfielder Mike Tobin's homer. UMass wasn't done, as Corradi and Ian Torres got base hits and Bright drove them in with a single. This built the 6-0 lead.

Carelli said he thought the team had spirit today. "We played real well today. Everything came together. we got good pitching, good defense and good hitting."

Graziano, a Junior, finished the game on the mound for UMass, and he retired the side in order.

Game Notes: UMass plays in a double-header Thursday against New Hampshire without the services of catcher Derek Dana, who is out with a broken hand. Stone said he hopes Dana will be ready this weekend, but sees no need to rush the junior.

Probable pitching starters Thursday for the Minutemen include Jeff Toothaker and John Russell.

Gorillas face PC Friars

By ADRIEN MATT
Collegian Staff

Perhaps one of the few breath-easy games of the season could pose the biggest mental challenge for the University of Massachusetts lacrosse team today.

Providence College enters the game on a two-game winning streak, a 3-2 record. The Friars have faced New Haven (15-2W), Brown (18-8L), Georgetown (10-8L), Bates (22-6W) and Siena (18-3W). They return only seven seniors and five juniors. By comparison, UMass returns 12.

The Gorillas rank 15th in the country at a tenative 2-2 mark. Behind them are wins against St. John's (17-9) and New Hampshire (15-12) and losses against Cornell (16-7) and Brown (13-12OT).

Although far from a perennial lacrosse powerhouse, PC and teams like PC do pose a challenge to Independents like UMass.

"[These games] give you a chance to hopefully play well and get some of the other guys in, but you do need a little breather," said UMass coach Ted Garber. "But when you play those teams, the risk you take is if you're not ready, and they beat you, you're in big trouble."

Facing off for the Gorillas will be Kevin O'Connor, who is nursing stitches on his knuckles. At midfield will be tri-captain Rick Senatore and Mario Lopez who will change up with Jim Kushner, Michael Caine, Francis Pepe and John Schlipf.

Tri-captain Jim McAleavey will marshall the attack, feeding the sticks of Mark Millon, Wes Depp and Rob Falvey. Mario Guaglianone's condition was still a question mark at press time; Guaglianone has a strained calf muscle which Garber said might be rested until the game against Yale Saturday.

"We got to go into the first quarter, and make like this is Yale at the first quarter," Garber said of the team's approach to today's game. "We've got to start [executing better]."

Millon leads the team in goals (12) and points (15), while McAleavey leads the team in assists (10) and caps 14 points. Jim Kushner has tallied 9 goals and 3 assists for 12 points.

Ted Kellerman will start in goal for the Gorillas. He has 53 saves in 96 shots on goal. Ray Suris has 8 saves in 15 shots.

"We're a much better team than they are," Garber said of Providence. "I told [the team] you've got to play the game and not the name. You can't go down there and think it's personal stat day."

Although the Friars as a team are not awesome, individuals have produced impressive results. Senior Sean Horrigan leads PC in points with 16 goals and 5 assists. Assisting Horrigan and other players are sophomore Danny Bianco and freshman Steve Iannuccilli who have 11 and 10 assists, respectively. Bianco led PC in points and assists last year.

Weld orders faculty to work for free

By MARC ELLIOTT
Collegian Staff

Governor Weld declared faculty at the 29 state college and universities "critical or essential" yesterday, saying they must work on unpaid furlough days and receive compensation later when they leave state service.

The governor deemed essential all full-time and part-time faculty as well as "any other staff members who must work during the furlough period in order for students to complete courses and/or degree requirements," in a letter to Paul Marks, the chancellor of the Board of Regents of Higher Education.

Originally, faculty had two options for dealing with Gov. Weld's furlough plan: either refuse to work during unpaid furlough days or work and receive a lump sum payment after leaving state service. The third option for state employees, work and accumulate bonus vacation days, does not apply to faculty, who have summers off.

The governor is trying to save money by asking state employees to work a certain number of days without pay. The number of days would be determined according to the workers' annual salary. For example, the average professor's salary is between $40,000 to $49,999, which would translate to eight days of unpaid work.

Faculty are now not allowed to legally select the "no work no pay" option. Many professors said they were planning to take their furlough days at the same time to shut the University down in protest of Weld's cutbacks.

The governor has extended the deadline for faculty to request special leaves of absence without pay to Friday because of the late timing of this announcement.

Many professors said they will ignore the governor's statement and decide not to work on April 17 and 18, according to a professor who asked to remain anonymous.

"I believe many faculty will not conduct business as usual on Wednesday and Thursday, April 17 and 18," he said. "I would be surprised if those activities continued beyond that date."

President-Chancellor Joseph Duffey criticized Weld's past actions concerning public higher education and said he thought the governor did not truly believe that the faculty were essential. He said this action is "more an attempt by the governor to prevent the disruption of classes."

Duffey also encouraged faculty to work through the furlough days but added that the University administration would not try to punish faculty who choose to defy the governor.

"At any point where we have an option, we do not intend to be an agent of enforcement of this unwise policy of the governor's," he said.

The faculty and librarian's union — the Massachusetts Society of Professors — has joined the other state employee unions in a lawsuit against the state because of Weld's furlough plan. The professors plan to meet today in the Campus Center to decide what further action, if any, its 1,100 members will take.

MSP President John Cole said that faculty are bound to be upset and that receiving no pay until retirement is tantamount to not being paid at all for professors who are planning on staying for a long time.

"To insist that we work without pay will make the faculty very angry," he said.

Actress tells of daily hurdles for the deaf

By ERICK OLSEN
Collegian Correspondent

Phyllis Frelich, the deaf Tony Award-winning star of Broadway's "Children of a Lesser God," lectured in sign language Tuesday night about the need to overcome stereotypes surrounding deafness and sign language.

As her husband Robert Steinberg translated the inspiring, often humorous discussion, Frelich explained to an audience of more than 100 people that other people's negative attitudes are the only real handicap faced by deaf people.

Frelich said the word "disabled" is a poor classification which encourages stereotypes. Rather, she said, deaf people are a "cultural minority," distinguished by their language and not hindered by it.

She then summarized some of the frustrations of the deaf with a powerfully stirring rendition of a scene from the play "Children of a Lesser God."

Born deaf in North Dakota, she said she learned quickly that speech training was favored over sign language, which was considered a "language for oral failures, for those who couldn't function in the hearing world."

She said she was made to believe that hearing people were much smarter and better people, and that she should aspire to be as much like them as possible.

Fortunately, she said, she was able to learn to sign from friends and adults. "Communication seemed easy and natural for the first time," she said.

Phyllis Frelich

At Gallaudet College in Washington, D.C., Frelich participated in every theatrical production. She was, however, unable to fully express herself through sign on stage until she met David Hays and formed the National Theatre of the Deaf.

A few years later, after meeting playwright Mark Medoff, Frelich won the Tony Award for Best Actress in "Children of a Lesser God."

After the play and the ensuing motion picture, the artistic beauty of sign language was acknowledged, she said.

"Through art, we were able to change people's attitudes to influence social change," she said.

Despite the amazing technological advances over the past 20 years, like closed caption television and telephones for the deaf, she said more needs to be done.

There should be acting opportunities made available for deaf, blind and other physically impaired actors and actresses, as well as an increased selection of disabled programming, she said.

Deaf actors and actresses should be given deaf parts, she said, to provide role models for deaf children.

She closed with the hope that things will continue to improve for the deaf and that "through our art, we can do so much more for our people."

Her lecture was the third of the semester sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program.

Fire rips through third floor of Zeta Psi

Pet ferret 'Reggie T.' perishes in night blaze

By MARC ELLIOTT
Collegian Staff

A one-alarm fire destroyed the third floor of the Zeta Psi fraternity house at 23 Phillips St. last night, leaving 14 fraternity brothers homeless.

Eight brothers escaped without injury after unsuccessfully attempting to put out the blaze, which broke out around 8:15 p.m.

The fraternity's mascot, a ferret named Reginald 'Reggie' T. Ferret, perished in the fire. The ferret, a weasellike animal, was in a room on the third floor, said Bill Giovannucci, a fraternity brother.

"If anything was going to survive that, it would have been him," said the pet's owner, Brian Patton. The brothers said they considered the ferret part of the fraternity and claimed that he had passed initiation.

There were no other injuries in the blaze. The fire was declared under control at 9:05 p.m. by Amherst Fire Chief Victor J. Zumbruski, who left the Amherst town meeting to extinguish the fire.

The fire started in a room on the third floor of the white, three-story, wood-frame building, he said. Fire officials were unable to determine the cause or amount of damages to the house at presstime.

Several witnesses called the Amherst Fire Department while four of the eight brothers who were on the first and second floors watching television and studying for exams rushed upstairs with fire extinguishers. But they could not get through the dense smoke that had engulfed the hallway and ran outside, said Vincent Mendoza, a fraternity brother.

"Everyone was running around with fire extinguishers, but there was so much smoke we couldn't get at it," he said.

None of the five brothers who lived on the third floor were home at the time of the fire, according to several brothers.

The third floor was almost completely destroyed, Zumbruski said. The first and second first floors suffered some water damage, but the blue Greek letters and Tasmanian Devil on the front of the white house were untouched.

The Zeta Psi fraternity has occupied the house since 1978, said the president, James Quinn.

The sorority sisters living in the Sigma Kappa house across the street from Zeta Psi said they saw flames shooting out of a window of the third floor and heard explosions coming from inside.

"We smelled smoke so we thought our own house was on fire at first so we ran out and all of the third floor was engulfed with flames," said Debbie, a Sigma Kappa sister who would not give her last name. "It looked like something in the house was exploding. It seemed like forever until the fire department arrived. The fire was getting really bad and there was nothing we could do."

The 14 Zeta Psi brothers who lived in the house will stay in neighboring fraterity and sorority houses who have offered space until other arrangements can be made, Quinn said.

Profs discuss classism problems

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

Americans have a hard time dealing with issues of social class, according to three area professors who have researched the problem of class in American society.

Benjamin Demott, a retired English professor at Amherst College, and Sut Jhally and Justin Lewis, UMass communications professors, presented their findings in a panel discussion titled "Class and the American Dream" yesterday.

All three panelists agreed that media, television, and movies affect the way Americans perceive the problem of classism.

"What we mean about class is not just about income or occupation tables," DeMott said. "There are certain unique ways that Americans think about class.

DeMott said movies frequently portray a "Cinderella" society where people rise easily out of low social positions without the barriers that often exist in reality.

"If you look at successful movies, you always come back to the basic Cinderella theme," DeMott said.

DeMott said he believes the reason many Americans don't take issues regarding class seriously is ingrained in the early traditions of our society.

"Any suggestion that we were going to have any kind of hierarchy was immediately spurned," DeMott said. "We had a guaranteed franchise from the beginning.

"This [franchise] was not for the majority, but for the minority," continued DeMott. "It was for white males alone, so both rich and poor white males saw themselves as empowered."

This historical development has led many Americans today to accepting what DeMott called a "faith of classlessness" in American society.

Lewis and Jhally then demonstrated results from an audience study they did of the "Cosby Show" to demonstrate the way in which white and black viewers perceived issues of class and race in today's society.

Lewis noted that the Cosby show portrays an "upper middle-class black family," the Huxtables, who live in a comfortable suburban neighborhood. The socio-economic position of the Huxtables is tied to perceptions that much of society holds about class and about race in this country, they said.

"You can't begin to understand stereotyping without understanding the issue of class," Lewis said. "To show positive images of African-Americans and other minorities, it's necessary to show them in upper middle-class positions.

"This [portrayal] leads to a necessary distortion of social reality," Lewis said. "The experience of most people is lower down on the ladder of a stratified society."

Lewis said he polled white audiences of the Cosby Show about affirmative action and concluded that people have a fundamental misunderstanding of class and racial problems.

"They disliked [affirmative action] because they thought it was unfair and, this is important, they thought it was no longer necessary," Lewis said. "Racism now is nearly always dealt with in the past; it's consigned to history.

"There is the assumption that in order to be a positive image, you have to upper middle-class," Lewis said. "It leads white people to a total misapprehension of the world they live in."

Holocaust sites differ with countries

By ALISON BUCKHOLTZ
Collegian Staff

National memory determines whether Holocaust memorial space is transformed into sites which eventually commemorate destruction and heroism and not the victims, Professor James Young said in Memorial Hall last night.

Holocaust momuments in Europe, Israel and America question the function of memory, Young said, eventually "generating their own meanings." His goal: "to reinvest memorial spaces with the memory of their origins."

National memory directs the path of Holocaust remembrance through iconography, said Young, speaking on "The Changing Face of Memory: Holocaust Momuments in New Times and Places."

Iconography of European monuments, for example, overwhelmingly refer to crematoria. As a result, he said, "Death becomes the principal icon of memory — 1,000 years of Jewish life in Europe come down to that one point."

In Polish monuments, the motif of the broken tombstone, symbolizing the destruction of Jewish cemeteries, demonstrates the multi-layered aspect of Holocaust memory. Broken mock-gravestones in Polish monuments like Treblinka "emblemetize not just an attempt to remember, but the one-time attempt at destruction," Young said. "The attempt to restore memory is twinned with the sense of impossibility of re-creation."

In Israel, on the other hand, memorial images of the Holocaust are always united with heroism. "Israelis don't want to remember only the victims, but also the many heroes," such as Jews involved in the Warsaw Ghetto uprising, he said. "There are very few strictly martyrological monuments in Israel. It's a matter of the way Israelis remember what happened."

Compared to Europe and Israel, American experience in the Holocaust, and thus American monuments, are extremely limited in scope, Young said. "The American experience is not ghettoization, not the camps, not Nuremburg, not 1,000 years of Jewish history, but the grisly moment of discovery of the camps and their subsequent liberation."

Conveniently, he said, this coincides with 'American ideals of liberation, plurality, and refuge for others," and is reflected in the well-known Liberty Park, N.J. monument of a soldier carrying a Holocaust victim to safety. "As long as Holocaust memorials are built, they will reflect similar self-myths," he said."

Tower chimes to signal end of Holocaust service

By ALISON BUCKHOLTZ
Collegian Staff

Bells in the Tower Library will toll for one minute today, marking the end of a University-wide Holocaust commemoration service to memorialize the millions killed in Nazi terror campaigns, according to Hillel Program Director Yehudit Heller.

The service will begin at 12:30 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge. A moment of silence will follow when the library bells toll at 1:30 p.m. "The bells also let community members who could not participate in the service put their hearts and minds with ours," Heller said.

The concept of a widespread moment of silence on this day, internationally known as Yom Ha'Shoah (Day of the Holocaust), originated in Israel.

At a designated time, sirens sound all over the country and "people drop everything. Even cars stop," Heller said. "It gives people time to think about what happened. Horrors like six million people being systematically killed, and the society allowing it to happen, occur because people don't think."

A sense of unity characterizes these community and country-wide moments of remembrance. "You stop everything and think, while knowing that around the world, others are doing exactly the same thing," Heller said. "This will be happening at commemorations around the world. By participating in something like this, you become part of the family of man."

Administration refuses to recognize new student officers

By ALEX DERING
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts administration said yesterday they will not recognize Tuesday's elections of a new student president and trustee.

Jo-Anne Vanin, vice chancellor for student affairs, said the administration, following its decision on Feb. 11 to help restructure the Student Government Association, will not recognize an election until the work is complete.

"I am really regretful that those students went ahead with the elections," Vanin said. "The administration will not recognize those elections."

Irene Carew, chair of the Student Activities Office, did not return several calls from the Collegian.

In February, the leaders of the Student Government Association said the body was ineffective and asked the administration to step in and help restructure it.

"I am really regretful that those students went ahead with the elections. The administration will not recognize those elections."
— Jo-Anne Vanin, vice chancellor for student affairs

The final vote tally of the election was not available at presstime.

Alan Van Tassel, who was involved in the tallying of the election results, said the results were not available because "nobody had the time to verify the outstanding 156 absentee ballots. We were all exhausted."

Van Tassel said the absentee ballots would be verified soon and added to the totals now available.

The Board of Governors election results were also not available.

Stephen McAfee, a coordinator of the student elections, said the ballots for the BOG elections will be handed over to the BOG executive board and the results posted.

The 156 absentee ballots will not affect the outcome of the elections for the offices of student president or student trustee because Gagne ran unopposed and Newnan defeated Ken Parker by a wide margin.

Campus group condemns DOD policy on homosexuality

By CHRIS MUTHER
Collegian Staff

Members of the University of Massachusetts Faculty-Staff Group for Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Concerns yesterday condemned the Department of Defense policy which bans homosexuals from military service. Earlier in the day members of Queer Nation staged a "Radical, Militant Fashion Show"in the Campus Center, protesting the same policy.

The two local actions were part of a nationwide protest coordinated by the American Civil Liberties Union to bring attention to the Department of Defense policy on homosexuality.

At a forum to discuss the DOD policy, members of the Faculty- Staff group for GLB Concerns said it affects lesbian, bisexual and gay students who wish to join the Reserve Officer Training Corps.

The group passed out copies of their statement, which said: "This discriminatory policy is inconsistent with the principles of equal opportunity and respect for human dignity which are essential to higher education in a free society."

Currently, homosexual students at UMass may take classes offered by the military science department, but are prohibited from joining ROTC, which is under the Department of Defense. Homosexual students do not qualify for ROTC scholarships as well.

The current policy states "Homosexuality is incompatible with military service. The presence of such members adversely affects the ability of the Armed forces to maintain discipline, good order and morale."

In 1981, the policy was updated to include three reasons for discharge: committing homosexual acts, attempting to commit homosexual acts, stating the desire or intent to commit homosexual acts.

The policy hurts all homosexuals because the DOD is one of the largest employers in the United States and their hiring code is extremely influential, according to James Humphreys, a professor in the mathematics and statistics department.

"The military is an important institution in American Society," he said. "It is extremely influential in how attitudes of race and gender are conveyed."

Humphreys said a recent study by the Pentagon found no difference between the military performances of heterosexuals and homosexuals. The Pentagon later suppressed the study, but a book was eventually published on the subject, he said.

Richard Trousdell, a professor in the theater department, read a chronology of the movement at UMass over the past year to change the ROTC policy.

"It's unfair to everyone involved to have these issues dragged out for a year with no resolution," he said.

Both men stressed that their aim is not to remove ROTC from the campus, but to change the ROTC policy.

Earlier in the day, members of the UMass chapter of Queer Nation staged a fashion show in the Campus Center Concourse, strutting in army fatigues and make-up with Madonna's "Vogue" blaring in the background.

Sean Sullivan, Queer Nation UMass spokesperson, said the fashion was meant to bring awareness of the DOD policy through humor.

"We want to illustrate that we can be just as militant as anyone else," Sullivan said.

Senate approves elections of SGA president, student trustee

By ALEX DERING
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate unanimously approved the elections of David Gagne as president of the Student Government Association, and Kevin Newnan as student trustee.

The elections were clouded with some confusion, however, because of the administration's decision not to recognize the new president and trustee.

In February, the SGA leaders said the student government was ineffective and asked the administration to step in and help restructure it. The Commission on Undergraduate Governance was formed, and the administrators said they would not recognize a new government while helping to restructure the present one.

The new president and trustee, along with several senators, criticized the administration's refusal to recognize the new leaders.

"In face of the resistance," from the administration, Van Tassel said, "I think we did extremely well and it's a privilege to move that we recognize these elections."

Gagne said he was elated that the election was recognized by the senate and criticized the administration for not recognizing the new leaders.

"Considering the ratification was unanimous, the students' desire to chose their own leaders was clearly shown," he said. "I hope this sends a message to Whitmore that the students are a unified force and the administration should recognize the elections."

Newnan also said the unanimous decision by the senate "really emphasized that the issue of recognition is nonsense."

He also said the refusal to recognize the elections by the administration is ridiculous and that every student should be "outraged."

"This shows a great deal of contempt for students if they do not recognize the unanimous ratification of student leaders," he said. "I think it is time for students to get together and tell the administration where they can go."

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Strike.

It's time Umass takes a stand

Every year for the last four, Massachusetts public colleges and universities have faced massive state budget cuts. The damage so far has been real: Fewer and larger classes, ever increasing tuition and fees, decreased public safety and support programs and personnel shortages touch everyone who works or learns here.

Governor Weld has recently unveiled a series of proposals for public higher education that promise to make a bad situation worse. He intends to cut $92 million from an already lean education budget, end all state scholarship programs, close several public colleges and boost tuition by 33 percent.

The first volley in Weld's attack on public education are the so-called "furloughs" he has ordered for state employees. Before yesterday, employees at UMass/Amherst had three options:

- Taking 2-15 (depending on salary) days off without pay,
- Working without pay in return for future vacation days,
- Working, only to have to wait until retirement for compensation.

Yesterday, Bill Weld signed an executive order forcing faculty to choose one of the last two options. Simply, he is demanding that employees work without pay. These are the people — faculty and staff — who have made UMass the fine school it is. They deserve far better than this.

The Weld administration's proposals for higher education and treatment of state workers is an ominous sign of things to come. We must take a stand now around this furlough issue if we hope to stop Bill Weld's destruction of quality, affordable education.

Having declared faculty "critical and essential personnel" — cutting off their only means of legal protest — Governor Weld has left us no choice. We — faculty, staff and students — must strike and shut down this university. Business as usual next week might well seal the coffin of public higher education in Massachusetts.

We realize that this is a serious measure. But Weld's plans for the future of this university call for a serious and unified response. We are all in this together — faculty, staff and students. And together we must put a stop to this madness — No business as usual.

Unsigned editorials reflect the majority opinion of the editorial board.

They are laughing at us

I have a picture of Bill Weld pinned up over my desk at work. He is surrounded by several of his aides and supporters in the Legislature and they are all very happy. In fact, they are laughing up a storm. The caption under the photo explains that the group is rejoicing over the fact that the state Senate had just sustained Governor Weld's veto to allow his Cabinet secretaries to be paid $85,000 while cutting the pay of state employees, who average $24,000. So have you guessed who they were laughing at?

Robb Smith

They are laughing at the higher education community which will see less funding and decreased quality in the months and years to come. They are laughing at human services providers who will handle heavier case loads. They are laughing at state employees who will have to take furloughs and go a fourth year without so much as a cost of living increase. They are laughing at your parents, your brothers and sisters, your uncles and aunts, your friends and their families. They are laughing at you.

I am keeping the photo there to remind me what the governor and his supporters think of my parents and my brother, of the people I grew up with and the people I met here at UMass. I come from the same background that many of the people I know and grew up with do. We come form working class families whose parents worked themselves to death for the privilege of calling themselves middle class and for making our lives better than theirs were. And Governor Weld is laughing at them for their aspirations and effort.

I don't find anything particularly funny about my parents' lives. Both my mother and father worked their way up from poverty to be able to afford a home for their family and college educations for their children. My mother could have gone to college herself but she had to go to work to support her family. Leading a life of seemingly endless poverty turns many good people to alcohol and her father was part of that trap. My dad, with no education to speak of, has been a beat cop for thirty years. A couple of years ago he made about $70,000. He worked 100 hours a week nearly every week that year.

My parents are better people than Governor Weld and his friends could ever be. They worked hard for what they have, too hard. After thirty years of breaking up rapes and fights, of being jeered at kicked by protestors, disgruntled traffic violators, and drunks, my dad is tired. He wants to retire and live on the Cape someday. (Is that really much to ask?) But in order to do that he must continue to work as hard as he has been all the while watching new cops who are my age and have college degrees get paid more than him.

Governor Weld has never had to worry about money in his life. As early as he can remember the governor has had more money in the bank than my parents will ever make in their lifetime. I used to wonder how someone like him could never figure out that he had it easy and should do his best to help other people out. But that is because Bill Weld does not have it easy, he has it criminally. Bill Weld never needed a job, being governor is just a hobby designed to protect the only things he can truly relate to: greed and wealth. Government to him is a tool to make things easier for those who don't need it at the expense of those who do.

I am going to keep that picture in front of me. I am going to remember the men who sat on their fat wallets up on Beacon Hill and laughed at my parents. My father might be too tired to do anything about it. My mother might be too sick to do anything about it. My uncle Kenny will never be fully recovered from Vietnam to do anything about it. My uncle John might be too busy looking for construction work to do anything about it.

But I am going to remember.

Robb Smith is a UMass student

I'm not living on Easy Street

Spring has certainly rushed upon us in the last few days. The warm southern breeze has given me my share of pleasure. Yet an ominous cloud, which has been gathering for the last ten years, has finally let loose its destructive fury.

I know, because last night I had the pleasure of choosing the four days my employer has decided to furlough me. Those four payless days represent a month's rent, six weeks of groceries, a vacation with my kids, or 800 cups of coffee at the People's Market. That may not sound like a great sacrifice, but combine the furlough and three years without a raise and you'll see I'm not living on Easy Street.

The working poor are becoming homeless, the unions have had to make one concession after another, millions find themselves without jobs, and our infrastructure crumbles. Meanwhile, our national government can find hundreds of billions of dollars to spend on defense contractors, war, savings and loan bailouts, and huge tax cuts for the wealthy. Yeah, these are tough times for Massachusetts. So why complain? Everyone is hurting. If that were only true.

Our wonderful Governor Weld believes the cure for Massachusetts lies in massive cuts in services and tax breaks for wealthy individuals and corporations. They call it the trickle down theory. I call it the "Pisson" theory, because the losers are workers, the poor, and the middle class. Do you see President Bush and Governor Weld, or their advisors, at the soup kitchens? Are the S & L crooks standing in the unemployment lines? Have any corporate executives taken a pay cut in recent memory?

The financial crisis that our state faces will not be solved until the people of this country decide to shift gears. Ten years of giveaways to the wealthy have left the rest of us paying more taxes and receiving less services. The solution, as some have suggested, is not to dismantle the government, but to form a government that ensures that the great wealth created by our country is shared equitably and justly.

Hundreds of students urge action against budget cuts and furloughs

The so-called furloughs that Governor Weld has ordered for state employees are a dangerous beginning of a misguided policy. For a public education system that has sustained years of damaging budget cuts, this indicates a sharp turn for the worse. As a university — students, faculty, and staff — we cannot accept this "furlough" nor any other form of budget cut.

Therefore, we, the undersigned — your students — urge all university faculty and staff to schedule your furloughs together and decline to work on those days. We understand the responsibility you feel to continue working and teaching. However, if we do not take a strong stand now, there may not be a university to teach at tomorrow.

As students, we understand the need not to participate in the destruction of public higher education. This non-participation must begin with Governor Weld's so-called furlough plan. No pay — No work. No budget cuts — No way.

468 UMass students signed this statement

300 declare: 'We value education'

Rumor has it that certain members of our state government feel public higher education is not valued by our community. This bias may be held because most of our leadership has origins in private education. It follows that this is the reason public universities have carried a disproportionate burden of balancing the state's budget. Our opinion is that public higher education is being dismantled. In fact, if all levels of government had been cut at the rate the universities have been cut, the state would have a 4 billion dollar surplus.

We, the undersigned do value education. We know it produces people who become contributing members of the community. We feel UMass has been disproportionately burdened in balancing the budget. We don't support layoffs of state employees at UMass.

THE LAND OF DO-AS-YOU-PLEASE

They're coming after the wrong people

During debate over Governor Weld's plan to furlough state employees, opponents who questioned the fairness of instituting furloughs while pay raises of $10,000-plus are granted to the cabinet officers were accused of engaging in class warfare. In truth, the ones guilty of class warfare are Weld and his upper-class cronies. They are the ones trying to solve the state's fiscal problems on the backs of the working class. Asking state workers to take furloughs is only the most conspicuous of their plans for working people.

The governor has engaged in other attacks on state workers. He has refused to fund the meager three percent pay increases bargained in good faith by workers who have not had a raise in three years. He is also trying to dramatically increase the cost of health care for state workers. Although state employees are the group of workers now bearing the brunt of Weld's attack, attacks on other workers are forthcoming.

Under Weld's "Emergency Plan for Fiscal Recovery," municipal workers face layoffs and furloughs due to the cutbacks in local aid (cutbacks he promised would not be forthcoming). Building trades workers face an attempt to modify the prevailing wage and the subfiled bidding statute. Firefighters face elimination of the Cancer Prevention Law. Education workers, on state and local levels, face layoffs and furloughs, cost shifting and the elimination of binding arbitration. And all working people face potential cuts in unemployment benefits. Although this is only the tip of the iceberg, from these examples it is clear that the working class is under heavy attack from Weld and his elitist cronies.

At the same time Weld is asking workers to solve his budget problems, he is giving all sorts of tax breaks to corporations and the upper class. First, he overturned the tax on corporate services. Now he is trying to pass a huge package of corporate tax breaks including elimination of the capital gains tax. These are further examples of Weld siding with the upper class over the working class.

It is up to working people to let Weld and his aristocratic cronies know that while the blue bloods started this class war, working people have only begun to fight. The most immediate action people can take is to come to the statewide Labor rally at Boston City Hall Plaza Saturday April 13 at 11 a.m. A large turnout will send a message to Weld and his cronies that they can't balance the budget on the back of the working class.

For the long run, working people need to mobilize and organize. They can do this by getting involved in with their union or a group such as the Tax Equity Alliance of Massachusetts. They also need to hold state politicians, like those who sustained Weld's veto of the pay raises, accountable when they participate in attacks on the working class.

Faculty members: We need to fight together to save education

We are writing to represent concerned faculty at a time of great uncertainty for public higher education in Massachusetts and here at UMass/Amherst in particular. The governor has imposed a "furlough" on all state workers, including your faculty and many if not most of the people whose work makes this university function. And funding for public higher education will take another severe financial hit in next year's budget.

This is not news to anybody in the University community who has been remotely conscious during the last few months, and some of what we're going to ask of you as the students, whose education we're committed to, will sound repetitious. This does not make it any less important; the time is critical for the future of this university and therefore your education and that of those who will follow you.

Strong action must be taken and taken immediately. First, encourage your parents to write and call their legislators and the governor's office to protest the assault on funding of public higher education in this commonwealth. Second, get involved yourself in writing, calling, and lobbying your legislators as students whose education depends on the restored and continued support for public higher education. For those of you who have already gone through steps one and two above, repeat these efforts because it is important and necessary not to let up.

For our part, the faculty are also involved in these activities and are preparing to implement other activities that you should be aware of. We will be asking you in our classes to address envelopes to your parents so that we may send them informational letters similar to this one. We will also be organizing campus-wide activities for next Wednesday and Thursday, April 17 and 18; we ask that you participate as fully as possible and support us in our endeavor to call attention to what is occurring in public higher education. There will be organizational meetings on Friday April 12 and Tuesday April 16 at noon in the Campus Center. Please attend if you can.

Above all, we want you to know that it is your education and the education of those who follow you that we're committed to and fighting for. It is not clear what will happen in the future, but our response to the present situation and what we see impending must be clear. Student support is an essential component.

Union initiates anti-furlough suit

Our members received furlough notification this week. In response, the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees has taken the following action:

AFSCME Council 93 filed two lawsuits on Monday to stop the furloughs. One lawsuit was filed on behalf of Alliance workers, the other lawsuit filed was behalf of our bargaining coalition. We hope to have a response within a week.

I am filing a class action grievance on behalf of our membership that maintains that furloughs are a breach of our contract.

We are sponsoring a bus to the labor rally in Boston this Saturday to protest the furloughs and the Weld budget.

When forced to submit your furlough form to management individuals are encouraged to add the statement, "this was signed under duress."

Advice and input on how to further combat this situation is welcome. Suggestions should be sent to the AFSCME Local 1776 office.

Richard Coach
President, AFSCME Council 93

Don't let the lights go out

We were criminals by virtue of our ancestry. Guilty by association. Instead of being kidnapped in the darkness of the night, we walked out at noontime with our families and all we could carry. After a brief look around the town in which we, our parents and their parents had lived in relative peace, we boarded a sealed train car. We were told we were bound for resettlement; but by this time some of us already knew what that meant. One of six places would be our destination: Lublin, Sobibor, Chelmno, Belzec, Treblinka or Auschwitz.

Mark B. Adler

It all started with polemics against us designed to rally the Germans behind the party: We undermined the German war effort in 1918. Our control of the banks destroyed the economy. We were interbreeding with Germans to pollute their race. We brought Germany to its knees and soon would take over the world.

The party came to power in 1933 and their man became Chancellor. The people loved the party and millions of them followed its slanderous rhetoric. Our stores were boycotted, our children removed from school and our people forbidden to mingle with the Germans. In 1935 official and legal measures segregated us from the Germans, and we were officially defined as a race. Thousands of us emigrated from Germany, to the delight of the party and the fear of the world. Our people were restricted from most of the world; even the United States closed its doors to us. In November 1938, fifty-one years to the very day before the Berlin Wall would come down, the party organized a pogrom against us. Our holy buildings were burned down. Our shops were destroyed. Our people were beaten on the streets and murdered.

Within a year, Poland was invaded and the war began. Even though many of our Polish brethren fought in the army against Germany, the Poles worked with their occupiers to move us into cramped ghettos where food was scarce, medicine was unknown and death was common. Despite their inhuman treatment of us, it was still a policy of segregation and expulsion.

It all changed in July 1941 when Germany attacked the Soviets. Behind the advancing troops were the Einsatzgruppen. In Poland, the Ukraine, Lithuania, and western Russia, we were marched from our homes, lined up on the edge of a ditch, and shot down by their firing squads. As our dead bodies fell into the pit a new line of victims were already in place. Over one million civilians were murdered in this way alone. After several months, a new process of extermination was developed as the Final Solution of the 'Jewish Problem.' We were packed into vans into which the exhaust was channelled. After our bodies were discarded, our families were billed for the transportation. This method was refined into the gas chambers in the six extermination centers.

The gas chambers, many the same size of a high school gymnasium, had fake shower heads installed. Hundreds of us, naked, were walked in, thinking we were going to be washed. Once the door was sealed a moan rose up from the crowd as Zyclon B pellets were dropped in. As the cyanide pervaded the room, we fought for survival. Our bodies were found in a cone with each person climbing the pile, trying to get a breath of air. The plaster in the ceiling had holes in it from our fingernails. Our dead bodies were burned in a furnace. In the surrounding towns the people claimed ignorance of the camps, but an ominous blue film covered their windows.

We were deported from Germany, Hungary, Greece, Norway, France and other occupied counties. With the rare exception of Denmark, which bravely ferried us to neutral Sweden, all the other occupied nations collaborated with Germany. By 1945, six million of us were dead. Most of us in Europe were gone.

This did not happen in the Dark Ages. This was the twentieth century. No country was innocent. By 1943, the US had photographs of the Auschwitz crematoria. Nothing can be compared to the Holocaust. No other atrocity of any people, in any land, in any time can parallel the systematic extermination of an entire people. In the memory of these people, we light candles. Don't let the lights go out.

May the source of peace bring peace to all those who mourn, and for all Israel.

Republican Weld is a foe of capitalism

What has happened to those staunch and upright defenders of capitalism? Has the Republican Club succumbed to that age old American virtue of political opportunism; my party right or wrong but my party. The Republican governor of this fair state has levelled an ominous attack on one of the most sacred canons of the capitalist system — equal pay for equal work. What the governor's furlough plan amounts to is forced labor with no compensation — an interim slave labor program to cut the state deficit.

The capitalist system is under attack and the Republican Club remains silent. The principle of Adam Smith — that specifies a comparable return to labor and capital for the role in production i.e. wages and profits — is under attack by our Republican governor.

Now that principle is being set aside. The wage contract between the state and its employees, the lawfully constituted agreement that binds the state to pay appropriate compensation for work performed, has been illegally 'torn under foot' by the state.

While the Republican protectors of the money elites are cheering the demise of state socialism with its rising unemployment in Eastern Europe, these same people are trampling on the promises to wage labor here.

What these people hope to accomplish is the development of a two tier wage system: An implicit tax scheme or furlough plan for the public sector, while wealthy (private sector) individuals receive tax breaks via capital gains tax cuts and lower social security tax rates. The opportunism of Weld or his alternative, John Silber, only typifies the reactionary nature of the political environment today. Policies that have brought this state to the brink of bankruptcy will be compounded by the attempt to reduce the deficit off the backs of state workers, comparable to the Savings and Loan robbery which will be paid for by U.S. taxpayers for generations to come.

Not to respond to this blatant violation of human and legal rights only emboldens these reactionary politicians to take further steps in reducing the scope and power of worker rights in this state. Show your support for state workers' rights by contacting your representatives now.

Film depicts suffering of Jews during WWII

By MICHAEL R. LINSKEY
Collegian Correspondent

The Hillel House screened a movie Tuesday night which illustrated the plight of Jews incarcerated in a World War II Nazi prison camp. The film was the second of several events commemorating Holocaust Memorial Week.

Lodz Ghetto, a documentary film shown to 35 people in the Hillel television lounge, was based on diaries and monographs written by Jews imprisoned there. The film detailed the 1939 Nazi occupation of Lodz, Poland, and the subsequent execution of thousands of Jews.

In early 1940, Nazi forces encircled Lodz with barbed wire and forced the Jews to labor in the Nazi war effort. Chaim Rumkowski was appointed by the Third Reich as chairman at Lodz, and he was forced to deport increasingly large numbers of Jews to death camps in the ensuing years.

When the Germans began the "de-Jewing" of Prague, thousands were relocated to Lodz. Consequently, thousands more were sent to death camps. Public executions for such offenses as "causing defects in machinery" were undertaken in Lodz as examples to the newcomers of the consequences of causing disturbances.

Food rations decreased due to population increases, yet the Jews were expected to work harder; those who couldn't handle the strain were shipped to their deaths. Worse, newborn babies and sickly older Jews were taken from the hospital to death camps.

"The same fate awaits us all," wrote one woman in her diary. "If not today, then later. Tomorrow. No one is safe anymore."

Thousands died each year from starvation, and the Germans continued to inflict physical and mental abuses on the Jews. Rumkowski was forced to sacrifice increasing numbers to death camps like Auschwitz and Chelmno.

"There is no justice in the world, especially in the ghetto," despaired one imprisoned Jewish woman.

In May, 1944, Allied forces stormed French beaches and word of an eventual Nazi defeat buoyed Jewish spirits. However, the ghetto was ordered evacuated in July. Workers were told to labor for the Reich, since invading Russian forces would surely be cruel to those who had "aided" the Nazi war effort.

Even those who agreed to do so, however, were sent to slaughterhouses. No Jew was to be spared — not even Rumkowski and his family survived.

More Holocaust awareness urged

By MICHAEL R. LINSKEY
Collegian Correspondent

Two professors and a student who helped to organize a week of activities at Hillel House in remembrance of Holocaust Memorial Week said more must be done to increase awareness.

Dr. James Young, professor of English and Judaic Studies, Yehudit Heller, professor of Judaic Studies and program director of Hillel, and Jennie Steward, a member of the Hillel committee that organized Holocaust Memorial Week, said that while they were impressed with the turnout at the week's activities, more people should learn about the Holocaust so that it will never be forgotten.

Young, a scholar-in-residence at Hillel, does "whatever they ask me to do" to heighten Holocaust awareness. This week, he hosted a discussion after the movie "Lodz Ghetto" at Hillel and spoke about how every country and culture remembers the Holocaust last night at Memorial Hall.

Young, 39, has also written two books on the historic repression of Jews: "Writing and Rewriting the Holocaust" (1988), and "The Texture of Memory," due out next year.

Heller, who teaches a class in Israeli poetry, said she was distressed by the apparent lack of concern about the Holocaust.

"I feel there is apathy," she said. "Here is a horrible trauma that affected almost everyone in the world in some way, and there is apathy."

"I would expect that people will just come and say 'this is a number one priority, how can we make sure [Holocaust Memorial Week] is carried out?'" she said.

Heller said she was grateful that the five-person committee for Holocaust Memorial Week worked so diligently in organizing activities, yet expressed a yearning for more widespread involvement.

"I don't think it's good to see a five-person committee — and not 20 — planning the whole week," Heller said. "I'm very proud of what's happened because it was completely planned by students...but I want more. If it's three people, 40 people, 150 people, I want them to get involved."

Steward agreed that apathy hindered student participation.

"A lot of people would say that it's not their problem if they're not Jewish," she said. "I think it's very important for Jews and non-Jews alike just because it's something that happened."

Steward, an 18-year-old forestry major, stressed the importance of the Memorial Service known as Yom-Ha Shoah, which translates loosely to "Day of the Disaster." The service will be held from 12:30 to 1:30 today in the Cape Cod Lounge.

"This is an international remembrance day," she said. "There will be people with heads bowed, there will be candles lit for the dead, and I call people to come," said Heller of the service.

"Bells will ring which will say to the people 'this is a moment of silence...a reminder of what kind of day it is today.'"

Guide to UMASS bigotry

I think it is time to once again reveal to the students and faculty of the University of Massachusetts that this institution of higher education is chock-full of the most racist, hateful, so-called human beings ever to be hatched.

These people are the ones who go around with nothing better to do than write racially-offensive words on the elevators and chalk boards in the Kennedy Tower in Southwest.

These are the types of people who hung confederate flags at Harvard University.

These are the people who create stupid-assed comic strips that bring humor only to those who created them and to people who are stuck in the same sick state of mind. (Yeah, this means Frotter)

These people are the ones who are going to call my room after reading this article and call me "Nigger," because they are not educated enough to write an editoral about their unjustified hatred.

The telephone serves as their shield from big bad Sondra Sutton, and you all know how intimidating I look.

I think it is about time for the minority students off UMASS to wake up and smell the rotten smell these bastards reek. If these people are aware that you are aware of their prejudice, then, they will whisper when they make racist statments.

Sondra Sutton

If you let someone know that you are aware of their racist attitudes, they will probably become frightened. How do I know that they will become frightened? Because I never see them write "Nigger" on the elevator, yet the words are there. Also, remember that it took five hundred of them to beat up four unarmed black men in the Southwest incident in 1986.

Remember the person in grade school who talked really bad around his boys, or her girls, but when they were alone they would not say a word? Well that is how these prejudiced bastards act.

They talk all their shit to people who talk about the same shit, but they won't say shit when they are alone.

If you are prejudiced, go to the Malcolm X center, New Africa House, or just find a group of the meanest minorities you can see, and tell them what you write on the elevators in secret. Don't go to the Republican club; they like to hear that stuff. Challenge yourself — talk to the person you are actually talking about.

However, I doubt if you will be able to walk away afterward. See, I am doing it. My name is in the article; I wrote this column, and will write more like it.

I am telling you, and you know who you are, that you need to stop and think about why you are doing such stupid things, like writing words in the elevators. Then address the person directly, not with your boys, not with your girls, but by yourself. You wrote the words, now let's see if you can be even more of an asshole and say them.

In my conclusion I would like to ask the people of color on this campus who have to put up with this hype, to have pity on these poor, pitiful souls. Show them the errors of their ways. Show them that we are wonderful people, but we will not put up with this undercover bull.

And remember, even if they do not listen, even if your words of wisdom go in one ear and out the other, always remember that Brothers gonna work it out.

ALANA presents...

By DORIS CLEMMONS
Collegian Correspondent

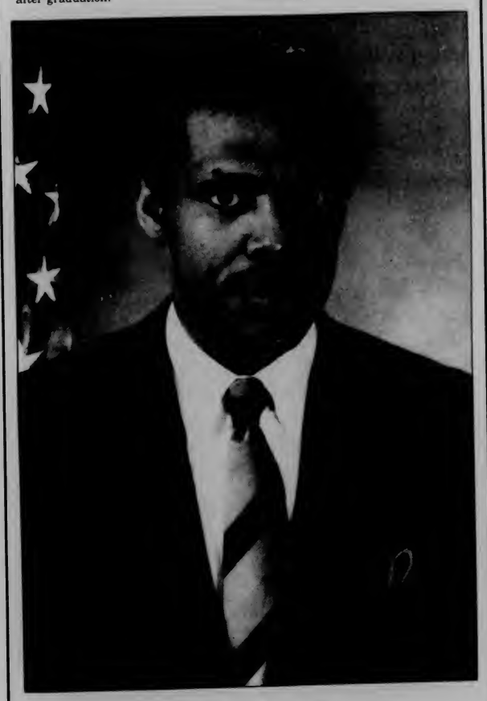
Leonard L. Haynes III, assistant secretary of post-secondary education in the U.S. Department of Education, will appear April 21 at the University of Massachusetts in room 1009 of the Campus Center.

Haynes will be the guest speaker at the second-annual awards banquet held by the African, Latino, Asian, and Native American (ALANA) Honor Society at the University.

He will discuss the future success for students of color in higher education after graduation.

In his current post, Haynes is responsible for student aid, debt collection, the Fund for the Improvement of Post-Secondary Education, the White House Initative on Historically Black Colleges and Universities, and programs in higher education dealing with fellowships and developing institutions.

Haynes, a native of Boston, has held a number of political, educational offices. He received his bachelor's degree in history from Southern University in Louisiana; his master's degree in American History from Carnegie-Mellon University in Pennsylvania; and his doctorate in Higher Education Administration from Ohio State University.



Leonard L. Haynes III

Yo what's up?

There will be a meeting tonight at 9:15 at the New Africa House. The meeting is to discuss problems that have recently occurred here at the University of Massachusetts. Students of color are urged to attend.

On Saturday, April 13, there will be a party at Amherst College in the Drew House from 11 p.m. to 2 a.m. Music will be provided by D.J. Knock Out of T.X.

The Funk-o-Thon will be brought to you once again by the Black Mass Communications party project on Saturday, May 4, in the Student Union Ballroom. Doors open at 10 p.m. College ID is required. Music provided by the BMCP ALLSTARS.

The Division of Academic Support Services is planning to hold an ALANA Registered Student Organization fair on Monday, Sept. 16, 1991. The purpose of this fair is to introduce first-year students to organizations pertaining to topics or activities relevant to the ALANA community. For more information contact the Academic Support Services.

At long last, on January 17, 1945, Russian forces liberated Lodz, rescuing the relative few who had survived by gathering in sewers and other hideouts.

When the film ended, a brief discussion was led by Dr. James Young, professor of English and Judaic Studies. Young said the still photographs and footage used in the film were shot by Germans who wished to justify their execution of the Jews by proving how sickly the Jews really were. Thus, only pictures of the most haggard and disease ridden Jews were shown.

The diaries and photos, Young said, "are valuable because they show how the people viewed their situation."

Young was scheduled to present a slide show and talk about the holocaust Wednesday night at Memorial Hall.

mate Dave Stewart is batting .426 with 10 runs batted in. Jeff Neijadlik checks in at an even .400 average.

Pitching seems to be the weak link in UNH's game. The Wildcat mound staff is sporting an unenviable 5.94 earned run average. Only Chris Schott has an ERA under 4.00 [3.00]. Schott leads the team in strikeouts as well, with 21.

While Stone doesn't take UNH lightly, he was confident that the Minutemen can continue their winning ways against their local rivals.

"We've beaten them every time since I've been here," he said. "The guys get up for it because it is a regional game, and they have a nice place to play."

"We'd like to get some people [players who haven't seen much playing time] in," said Stone of today's game plan.

Jeff Toothaker and John Russell are both slated to start for the Minutemen this afternoon. Toothaker has pitched well of late after changing his delivery style from overhand to sidearmed.

Tom Bolton and Dana Kiecker will be battling for the fifth starting job. So far it seems that Bolton should get the job. We will have to wait and see what happens when the time comes. Morgan seems to be leaning toward Kiecker.

John Dopson is coming back strong through his rehabilitation and it would great to see him help out later in the season.

The bullpen is somewhat suspect. Dennis Lamp is coming off a tough season. Young pitchers Joe Hesketh and Jeff Gray had good springs allowing only four earned runs in 30 innings combined. Jeff Reardon doesn't have the same velocity that he used to and is relying on more finesse than overpowering hitters.

UMass recycling program workers receive award for their innovative program.

UM recycling program honored

The UMass Recycling Program has received the "Commission Three Model Program Award" from The American College Personnel Association for its innovative recycling programs.

Every year, the association, a national organization which deals with residential services, honors recycling programs at colleges and universities. This year there were 31 winners.

"It's very exciting to get some recognition," said Sherill Baldwin, the program coordinator. "I just feel people are not aware that there are students on campus who care about recycling and that we are doing something about it."

Joe Mills, an ACPA spokesperson, said in a telephone interview from North Carolina, that this award does not mean the programs are the best in the country, but they are models for other schools to try to implement on their own campuses.

Cheryl Brush, the education coordinator for the UMass program, said she hopes this award will attract greater funding for the program, which sponsors the Blue Box Brigade, a campuswide recycling competition.

The Promotions Coordinator for the recycling program, Rochelle Chambless, said she was elated by the award. "It especially felt good because the town of Amherst and the University itself, doesn't really recognize our program," Chambless said.

41 OUT OF 50 STATES HAVE OPTIONAL RETIREMENT PLANS.

WHY NOT MASSACHUSETTS?

Optional Retirement Plans (ORPs) are an accepted part of American public higher education. Together they form a nationwide, portable pension system, allowing academic mobility — which enriches experiences, fosters the exchange of ideas and learning, and promotes the cultural and ethnic diversity of our institutions and their communities.

Massachusetts needs a portable pension system in order to compete with other states for high-quality faculty and administrators during the current financial crisis and in the future. A strong public university system is essential for Massachusetts' long-term economic health.

WHY NOT HAVE AN OPTIONAL RETIREMENT PLAN IN MASSACHUSETTS?

The proposed Optional Retirement Plan is carefully designed so that it will not increase pension costs for the Commonwealth of Massachusetts or its citizens. It will not have an adverse effect on the Massachusetts Retirement System, nor will it require additional administrative personnel.

TIAA-CREF is working with sponsors of legislation that would allow the Board of Regents to establish an Optional Retirement Plan in Massachusetts. In the last year alone, five states have implemented ORPs, and California is in the process of doing so now. Currently, ORP-type plans are offered in 41 out of 50 states. And TIAA-CREF is the only organization chosen in all 41 of those states.

TIAA-CREF: THE POPULAR CHOICE

TIAA-CREF is building a sound financial future for more than 1,000,000 people at over 4,500 institutions of higher education and research. And over 200,000 retirees are now enjoying the benefits of their TIAA-CREF annuities. People just like you. Here are a few good reasons why:

Expertise — TIAA and CREF are nonprofit organizations focused exclusively on the education and research community. We pioneered pensions for your profession and we have been leading the way ever since.

Full Investment Choices — Sound retirement investing requires both security and growth: security, so the resources are sure to be there when the time comes; and growth, so your retirement income will be sufficient for the kind of retirement you want. TIAA-CREF provides you with all of the investment choices you need — for growth, diversification and safety.

Performance — The CREF Stock Account outperformed the mutual fund industry averages for the last one-, five-, and ten-year periods. The CREF Money Market Account has shown excellent returns since its inception, outperforming the industry average since May of 1988.*

Security — Your future is protected by the largest retirement system in the world. We currently manage over $84 billion in pension assets. Because of its stability, sound investments, and overall financial strength, TIAA has received the highest possible ratings from all three of the industry's leading independent rating agencies: A+ (Superior) from A.M. Best Co., Aaa from Moody's, and AAA from Standard & Poor's.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Influential people will approve your ideas if you choose the right words. Be diplomatic. Give your loved ones extra encouragement. Romance is on a delightful course.

TAURUS (April 20- May 20): You learn a valuable lesson from an authority figure. Avoid engaging in power plays. Team effort is needed to put over an important deal. Spiritual values help you get the job done.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Appealing to a wider audience will increase your income and prestige. Upgrading your home will add to its resale value. A heart-to-heart talk with loved one will solve a recurring problem.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Let your talents shine where more people can see them. Present an innovative idea to higher-ups. Avoid acting secretive around your colleagues; it will make them suspicious. Outline a new budget.

LEO (July 23-Aug 22): A good day to catch up on paperwork. Seize an opportunity to change your work schedule to accommodate unexpected jobs. Relax at home tonight with a good book or favorite video.

VIRGO (Aug 23-Sept 22): Sharing your knowledge with VIPs will make them trust you more. Skipping a social event might be wise even though you feel you should attend. Let your loving heart embrace your relatives.

LIBRA (Sept 23-Oct 22): Privacy remains an important consideration. Your financial ideas are right on track. Romance could have its ups and downs. Be sure to attend a sporting event this weekend, but don't be upset if you miss Clemens by one day. Buy your girlies beer.

SCORPIO (Oct 23-Nov 21): Everything is coming up roses! Loved ones agree you are special. Use your strong bargaining position to promote a pet project. A gift or timely apology will salvage a relationship.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov 22-Dec 21): Your image is very important where the public is concerned. Be careful not to act high and mighty. A long-cherished goal moves within reach. Do not neglect your loved ones' emotional needs.

AQUARIUS (Jan 20-Feb 18): A commitment can be made without reservation. Join a team. A romantic attraction grows stronger. A good evening for socializing or athletics. Live it up!

PISCES (Feb 19-March 20): The tides of prosperity begin to subside. Rechart your course. Keep everyone's interests at heart. A lawsuit will be settled in your favor. Host a small celebration at home tonight. Get well soon, so you can enjoy weenies and beer on Sunday.

Wajda (.296 BA, 5 RBIs), and Chris Woodman (.298, 13 RBIs) who has five doubles, one triple and one homerun.

For the Minutewomen, their bats are still smoking from their doubleheader against Rutgers University. Even though they only scored three runs against B.C., the Minutewomen were smacking the ball deep, but the Eagles outfield were in the right place at the right time. B.C. centerfield Chelsea Dixon robbed the Minutewomen of some base hits, including one homerun which Dixon snagged just before going over the fence.

Shortstop Barbara Marean still leads the Minutewomen with a .475 batting average in 61 at-bats. She has four doubles, three triples and two home runs. Holly Aprile, second on the team with a .419 average in 62 at bats has six doubles and two triples.

Marean, leading the team in RBIs (15), also leads the Minutewomen with 29 hits for the year. Aprile is second in hits with 26 followed by catcher Cherie DellAnno with 25. Dellano also has the highest slugging percentage (.778 in 65 at bats).

shots the next day to Tom Watson.

Tom Weiskopf, former Tour star during the 1970s, unfortunately has the claim to the golf Hall of Shame by scoring a 13, the highest total on any par-3 or par-4 in the history of the Masters. He put four balls into the water before getting his fifth ball on the green to two-putt for his 13.

Crossing the Hogan bridge, (named after Ben Hogan's sizzling 274 four round total in his 1953 Masters win), only three men have been lucky enough to shoot a hole-in-one on the 12th. Claude Harman did it in 1947, William Houndman, an amateur in 1959, and Curtis Strange in 1988. Strange after taking his ball from the hole, threw it into the pond.

Fuzzy Zoeller, a former Masters and U.S. Open Champion, has his own thoughts on the 12th. In last March's issue of Sports Illustrated, Zoeller said, "all the gods of golf are down in that corner. If you beat that hole, you better give it something."

The tenth hole is also the beginning of where Nicklaus started his charge for his sixth title in 1986. Five shots behind the leader at the beginning of the final round, Nicklaus and his whale-sized putter scorched the back nine in seven under par.

Playing in his 33rd consecutive Masters tournament, Nicklaus cannot be counted out in any tournament as he just defended his title at the Senior PGA Tradition tournament this past weekend, making up 12 shots in the last two rounds to win by one over Phil Rodgers and Jim Colbert. He has not had a victory on the regular tour since his 1986 win at Augusta.

In these majors, any one has a chance at victory, but the winner usually has a little experience under his belt to combat the pressure. Of course, Nicklaus was only 23 when he won his first Masters in 1963.

Mike Donald, a younger tour player will be looking to make amends for his demise at last year's Masters, going off the leader board after taking the first-round lead. Also making Donald hungry for a major title is his loss to Hale Irwin at last year's U.S. Open playoff. Look for him to contend.

Nick Faldo, last year's British Open winner, also a heavy favorite, is looking to become the only player in Master's history to win three consecutive times, winning his last two in sudden death against Scott Hoch and 1986 U.S.Open champ, Raymond Floyd.

Other players who have their game tuned up include last week's winner of the Player's Championship, Steve Elkington, Paul Azinger, still hungry for a victory after being disqualified from the Doral Ryder tournament this year, and Tom Watson, who shot a 65 during the third round of last week's TPC.

My pick, Nicklaus. Why not? They already have his jacket size.

Sox ready to defend title

By JOE DEGLORIA
Collegian Correspondent

All of the splendor of Major League Baseball has returned. The players are now making more money than ever before — for example, the Boston Red Sox have the fourth highest average salary in the majors. The average Sox player takes home $1.8 million.

With all of this money can the Red Sox win it all? They had better.

It was very uplifting to see Jack Clark unload on a Dave Steib meatball for a grand slam on Monday. One can dream for hours about the Red Sox lineup this year. Boston's ability to score a lot of runs is going to give the pitching staff a lot of breathing room. Let's hope they can keep it up.

Mike Greenwell is healthy and with Ellis Burks, Tom Brunansky and Clark there is a good chance that we will see a lot more home runs this season.

You can't forget Tim Naehring, who was given the nod to start at shortstop by Manager Joe Morgan. Naehring had back trouble last year, but if he can stay healthy he is my favorite to win the Rookie of the Year award.

Jody Reed is one of the best second basemen in the Majors and possesses a good deal of pop in his bat. Reed was tied with George Brett for the league lead in doubles last year (45).

Carlos Quintana hit well enough (.288) in spring training to fight off Mo Vaughn. Vaughn impressed some, and even though he begins the season in Triple-A Pawtucket, he should be stalking Fenway Park soon.

Tony Pena will work with John Marzano at the catching position this year. Marzano hit over .300 this spring and it's great to see him do well. John's had it pretty rough the last few years.

Not that Pena dosen't figure to contribute. He proved himself as a team leader and a good handler of pitchers last season, and there's no reason that shouldn't continue.

Mike Marshall made a lot of noise on and off the bench this spring. Sox General Manager Lou Gorman was unable to trade the disgruntled first baseman, so Marshall will serve as a power hitter off the bench for the Sox.

Even with all of the offense the Sox can generate, let's hope the pitching staff can come through. Matt Young will be under the watchful eye of everybody. Young had a rough spring (1-2, 5.67 ERA) and it will be interesting to see if he can do it. Young lost a league leading 18 games last year for Seattle.

Roger Clemens rose a lot eyebrows when he signed his lucrative contract. There will be a great deal of pressure upon him to perform from the Boston fans.

Greg Harris earned himself a second starter slot last year. He complained of fatigue late in '90 — it's going to be a test for him this year.

The Red Sox have the two ERA leaders from both leagues in Clemens and former Astro Danny Darwin. The Sox hope that Darwin will be successful as a fourth

Millon nets five goals as Gorillas thump Providence, 16-4

By ADRIEN MATT
Collegian Staff

Despite a stick check, Mark Millon scored five goals and two assists against Providence College as the University of Massachusetts lacrosse team beat the PC Friars 16-4.

Referee Dave Leate called for Millon's stick to be measured between the first and second quarters. The head of his stick was measured at¼ of an inch wider than regulation. He was subsequently penalized for the first three minutes of the second quarter in which Danny Bianco assisted Brian Kirkwood for the only PC goal of that quarter.

The Friars (3-3) failed to score more than one goal per quarter. By comparison, UMass (3-2) scored five goals per quarter, excepting the second. Rick Senatore assisted Hugh O'Callaghan at 6:17 in the second.

Jim McAleavey added three goals and one assist to his career stats. The freshmen attack was impressive, adding five goals and one assist. Mike Orton netted three goals, all within the fourth quarter. Wes Depp netted his first collegiate goal at 4:45 in the third quarter then scored again in the fourth assisted by Joe Cahill at 14:16.

PC's Ed Loiselle scored a team-high two goals and Steve Iannuccilli had a team-high two assists.

The UMass goal was shared by Ted Kellerman and Ray Suris who played in the first and second halves, respectively. Each finished the game with seven saves and two goals in 35 shots on goal.

PC's Rich Dunphy had eight saves in 34 shots on goal.

The Friars outfaced UMass 12-10 and beat them to 48 groundballs, compared to the Gorillas' 36. UMass continuted it's man-up slump, capitalizing only once in five opportunities, while PC went 2-for-7.

Matt Garber and Mario Guaglianone failed to make the trip due to illness and injury. Guaglianone was nursing a strained calf muscle.

Garber said he began to feel ill about 4 a.m. yesterday and checked into University Health Services at 9 a.m. After undergoing blood tests, he said he it was determined by UHS personnel that, although he tested negative for mononucleosis, he should remain in Amherst to rest. He was administered penicillin and, by 7 p.m., said he felt better.

He said the personnel told him he would undergo more tests and a check up today to see if the sickness had advanced further. If diagnosed with mono, he would forgo the remainder of the lacrosse season for fear of rupturing his spleen during participation in a contact sport.

UM softball (14-7), baseball (9-15-1) prepare for doubleheaders

• 20th ranked Minutewomen ready for UConn

By CHRIS MIRACLE
Collegian Staff

After enjoying a short home stint against Boston College on Tuesday, the University of Massachusetts softball team hits the road again, beginning a four game road trip with a double header at Connecticut today at 3 p.m.

The Huskies are currently 16-7 and after the new national rankings have made their way up to the 23rd spot. The Minutewomen sport a 14-7 record and are currently ranked 20th in the country.

The Huskies come into today's doubleheader after splitting a pair with the Rhode Island yesterday at Storrs, Conn. The winning pitcher for UConn was Pat Conlan who pitched a 2-0 shutout over the Rams. URI won the first game 2-1.

Conlan, a righthander (8-3, 1.11 ERA), has pitched three shutouts so far this season. Kim Mizesko (8-6, .59 ERA), also a righthander took the loss in the first game against the Rams. Only a junior, Mizesko comes into today's game as the Huskies all-time strikeout leader with 280.

Seven of Mizesko's eight victories have been shutouts. Conlan and Mizesko's shutouts have come from teams as Florida A.& M., Hofstra University, St. Johns' University, Yale, Central Connecticut, Brown University, URI, and Nichol's State College. Mizesko hurled no-hitters against Nichols and Central Connecticut.

The big guns for the Huskies that could keep the Minutewomen outfielders busy include freshman Monica Early who leads the team with a .329 batting average, Chris

• Minutemen seek to avoid letdown vs. UNH

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

A quick comparison of baseball teams from the University of New Hampshire and the University of Massachusetts gives one the impression that the 9-15-1 Minutemen should romp over the Wildcats, 7-7 overall and losers of five straight.

But with an exhilarating 11-4 win over Conneticut behind them and four important Atlantic 10 Conference games against St. Joseph's ahead of them this weekend, there is the danger of a letdown this afternoon in Durham, N.H, as the Minutemen face UNH in a doubleheader. The first game starts at 1:00 pm.

"I hope not," quipped UMass coach Mike Stone about any possible letdowns. "I think our players realize that we have to play well day-in, day-out to make the A-10 playoffs."

Stone also noted that the win over UConn is likely to spur the Minutemen on, rather than give them a false sense of security.

"We've been swinging the bats well, and once you start doing that, it's easy to get them swinging again," he said.

The Wildcats, currently mired in a five-game losing streak, most recently dropped three straight to Northeastern and are 0-4 against Division I opposition.

However, UNH begins a five game home stand against UMass today, and has shown offensive potential. The Wildcats are batting .306 as a team, and three players have batting averages over .400.

Outfielder Joe Batchelder leads UNH with a .452 batting average, while team-

Golf fans set for Masterful weekend

By CHRIS MIRACLE
Collegian Staff

The azaleas are in bloom in Augusta, Georgia.

To many a golf nut everywhere, that means one thing, The Masters tournament, the first major of the year for professional tour players, is just around the corner.

Today in fact, probably as you are reading this column, (yes, a golf column in the Collegian), Augusta National's fairways are already being paced by players with visions of a green jacket to add to their wardrobe,

Chris Miracle

If only we could turn back time to all of the great moments which this tournament has provided. The golf gods have wreaked havoc with many a golfer hoping to notch his place in golf folklore. As for the past 54 Masters, this year's tournament should be no different in making the final nine holes, where the tournament really begins, as thrilling and gut-wrenching as usual.

The tenth hole, known better as Amen corner, is the start of one of golf's toughest challenges. The holes on Augusta's back nine separate the chokers with the yips in their putting stokes from the golfers who must have ice in their veins to not flinch at the pressure.

When players make their way to the twelfth hole, a 155-yard par-3 with water in the front, their mind better be in the game or else there ball will be in the drink.

Jack Nicklaus, who has a green jacket for six out of the seven days of the week, has been quoted as saying that the 12th hole is 'the hardest tournament hole in golf.' Nicklaus was possibly robbed of a seventh Masters title in 1981 when he double-bogeyed the hole during the third round. Nicklaus would lose by two

URI, a tough home test for men's track

By KEITH BENNETT
Collegian Correspondent

Coming off of a successful first meet of the year, in which they defeated teams from Williams College, Springfield College and the University of Vermont, the University of Massachusetts men's track team now prepares for a tougher challenge from the University of Rhode Island.

The Minutemen play host to the Rams and to Westfield State Saturday afternoon. The meet begins at 12 noon at the Derby Track.

"I know enough to make me worry," UMass head coach Ken O'Brien said regarding the strength of the Rhode Island team.

"I have no uncertainties as to how good they are," he added. "We've got a tough battle on our hands."

O'Brien considers Rhode Island to be one of the strongest teams in New England and their recent performances back up that billing. In their meet last spring, Rhode Island soundly beat UMass by a score of 77-25.

O'Brien said that he expects Westfield to come to town with some outstanding individual athletes. One factor that he thinks might work against Westfield, though, is that they do not have the number of athletes that UMass and Rhode Island have.

As far as the Minutemen themselves, the team stands at 3-0 on the year and will try to improve on that record with another strong effort on Saturday.

"I think that it's reasonable to expect that we'll improve over last week," O'Brien said. "But I don't know if it will be enough to beat Rhode Island. If we compete as well as last week and the score doesn't come out the same, I can't be disappointed. Hopefully we'll at least come out ahead of Westfield."

The first annual

Eno Washington

festival of African dance and music

By DANIELLE DOWLING
Collegian Staff

Americans owe much to African art. It has enriched our own culture or what we can truly call our own culture. Furthermore, it is largely responsible for the music and dance that we enjoy today.

This weekend, a chance will be given to sample and cherish African music and dance at the First Annual Eno Washington Festival of African Dance and Music to be held at the Northampton Center for the Arts Friday through Sunday.

Dancer, choreographer and teacher Eno Washington will be at the center of the festival's events providing master classes and making appearances throughout the festival. Washington has been performing, choreographing and teaching African dance for over 25 years. Currently he is a visiting professor at Mount Holyoke College and has taught at 15 colleges throughout the United States including all five of the colleges in the area.

He received a diploma in 1982 as "Brevet Superieur De Danse" from the National Ballet Du Senegal. He also served as a Fullbright Scholar in West Africa from 1983 to 1984. He has performed with and choreographed for a sizable amount of dance troupes including the National Ballet of Gambia, the Koumpo Dance Company of Senegal and the Nigeria-based Wajumbe Cultural Ensemble.

The Bamidele Dancers and Drummers and The African, Brazilian and Carribean Dance Company will perform on the first night of the festival. The Bamidele Dancers and Drummers includes musicians, composers, art educators, instrument makers, choreographers and dancers from all over the world. The African, Brazilian and Carribean Dance Company is based here in the Pioneer Valley.

The African and American Dance Theatre of New England and Tribal Etiket will appear Saturday night. Stone Montgomery, founder and director of The African and American Dance Theatre of New England, has been drumming and dancing since the age of nine and has performed extensively throughout the United States and the Carribean. Tribal Etiket is a local world beat band that can often be found jamming their funky sounds in clubs like Sheehan's and the Hadley Pub.

Performances by Fatou Carol Sylla African Repertory Company, Ibrahima Camara and Laurel Gordon's Children's Dance Ensemble from the Common Ground School will round off the festival on Sunday. The performance will also include an all company jamboree featuring a "Message from Mali," choreographed by Eno Washington.

The First Annual Eno Washington Festival of African Dance and Music will be held at the Northampton Center for the Arts Friday through Sunday. Friday and Saturday performances will begin at 8 p.m. Sunday's performance will begin at 5 p.m. Proceeds from the festival will go to benefit the Center.

THIS WEEKEND

O-Positive promises to positively please

By MARC A. MOSCHETTA
Collegian Correspondent

The lights were dimmed as the throng of people standing before the stage broke into screams. Suddenly, from the right, appeared a man with small glasses, a shirt made of money, and a suit made of an American flag. No, it's not one of President Bush's vivid daydreams, nor is it the new style for youg republicans, it's Dave Herlihy, lead singer of local favorites O-Positive.

Now don't get me wrong. The band is not a money-grubbing bunch of talking heads that sing for monetary purposes. As a matter of fact, that sentence is the perfect description of everything that O-Positive is not. They are far above that.

O-Positive is made up of lead vocalist Herlihy, Dave Martin and Alan Pettiti on guitar, David Ingham on bass, and Kenny Hickey replacing Alex Lob on drum.s. These five musicians prove through their lyrics, melodies, and energy that rock music does indeed have a brain and talent. Lots of talent.

The band, who have been around since 1984, is a favorite on the local music scene and has been for years. Since their 1985 release of the EP Only Breathing, O-Positive's popularity has been easy to see. This EP sold thousands of copies and earned them a Boston Music Award for their efforts.

The band released their first full length album Cloud Factory in 1987 and it soon became a popular item among alternative rock fans. Since then the band has not stopped impressing their audience. Among those who were impressed by the work was Epic Records.

In 1990 the band released Toy Boat, Toy Boat, Toy Boat on Epic and is now receiving recognition on the national level, as well as retaining their position as one of Boston's most prized bands.

This year O-Positive is nominated for even more Boston Music Awards. In addition, the Boston fans have continued to show their support by nominating two songs from Toy Boat to a list of the top 101 alternative songs of all tome, as compiled by Boston radio station WFNX. The song "Imagine That" placed at number 9 achieving a position higher than bands such as REM, U2, and 10,000 Maniacs.

The music, which runs the spectrum from decision making to political commentary, can best be summed up in one word: WOW. The talent of the band, combined with their incredible stage presence, makes them the best concert band that you don't have to see from nose-bleed bleacher seats at some stadium. The enthusiasm of their impressive live performance carries over into their studio work which means that the band doesn't loose any of its impact when you bring the album home from the store.

If it sounds like this article was written by a total O-Pos fan, you're right, but I'm in good company because O-Positive's following is growing. The band has the ability to take a person who has never even heard of them, and during the course of one show, leave the person humming their songs and seeking out their albums.

The band's first two efforts are now available on a compilation tape or CD, though it is somewhat difficult to find.

Their newest release Toy Boat is available just about everywhere and both are worth seeking out. They are currently recording tracks for their next release that should be available soon.

In short, do yourself a favor and catch O-Positive Friday night in Holyoke. That way you'll know why the record stores will be packed on Saturday morning.

O-Positive with special guests The Tribe will perform at Mount Holyoke College in Chapin. Doors open at 8 p.m. Tickets are $8 for the general public and $5 in advance with Mount Holyoke College ID.

Sam ''King of Boogie Woogie'' Price visits the Hatch

By ANDREW BROADHEAD
Collegian Correspondent

The elder you get the more experienced you get. The more experiece you get the more you wanna play the blues. When Sam Price and his accompanying band play the Hatch tonight he'll be taking 83 years of experience to the stage. Hailed as the "king of boogie woogie," Sam Price's songs and between song tales promise to enchant and enthrall.

Born in Texas in 1908, Sampson Price's life is a rich tapestry of the black experience in America. His career has brought him from small town bars to exotic theaters and back again. He 'll talk about an early gig in a little Arkansas town where blacks weren't allowed to be out on the streets. Someone from the club met them on the outskirts of town with a panel truck. They climbed in and got driven to the back door of the club. After the gig they climbed back in and got a ride to the outskirts of town. He went on to be a regular at clubs like the Famous Door, the Metropole, and Eddie Condon's. 1955 saw Price touring Europe and Africa with his own combo.

To pay the bills along the way he's run restaurants, a funeral home, and a meatpacking business. He's studied piano with Booker T. Washington's daughter. During the Harlem Renaissance of the 30s he was house pianist for Decca Records. At this time he played on recordings with the likes of Evelyn Knight, Lester Young, Rosetta Thorpe, and Joe Turner. Price's recording credits up to now run to well over 500 titles. All these accomplishments are in spite of the fact that he considers himself an unskilled pianist who doesn't read music. All the figures he knows (he says he knows 10,000 figures now) are in his head.

"They're like historical figures," says UMass teacher-writer Doug Whynott, "it's like that book Fahrenheit 451, where everybody memorized a book to preserve literature. Well, Sammy's like that. He's got this body of music, figures he's picked up over 60 years of playing, and he's carrying it around in his head."

Anything he lacks in being skilled he makes up in being slick. There's the story of the time he had a musical duel of sorts with contemporary Herschel Thomas. It was early in his career and he knew he was the less accomplished of the two. Price only knew a couple of tunes and one was Thomas'. Price made the challenge and then played Thomas' own song before he could, note for note.

Sammy Price will be playing with Doc Pitman on vocals (formerly of the Inkspots), Eugene Vinyard on sax, and Carl Goodman on drums. With songs like "Whodat Blues," "Honeysuckle Rose," "Boogie Cha Cha," and Price's entertaining anecdotes the Hatch promises to be a finger snapping boogie woogie of a good time.

Sam Price will play at UMass in the Hatch on Thursday at 9 p.m. Tickets are $2 for students and $4 for the general public.

Reality and the supernatural mix in The Sixteenth Chapel

By DANIEL JOKELSON
Collegian Correspondent

The phrase used by everyone connected to this new student-written play is "a dark mystery." The Sixteenth Chapel, by freshman Shawn McDonnell, is a strange mixture of reality and the supernatural that confronts the audience directly with issues like faith, sexism and the media in a bizzare and apocalyptic fashion.

The play takes place at the end of the world, but in a time and with characters not so far off from our own. Psychiatrist Ann Koestler, who works at a ward, is assigned to analyze the new patient, John Westfike, who was arrested at the scene of a church desecration, covered in blood. Their talks reveal a messiah/man who shows all the physically supernatural signs of half-godliness, but who's mind has been so twisted by the media and religion that his attempts at saving the world end up in disaster.

It is a study of the human tendency to want to play God, a fatal flaw that makes us so angry and caged by our stubborn beliefs that we turn against each other, instead of letting ourselves be open to understanding and taking care of each other. In the end, it is up to us to overcome our prejudices toward others, and when that happens, repression and oppression will end, leaving us free to really be alive.

The cast of seven actors, McDonnell and the director Alan Kerr hope to, in Kerr's words, "bring you to a different emotional plane," through this intense portrayal of our world, where it is possible for one to have the power of a god or a satan, to put ideas in your head that sow the seeds of destruction, like John's childhood priest, Father Simon, does when he convinces him to beleive that women are inherently evil. And because this view is so driven into him, he cannot overcome it, even when the only people who he can trust are his psychiatrist and his lover, both of whom are women.

The play is trying to hit home in a strange but familiar way. "It's a weird world — you want more of it, it invades you. And so it's live — you couldn't put it in a movie," Kerr says.

Another strength of the play is it's cast: "Everyone agrees on the symbolism of the play, and they're so well-bonded! No egos — they're just out to work and have fun."

The sound and costuming are important elements as well in conveying Student Valley Production's newest original piece of socially conscious theatre.

The Sixteenth Chapel will be performed at UMass in the Hampden Theatre on Friday, Saturday and Sunday night at 8 p.m. with a matinee on Sunday.

Second UM fire claims Clark Center

By AMY HENRY
Collegian Staff

A second fire early yesterday morning injured one firefighter as firefighters fought unsuccessfully to save the Clark International Center at the University of Massachusetts.

According to a press release issued yesterday by the Amherst Fire Department, the firefighter suffered from smoke inhalation and was treated at Cooley Dickinson Hospital then later released.

Firefighters arrived at 1 a.m. to find the fire burning the porch which wraps around the first and second floors of the two-story wood-framed structure. The Fire Department has deemed the cause as "suspicious."

Strong winds rapidly spread the fire requiring the use of large hose lines to knock down the flames, the statement said. Firefighters spent almost three hours working to extinguish the fire, which penetrated into multiple hidden spaces in the building, the statement said. Firefighters from Pelham and Shutesberry were called to assist the Amherst firefighters since all available personnel were already at the scene, according to the statement.

A total of 36 firefighters staffing four pumpers, one aerial platform, two support vehicles, an ambulance, and a squad car were at the scene, the statement said.

Kay Scanlan, a spokesperson for the University, said it had not been confirmed whether or not the center would be rebuilt. "Adequate office space is being looked for to house the program until a decision is made," Scanlan said. "We are not sure which records have been destroyed, but the destruction of immigration and financial records of foreign exchange students could cause real problems for them."

Firefighters battle blaze early yesterday morning at Clark International Programs Office.

According to Scanlan, the building was built in 1928 and has been the Clark International Center since 1987. The center runs exchange and study abroad programs.

The center will reopen on Tuesday when the new location will be announced. Telephone numbers are expected to stay the same. Students with emergencies should contact the University operator for assistance in reaching someone on the staff.

Zeta Psi alarm failure investigated

By MARC ELLIOTT
Collegian Staff

The fire alarm system at Zeta Psi fraternity house was not working at the time of Wednesday night's fire, which destroyed the third floor and left 14 fraternity brothers homeless, according to a press release issued yesterday by the Amherst Fire Department.

The fire was discovered at about 8:15 p.m. by Zeta Psi brother Jason Janoff after he smelled "plastic burning" and opened the fire door separating the second and third floors to find the hallway filled with smoke. Janoff said he had smelled smoke 10 to 15 minutes earlier but had dismissed it as cigarette smoke.

Janoff went on to say the sound of some of the smaller fire alarms on the third floor were muffled by the fire door and went unheeded by the brothers downstairs.

The six brothers who were home studying and watching television when the fire occurred escaped without injury after four of them attempted to put out the blaze with fire extinguishers and a garden hose. They could not reach the fire through the heavy smoke that filled the third floor hallway.

Amherst Police and Fire officials are investigating the cause of the fire as well as the failure of the house alarm system. The house alarm should have sounded an alarm throughout the house if a fire were detected anywhere in the building, according to officials.

The monetary amount of damage sustained by the white three-story wood-framed house has not yet been determined, according to the Amherst Fire Department.

The Zeta Psi fraternity has lived in the house since 1978, which was valued last year at $125,900 by the Amherst

UM faculty union votes to hold two-day protest of furloughs

By KATHERINE T. LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts chapter of the Massachusetts Society of Professors yesterday voted unanimously not to work on Wednesday, April 17 and Thursday, April 18 in protest of Gov. William Weld's call for faculty and other "critical or essential personnel" to work without pay and receive compensation at an unspecified time.

More than 300 professors attended the meeting to vote on the proposal, which called on faculty to not "conduct business as usual," and instead protest by taking "public action."

While representatives of MSP did not specify that union members would go on strike, forms were passed out for members to sign up for picket lines, and $800 was collected during the meeting for "expenses."

MSP President John Cole said he was pleased with the number of members who came to the meeting, but said other faculty need to join the protest in order for it to be effective.

"It's fantastic that we have well over 300 people at this meeting," he said. "I think it's very important about getting [our] colleagues out [to protest]."

The union is sponsoring meetings at noon today and Tuesday, in the Campus Center, to plan the protest. According to MSP member Dan Clawson, the meetings are open to faculty, staff, and students.

During the meeting, Clawson said the support of students, as well as staff, are important to the success of the protest. "I feel we ought to work together with the students on the protest," he said.

Other professors echoed Clawson's view, including one faculty member who said more students support the protest than supported last fall's student strike. "They are very much behind us," he said.

Susan Church, president of the Commuter Area Government, told the professors students are supporting the protest, adding that they are not apathetic on the issue, but unsure of what action to take.

Citing a petition protesting the furloughs, Church said, "[There are] 400 students' signatures supporting what you're doing."

Meanwhile, faculty at the state's community and state colleges, who are in a different bargaining unit, are having some difficulty organizing protests of their own, according to Cole. He said while faculty at Greenfield and Holyoke community colleges, as well as those at Westfield State College, are in favor of protesting on their campuses, other professors are still hesitant.

The faculty action comes a day after Local 509 of Service Employees International Union, which represents University staff members, unanimously passed a motion to join the faculty in the protest.

Former senator talks of America's financial situation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Here are excerpts of the speech given yesterday by Democrat Paul E. Tsongas at the National Press Club:

"Seven years ago I . . . headed toward home. Washington was no longer in my future . . . I have in these years lived a different life. Less glamorous, more real . . . It has been a time of looking for the larger truths in a smaller world. It has been a time of simply being a citizen of my country.

To be here this afternoon as an about-to-be presidential candidate is so improbable . . . I am here because I see our country on a path that need not be. I am here because I fear for our country. I am here because our country needs to be rallied. Let me deal with cold hard realities.

First, our national debt. When Reagan-Bush came to power the national debt was less that $1 trillion. At the end of the current presidential term, Reagan-Bush alone will have added another $3 trillion: $4 trillion in debt. A crushing, staggering burden for our children and our grandchildren . . .

Cold hard reality No. 2: Japan and Germany have far surpassed us in world trade. Again, raw data. In 1980, we had a trade surplus. The record of the Reagan-Bush years will exceed $1 trillion of trade deficit by next year; $1 trillion in deficit while Japan and Germany are enjoying yearly surpluses of over $50 billion.

Latin-American dinner tonight

Dancing and speakers to highlight bilingual fundraising event

By AMY HENRY
Collegian Staff

If you like Latin-American food and dancing, come to tonight's annual Bilingual Collegiate Program fundraiser. All funds will help pay for educational and cultural activities for bilingual students.

Keynote speaker Jose Aponte, general manager of international services for the American Red Cross, will discuss "The status of Prisoners of War and Refugees in the Persian Gulf."

The speaker will focus on Hispanics who served in the Persian Gulf war. Benjamin Rodriguez, director of BCP said, "We want to honor the Hispanics who died in the war. There was a high proportion of them who served and there has not been enough media recognition given to them."

Holyoke's Fernandez Restaraunt will offer a choice of roast pork and chicken for dinner. Four bands playing Latino American music including salsa, merengue, cumbia, cha cha, guajira, bolero and lambada will entertain.

Rodriguez said the fundraiser is the first event of many which will focus on raising money for a variety of services for bilingual programs. "This is especially needed this year due to budgetary cuts," he said.

He said BCP will ask the University to match funds that are raised at the event. "This money is for survival needs," he said.

Some of the money will be given to students who cannot afford books, he said. "Sometimes students have to leave the University because books can cost $300 to $400, which they don't have."

"The money will also be used to pay for more tutors because we have had 400 requests from bilingual and other students which we have not been able to fulfill," he said.

"In addition, we hope to be able to hire a part-time position to reach out to Hispanic students in the 8th grade and up," Rodriguez said. A low percentage of Hispanic students graduate high school and enter college, he said. The person who fills the position would talk to high school

The 14 brothers who lived in the house are living at neighboring fraternity and sorority houses, which have offered to help Zeta Psi cope with the loss of their home.

"A lot of the brothers that lived at the house are now staying at fraternity and sorority houses until a permanent arrangement can be made and a lot of fraternities have offered to help rebuild the house," Janoff said. "It's amazing how everybody is pulling for us in such a time of need. It's just great."

Janoff said Zeta Psi thanks the Amherst Fire and Police Departments.

"They saved our home," he said.

Janoff also thanked Domino's and Bruno's for donating free pizza to those who helped the fraternity brothers relocate.

Holocaust remembered in ceremony

By AMY PRENDERGAST
Collegian Staff

The Holocaust was remembered yesterday at a ceremony in the Cape Cod Lounge.

The killing of six million Jewish people was remembered yesterday at the Holocaust Commemoration Service held in the Cape Cod Lounge at the University of Massachusetts. Students, faculty, and Rabbi Saul Perlmutter participated in the service, which included speeches, songs, and a Lighting of the Yarzeit Candles ceremony.

"Don't Let the Lights Go Out" was the theme for Holocaust Memorial Week. According to Hillel President Orna Sonnenschein, the purpose of the week was to remember the tragedies of World War II and educate and increase awareness about the Holocaust.

"Hatred exists here at UMass. We as Jews have to recognize and fight anti-semitism in all of its forms," said Sonnenschein.

Six candles were lit in memory of the six million Jews killed in the Holocaust. Six students and faculty participated in the ceremony, each of them speaking before lighting a candle.

Dean of Humanities and Fine Arts Murray Schwartz spoke of the Holocaust as "an emblem of disaster."

He said fear, anxiety, and indifference of government were the ingredients of a holocaust.

Smith College student Revital Gal gave an emotional account of her visit to Israel this past winter. "People must realize that six million deaths is not just a number, or history in a textbook. It is human beings, and part of our life. We had to go through it again in January. I sat with my grandparents and waited for a SCUD missile to hit, and had to run to a sealed room."

UMass student Julie Ross, whose father survived 10 concentration camps, said, "My father always says we must never forget what happened to our people. The Holocaust should serve as a message to the world that we should never just stand by and watch. We must strive to overcome oppression."

At the end of the ceremony, Saul Perlmuter led the group of 100 people who attended in the Mourner's Kaddish.

Celeste Krochak closed the ceremony saying, "'Don't Let the Lights Go Out' is a symbol of the Holocaust. Adolf Hitler tried to put out our light, but we Jews continued to grow."

A one-minute moment of silence concluded the ceremony. Many people cried as the bells on top of the Tower Library rang for an entire minute to end the Holocaust Week.

Ambassador discusses future of united Europe

By ELIZABETH BUTTS
Collegian Correspondent

The prospects for greater unity between European countries within the Common Market are improving, but the European Community is not likely to accept any new members in the near future, said Ambassador Eamonn Gallagher to a crowd of more than 100 people last night at the University of Massachusetts.

The speech was titled "United States and a United Europe; Prospects After 1992."

In 1992, the Common Market will establish a system similar to that which exists in the United States, whereby goods will not be taxed as they pass from country to country, and citizens will not need passports to travel between countries.

The European Community, he said, needs to establish economic, political, and monetary union.

Gallagher upheld the unity existing within the United States as an example.

"The need for centralized unity was discovered in the United States a long time ago, when the Articles of Confederation were found insufficient," he said.

The community also needs to establish a unified foreign policy, he said.

"There cannot be a European Community without a unified foreign policy, unless it is satisfied to be marginalized whenever global issues arise," said Gallagher. The community now faces the "dichotomy" of an enlarging community — there are a number of other European countries wishing to join — and that of intensifying internal cohesion between the present members, he said.

"Until there is greater economic integration within the existing members, and greater constitutional advances, the community is not ready for new members," said Gallagher.

"I'm a cynic, you see," said Gallagher, "the words are meant to avoid promising membership in the community [which other European countries are seeking]."

"We live in an age that is coming to birth," he said. "It will need careful and cautious attention . . . I see a new Atlantic emerging from this."

Bank of Boston forms new branch

By JONATHAN YENKIN
The Associated Press

BOSTON — With New England dropping further into recession, Bank of Boston Corp. is looking to the top of the economic ladder for a new business opportunity.

Bank of Boston has carved out a new division called The Private Bank, designed to create a specialized mix of banking, investment and other financial services for wealthy clients.

Without such a customized product, a deep-pocketed customer might have to navigate through several bank departments to figure out how to invest money, obtain a loan or set up a trust, said Susan Haney, president of The Private Bank.

"At some point, the individual says this is crazy, I need to have a better mousetrap, and we think The Private Bank is a better mousetrap," she said.

Banking analysts note that the concept of private banking, as opposed to the retail banking that most people are familiar with, has been around for years. Several large banks also offer private banking services, but Bank of Boston insists its version takes the coordinated services to a higher level.

The creation of The Private Bank comes as Bank of Boston tries to build its assets by scooping up the failed Bank of New England.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Racism

'Frotter' a sign of a bigger problem

On Friday, April 5, the Collegian published a regularly-run comic strip. This installment of "Frotter" illustrated two White men discussing the implications of racist rhetoric that "warns" of Whites being forced out of jobs by Blacks. The strip concludes with one man reassuring the other that "It just isn't going to happen . . . There's only two Blacks in the entire company." The other agrees: "Yeah, it'd be a long trip up from the custodial staff."

There is no question in our minds that this comic strip was patently offensive and perpetuated racist stereotypes and tones. Indeed, in retrospect, we realize it should never have been printed. For the series of errors that led to its printing and for the rage it has engendered, we wholeheartedly apologize to the African-American community and the rest of our readership.

This apology, however is the least important element of our response to this incident.

Firstly, Garry Porter, "Frotter's" cartoonist, has been terminated as a Collegian staff member. It is clear that he is incapable of producing material with our entire readership in mind. The Collegian is striving to be an organization that is equally important to all segments of the community. Anyone who is either unwilling or incapable of working toward this goal has no business at this newspaper.

Secondly, the massive response we have received from the African-American community has made it evident that our editorial process requires review. Those editors involved in this incident are participating in re-thinking the criteria by which material is judged. Furthermore, the process by which material is reviewed prior to going to press will be tightened.

Our society is one in which African-Americans and European-Americans undergo a vastly different social experience. As a result, our understandings and perspectives differ. We at the Collegian see it as everyone's task to bridge this gap.

We are an organization struggling to deal constructively with race issues. As with many mainstream organizations and institutions, African-Americans and other people of color are underrepresented at the Collegian. It is not the underrepresentation of African-American bodies that necessarily presents a problem, but the underrepresentation of African-American perspectives and understanding that presents an obstacle to the fight against racism.

We are an organization struggling to tackle these issues. However, we are doing so with a limited variety of perspectives — something we are working to change. The publication of last Friday's "Frotter" was an ugly manifestation of a larger problem. The outpouring of rage that resulted reminds us that we have a long way to go. We shall do better.

Unsigned editorials reflect the majority opinion of the editorial board.

'Frotter' misunderstood

With the African-American community up in arms over an alleged "racist" comic strip, misunderstanding and ignorance have taken the place of logical thinking and rational interpretation.

African-Americans on this campus have charged Collegian comic strip artist Garry Porter with drawing a racist cartoon that was published in the Collegian on April 5. Posters taped to the wall near the Collegian headquarters demand "African-Americans, are we going to condone this?" and urge students to write the Collegian protesting Porter's satirical strip.

David Massey

For the sake of those who missed the strip, and for those who obviously fail to understand the true meaning of the cartoon, I will review what the strip consisted of.

Two White characters are sitting down at a table for a meal. Character B says to A: "I don't get this whole David Duke thing. Who would ever buy into his racist hype? The whole idea that blacks will rise up and take over all the white collar jobs is simply ridiculous. It just isn't going to happen. I mean look at us for example . . ."

And in the final box, B says to A: "There's only two blacks in the entire company. How are they going to take over all our jobs?" Finally, character A answers to B: "Yeah, it'd be a long trip up from custodial staff."

Porter is commenting on the inherent idiocy of racism and on the poor state of African-Americans today in the American workforce. Porter is essentially saying how stupid former Ku Klux Klan leader and current politician David Duke's "racist hype" is, and how, in many circles in the United States, blacks are still treated as second-class citizens.

By satirizing the silliness of racism, Porter is not being racist.

Porter has attempted to display the sad state of African-Americans in this country in the '90s. Racism is still rampant on this campus and this country as a whole. The shackles of ignorance, hate, and racist attitudes must be strongly opposed. Porter has displayed the "racist hype" sadly omnipresent in our society and the low-ranking jobs of many Blacks who deserve better opportunities.

It is a frightening time at our University; a time in which a student who makes a social statement that points out the ridiculous nature of racist ideas is himself charged with racism.

$500 bounty for file alarm pranksters

This communication is written because several supposedly mature adults in Kennedy and John Adams towers, on Saturday morning at 1:11 a.m. and 2:05 a.m., maliciously activated the fire alarm systems in these buildings.

Of course they know that this action is against the law ($500 fine and/or one year in jail). They are also aware that they have endangered the lives of fellow residents who could be injured evacuating because of their childish pranks.

Each time a false alarm occurs, people are less likely to respond appropriately when the next alarm sounds, thereby risking their safety if that next incident is a real fire. But again, I'm sure they know this.

What they didn't know is that at the time they were demonstrating their lack of maturity to the rest of their peers, the Amherst Fire Department was being summoned to a real fire at a local business.

One truck had to be diverted to answer Kennedy's alarm (and later John Adam's) because of the possible threat of fire to over 500 lives. This apparatus was thus delayed in its initial response to the real fire, and additional property damage occurred.

Amherst is not a large Eastern Massachusetts community where the Fire Department has numerous apparatus and staff on duty at all times.

Such large departments, because of their size, do not deplete their immediate fire response resources if there's one or two simultaneous false fire alarms or incidents. But Amherst has only two crews initially available and they perform dual roles, as they are also responsible for staffing two ambulances for medical coverage. If one crew is tied up responding to a malicious false alarm, they can't be available for true emergencies like medical incidents requiring the ambulance, or real fires such as that which occurred Saturday morning.

Amherst had to recall off-duty firefighters for Saturday's blaze, but that takes time; for at least part of which someone in Kennedy Tower is responsible.

Kennedy residents have been subjected to a series of malicious false fire alarms this semester (as John Adams was last semester). Someone must have information about the perpetrator(s) of these insidious acts.

Housing Services offers a $500 reward for information leading to the arrest and conviction of false fire alarm pranksters. I urge Kennedy residents to get involved to end this dangerous threat to your safety and reckless attack upon your good character.

A note of thanks from Zeta Psi

At approximately 8:15, on the night of April 10, the Zeta Psi fraternity house caught fire. Although initially unrecognized, the fire quickly grew to engulf the entire third floor of the house. Fortunately, it occurred at a time when relatively few fraternity brothers were home, so no one was hurt.

As we watched our home and our lives being destroyed, we realized another fact; we were not alone. When the news spread that Zeta Psi was burning, people showed up. They came to show support, and to give help. To all those who came down to help, we thank you. As the fire grew, 14 men came to the realization that they no longer had a place to live. This situation, however, was short-lived. Sorority sisters, fraternity brothers, neighbors, even people we didn't know began offering assistance. Whether they offered a sweatshirt, a blanket, or a place to stay, all showed how much they cared. When Dominos Pizza and Brunos found out what happened, they immediately donated food and drinks. Just when we thought that all was lost, the outpouring of support from the community kept our spirits high.

We also want to thank the bravery and the courage of the Amherst Fire and Police Departments. The fire had spread so quickly we thought nothing would be left standing. This, however, did not occur. They were able to skillfully contain and control the fire so that the damage was minimized.

Again, we want to thank all those who have helped us; the Greek Area, the town of Amherst, and UMass students, we owe you our gratitude.

FACTOID

The UMass faculty union, the Massachusetts Society of Professors, has opposed every fee and tuition hike imposed on students.

From one student to another: This crisis got me to fight back

I'm a student who is worried! This worry has stimulated me into activism, but I'm wondering why I feel like I'm taking the road less traveled.

Our University is in a crisis, and it's not just because the faculty is being furloughed. It's because the outcome of all the cuts proposed by Gov. Weld will dismantle this University. Enrollment here is down by 11.5 percent, and with the proposed tuition increase this number will become drastically higher. Full-time faculty have decreased by 5.5 percent since the hiring freeze, and are bound to continue dropping as Weld continues his abuse.

I have worked my you-know-what off for three years now, and I have two years to go before I graduate. I see the writing on the wall and I'm wondering just what is all my hard work going to get me? Tissue paper to dry my tears?

So, even though my grades may suffer this semester (I may have to settle for magna cum laude over summa cum laude), I've become an activist.

I'm doing what I can to alleviate the situation in hopes of maintaining the quality of education I expect to get from this institution. But why am I a minority in this endeavor?

Our student populous is 23,069. If Weld heard from every one of us, he would change his policy, because we are his constituents. So, as one student to another, may I please ask you to join me on the road less traveled?

Don't take this crisis lying down! There's a lot that can be done:

- Write letters. Lobby on April 17 (go to the Student Government Association for details).
- Support decisions made by faculty with respect to the furloughs.
- Help stuff letters in envelopes to parents (105 Hampshire House).
- Sign petitions in the Campus Center.
- Organize and demonstrate.

Save our future.

A MYRIAD

Deep Purple pleasantly satisfies with Slaves and Masters

Slaves and Masters
Deep Purple
RCA Records

Deep Purple is like an old friend, you know what you can expect from them.

And what you expect you can find on the group's latest offering Slaves and Masters. It's Deep Purple. Even though they claim that the album is "a dramatic change of direction," I just can't see it.

For me personally, I prefer the band's earlier stuff, or at least the stuff they delivered on Perfect Strangers, their comeback album released in 1984.

The first version of Deep Purple formed back in 1968 when guitarist Richie Blackmore, keyboardist Jon Lord, drummer Ian Paice, former bassist Nick Simper and former vocalist Rod Evans got together and recorded their first album, Shades of Deep Purple. Their breakthrough album, Machine Head, was released in 1972. The album featured that hit, "Smoke on the Water," that you can find on those K-Tel albums featuring the 'greatest rock songs of all-time.'

I could go on forever about their history, but I won't. What I will tell you is that their latest venture is a decent one and will satisfy Deep Purple fans. With tunes like "The Cut Runs Deep" and "Wicked Ways," there's no denying that this album is Deep Purple.

Deep Purple can be seen tomorrow at the Worcester Centrum.

Don't believe every record review

By SAM SILVERSTEIN

Out of Time
R.E.M.
Warner Brothers

Further proof that you should never believe a record review:

Rolling Stone lumped R.E.M.'s latest effort Out of Time, in with Charlatan's U.K., World Party, and Dee Lite, as groove-is-in-the-heart-style retrofest.

The Boston Globe described Out of Time as an odd collection of secondary material designed to hold us over until the band's next album.

Terrified, I avoided Out of Time for several weeks, until the single "Losing My Religion" took over the radio and MTV and roped me back in. To my great relief I discovered Out of Time to be, a few Partridge Family "ahaaaaahs" aside, definitely not an out-of-the-blue psychadelic departure — R.E.M. was messing with mandolins and trippy guitars back when the Cars could sell a million records just by showing up.

Yes, the band announced that it would not tour in support of this record, but would rather dive right back into the studio. Yes, they switch from instruments on a bunch of songs. Yes, there is a guest appearance by KRS-1 and the B-52's Kate Pierson.

But no, they're not kidding. Even the album's strangest song, Stipe's incongruous album-opening duet with KRS-1 on "Radio Song," is recognizable R.E.M. (Though the band does show a new found sense of humor: Stipe sings "It's that same sad song DJ . . . SUCKS!" with KRS-1 chipping in his booming voice for emphasis, and the song ends with a hilarious anti-pop spiel from KRS-1).

The best songs on Out of Time in fact, are soaked in R.E.M.'s trademark sound. On "Losing My Religion," Stipe wears his broken heart on his sleeve, and then the band kicks up the musical intensity behind him.

"Belong" off side two is a "life's rich pageant"-style stunner, complete with obscure lyrics and wail-along chorus.

"Near Wild Heaven" and "Half a World Away" are other standouts, though not of "Belong" or "Losing My Religion's" calibre.

F.U.C.T. reaches nirvana through noise

By DAVID C. KNOCH
Collegian Correspondent

Okay, I'll admit it. I love this band. I always seem to find a new band that I think is the greatest thing since mint-chocolate chip ice cream and two weeks later, you couldn't pay me enough to listen to the tape again. Well, F.U.C.T. has totally destroyed this theory on which I relied for so long. The album came out in June of 1990 and I haven't gone a day without listening to them. As a matter of fact I played the tape so often it wore out. I proceeded to buy the CD and fully expect to be the first person to have a CD disintegrate from prolonged laser exposure.

F.U.C.T., a four-piece band that hails from Nashville, Tennessee, was formed five years ago by bassist Dirt, guitarist Brooks, and former drummer Heath. Soon after, they picked up singer Clay, and a year later found their latest drummer, Patrick.

For all of you who are so eagerly waiting to find out just what the heck F.U.C.T. means, I'll tell you. F.U.C.T. is an abbreviation of the band's full name, Forever Ungratical Corinaric Technikilation. Okay, now that I've confused you further, I'll explain the name, and in turn attempt to expose you to the positive message this band is trying to spread across the world. According to singer Clay, the name means that ". . . you're forever radically ungrateful for those death-like situations that make you feel like shit." Still confused? Clay explains further, "You know, you're definitely ungrateful for your ignorance towards situations that bring you to ignorance, instead of rising above and going for total understanding. You know, like reacting too fast instead of taking your time and thinking about it. Maybe a peaceful solution instead of a fist in the face."

F.U.C.T. in their inspirational environment

F.U.C.T.'s latest, and only non-demo, release is entitled Dimensional Depth Perception. "It's just the multiple angles to perceive," says Clay in reference to the album title. The songs on the album are a mix of aggressive, noisy, almost thrash/hardcore tunes combined with meaningful lyrics that make numerous references to God, nature, and positive energy.

F.U.C.T. is a noisy band, and according to Clay, "We like all that extra noise, but we hate unclarification. We like it to be clear and clarified, but we like noise too, but it's got to be structured." F.U.C.T.'s sound is low, grungy, and powerful. But it is good, and it is talented channeling of positive energy.

F.U.C.T. is inspired by the world and their surroundings. Never forgetful of the beauty and fragility of nature, they have a deep appreciation for God. The lyrics urge an understanding of one's fellow man as well as the world around us. The band believes in making up their own words so they can describe the events and things around them that have no name. "It's America, somebody's got to." For example a "deleer" is an idea. In the song "Demeaning" Clay explains the line, "negative deleers cancel" by saying, ". . . don't think about negative ideas, just fucking get them out of your brain, they're not going to help you . . . they're destructive."

F.U.C.T. is a breath of fresh air in a music industry that cannot seem to find any originality. This band is definitely going somewhere, and, seeing as the band isn't even satisfied with a sound I think is already amazing, they can only get better. Exponentially. And for anyone who is making a connection between the band's name and the f-word, don't, because according to Clay, "Everything else is fucked, we're EF YOU SEE TEE, that's basically what it boils down to."

Not a bad creation

By AHVA DAVIS
Collegian Correspondent

Another Bad Creation
Another Bad Creation
Motown Records

When I first heard this tape, I thought that it was perfect dance music. The energetic rhythm of their first hit "Iesha," will keep you dancing through the whole song, though it is hard to take some of the lyrics seriously.

Although Another Bad Creation is made up of pre-teen boys, (no one in the band is over the age of 12), the album is not whiny, unlike their young counterparts New Edition.

A.B.C.'s album had the help of Dr. Freeze, who also produced Bell Biv Devoe's hit song "Poison."

This was a decent first album, and has proved to be a success. They have already appeared on national television shows such as In Living Color, Soul Train, Into the Night with Rick Dees, along with other shows.

Some of the songs are reminiscent of New Edition, but I thought that A.B.C. had a much more lively and exciting rhythm that can keep your attention longer than New Edition could.

It is a refreshing, lighter side of rap that does not have profanity, violence, or sex. I'm surprised that it sells, considering what many people like to listen to these days. A.B.C. goes to "The Playground" to meet their girls, not a bar.

"Jealous Girl," the remake of an old New Edition song, is the only song that is not completely rap, but a slow ballad

Out of Time is not without its misfires. "Shiny Happy People" would be among the best tracks on the record if it were an instrumental, but the song is sabotaged by Stipe and Pierson's row-row-row-your-boat chorus of "shiny happy people holding hands," sarcastic or not.

On the heels of "Losing my Religion," "Low" will send you lunging for the fast forward. And "Me In Honey," another Stipe-Pierson duet, is a blatant rip off of Bob Mould's "Brazilia" (as Mould himself pointed out during a recent Iron Horse appearance).

So yeah, if Out of Time has a sixties feel to it, then so does most everything else this band has recorded. And if it's a holdover between records, well, like almost every other R.E.M. album has made, Out of Time does leave the listener looking forward to more.

ARTS & LIVING

Billy Bang and his sextet will wrap up the Magic Triangle

By BILL ROSENBLATT
Collegian Staff

The Magic Triangle concert series, produced by WMUA radio along with Residential Arts and UPC, concludes for this year next Thursday evening. Where else in this area can you see two full sets of great music in an intimate venue with good acoustics for only $5 ($7 for non-students)? Nowhere, that's where.

Violinist Billy Bang and his sextet will take the Hampden Theater stage at 8 p.m. next Thursday. After ten years of classical violin study, Bang (born Billy Walker) got turned on to jazz in college and learned to play it. He tapped into the mini-tradition within the music that mostly includes early-style players (Stephane Grappelli, Joe Venuti, Stuff Smith) and tried to place the instrument in a more modern context.

He based his style on the phrasing of saxophonists: "I wanted to capture that vocal quality Coltrane had when he played the blues. I wanted the violin to cry and sing." Bang became obsessed with Coltrane after returning from the Vietnam War, where he was the target of racism among some White soldiers. "[Coltrane's] was very anti-establishment music, somehow analogous to the books I was reading by Eldridge Cleaver and Malcolm X," he has said.

After studying with free-minded violinist Leroy Jenkins, he participated in the fertile SoHo loft scene in mid-70s New York. He founded the String Trio of New York with bassist John Lindberg and guitarist James Emery, a string-based analog to Air or Jenkins' Revolutionary Ensemble. The Trio cut four critically acclaimed albums for Italian Black Saint.

Then Bang recorded a series of albums as a leader and appeared as a sideman on albums by such notables as Ornette Coleman and Ronald Shannon Jackson. In the mid-80s, when other violinists (John Blake, Jean-Luc Ponty) had sold out to fusion, Bang tried broadening his audience another way, by incorporating elements of the then-emerging hip-hop culture. His group, Forbidden Planet, contained synthesizer, bass guitar and a rapper. About this group, he has said, "I want to close the gap between myself and the people who say they can't follow the kind of music I generally play – the people I grew up with in Harlem and the South Bronx."

By the time of his 1987 Soul Note album Live at Carlos I, Bang had developed a lyrical, melodic style that toned down the loft-scene excesses and made them very accessible, particularly on tunes like "Rainbow Gladiator" and the reggae-tinged "Sinawe Mandelas."

The group that Bang will bring to UMass next Thursday is similar to the excellent Carlos I band. Some of the musicians are veterans, while others are new faces.

Trumpeter Ahmed Abdullah is a compadre of Bang from the loft days and a member of altoist Arthur Blythe's late-70s band. His own albums (such as the recent Ahmed Abdullah and the Solomonic Quintet on German Silkheart) are magnificent statements of flowing rhythms and spacey melody.

Percussionist/marimba player, Thurman Barker, was an early member of Chicago's seminal AACM artists' collective. Bassist Juni Booth has the most "star" credentials, having played in McCoy Tyner's incredible mid-70s band as well as with Freddie Hubbard, Blythe and others. Guitarist Takeshi Yamaguchi and drummer Zen Matsuura round out the group.

Bang's music is eclectic, but very tuneful and accessible, eschewing both the cerebral leanings of Jenkins, and the slick fusion tendencies of Blake or Ponty. He is one of a few musicians who came up through the so-called "avant-garde" and defined his own sound – but also remembered that there is an audience out there listening.

Bang's show closes out the Magic Triangle series' second season. The series fills an important niche in the local music scene. It has gotten terrific support, but it needs continued support if it is going to return next year. Advance tickets are on sale at the Fine Arts Center box office (545-2511).

On my way home from class today I bought some Pop tarts.
When I got home, Steve and Tony were watching Oprah Winfrey on TV.
I sat and joined them and opened up my Pop tarts.
They both wanted some Pop tarts so I gave them some.
At this time, the author wishes to respond to yesterday's in-house criticism.
Ah, splendid!
While Orlando is not on the Florida coast, this statement was presented as a FANTASY of Gabe's, and not hard fact.
Ooo- interesting, interesting.
The author thanks Marcus for his diligence, and responsibility, towards the strip.
Of course.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A desire to meet people sets you on a new course today. Financial matters continue to require close scrutiny. Your mate or business partner may be pressuring you. Stand up for your rights.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Team effort is essential if you want profits to rise. A community project takes up valuable time, but will bring deep fulfillment. An older person decides to give romance a helping hand.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Seek professional counsel before finalizing an agreement. Trust your instincts regarding a personal matter; remember that you are part of a team effort. Platonic relationships flourish.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your hope and confidence return. Promising news is part of the picture. Big changes are in the works! Financial considerations influence a difficult choice. Romance blossoms anew.

LEO (July 23-Aug 22): Educational pursuits are favored. Your loved ones are supportive. Long-term business prospects are excellent. Better rapport develops when you tune in to your mate's real needs.

VIRGO (Aug 23-Sept 22): Keep a clear head during what should be a challenging day. Business affairs will progress smoothly despite interruptions. Watch your step when in the company of your competitors.

LIBRA (Sept 23-Oct 22): Curb a tendency to buy things on impulse and seek ways to reduce expenses. Get all business agreements in writing, even when dealing with family. An employment situation shows marked improvement.

SCORPIO (Oct 23-Nov 21): Self-preservation is uppermost in your thoughts. Be careful when choosing between two plans. Mate could make a valuable contribution if you are open about your goals. Romance is delightful.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov 22-Dec 21): A friend moves into position to help your career. Better financial times lie ahead. Keep your eyes and ears open. Excellent communication is essential. Read between the lines.

CAPRICORN (Dec 22-Jan 19): Go along with the methods used by others. Additional work falls on your shoulders, but a nice raise or bonus is in the offering. A forceful member of the opposite sex dazzles you!

AQUARIUS (Jan 20-Feb 18): Limit the money you spend on nonessentials. Keeping in touch with important contacts will help you negotiate better agreements. Let family know you appreciate their efforts.

PISCES (Feb 19-Mar 20): Your terrific judgment helps you handle any challenges that come your way. A situation that develops today could lead to fun-filled romance. You gain new social poise. Be discreet.

about a jealous ex-girlfriend that wants a second chance.

Their personal lives were reflected in almost all of the songs. The ideas range from parent problems, girlfriends, and about the groups' rhythm.

Overall, the album is pretty decent, and it really is good to finally listen to some rap music without any controversy surrounding it. Although these pre-teens have success, they are still just kids, and have a long way to go.

outs in the fourth.

In the seventh, Boston spoiled the shutout bid on singles by Jack Clark and Carlos Quintana and Tony Pena's two-run double to left. Steve Olin replaced King and gave up an RBI single to Tin Naehring.

Darwin threw 41 pitches in a 2 minute first inning. The Indians scored on a walk to Alex Cole, a single by Jerry Browns and RBI single by Carlos Baerga. Albert Belle made it 2-0 with an RBI ground double to left, and after Sandy Alomar was hit by a pitch, Jacoby walked, forcing in a run.

Cole singled, stole second and took third on an infield out to start the second. Baerga walked and Alomar beat out an infield hit, scoring Cole. Jacoby then followed with a fly ball into a jet stream, the ball sailing over Tom Brunansky's head in right.

Boston added a run in the eighth on a ground-rule double by Greenwell, a single by Clark and Ellis Burks' grounder.

Vice President Dan Quayle, in Boston to speak to an editors' meeting, attended the game, but was not introduced to a sellout crowd of 34,134.

Red Sox shortstop Tim Naehring, here seen in spring training, had an RBI single yesterday. However, it was not enough as Boston and Danny Darwin lost their home opener to Cleveland, 6-4.

"He provides an extra threat on defense," Garber said of O'Callaghan with a long stick. "The offense was beginning to stagnate. It wasn't him.

"With him on short stick, we just got bogged down in the crease," Garber said. "We're trying to open things up for for [Jim] Kushner and [Jim] McAleavey. We hope this will do it."

Other position changes include Mark Millon and Mike Caine. Millon started the season at attack, a change from being a midi.

Caine started as an attackman and was switched to midfield. Each has scored more goals at his newer position and Garber said the players seem pleased with the results.

Matt Garber's health remains in question and it was not determined whether or not he will play at press time. Injury-wise, Kenny Randazzo is nursing recurrent hamstring problems; Rob Falvey is recouping from a rough blow to the left shoulder; and Mike Webb is resting a sprained right thumb which took abuse during faceoffs against Providence.

Baseball powers their way to sweep of New Hampshire

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts baseball team, aided by seven home runs, including two by Brian Bright, continued their roll, sweeping the University of New Hampshire in yesterday's doubleheader in Durham, 8-4 and 9-6.

The Minutemen (11-15-1) erased an early 2-0 UNH lead with Bright's solo shot and Ian Torres' two-run dinger, but the Wildcats clawed back with two in the fifth to lead 4-3.

UMass came back with plenty of firepower in their half of the fifth, however. Bright connected for a grand slam, his second home run of the game. Glenn DiSarcina followed Bright with a solo homer, which capped the scoring for both teams.

Jeff Toothaker (1-1) pitched five strong innings and picked up the win. Rob Graziano relieved Toothaker, and held UNH scoreless.

In the second game, UMass capitalized on UNH's miscues in the field and two inside-the-park home runs after blowing an early 4-0 lead.

UNH had a big five run fourth inning, as they knocked starter John Russell out. Ralph Suozzo's two-run homer highlighted the scoring for the Wildcats.

But the Minutemen would not be denied. They took the lead with three unearned runs in the top of the fifth, thanks to two costly UNH errors.

Steve Corradi reached first on an error. With two outs, DiSarcina singled and Carelli hit a single that went by an outfielder to the fence and brought everyone around. This gave UMass a 7-5 lead.

After UNH's solo shot by Tsiamis in the bottom of the fifth, the Minutemen put the game away.

Rich Graham (2-2) relieved Russell and picked up the win, while Jeff Telgheder and Ron Villone held the UNH offense scoreless in the final two frames.

Nevertheless, UMass added two insurance runs in the seventh. Steve Corradi's inside-the-park homer accounted for one run, and scrappy play contributed for a second run. DiSarcina singled, stole second, moved to third on a wild pitch, and scored off Carelli's RBI double.

The Minutemen jumped out to the early lead with Mike Tobin's lead off homer in the first, and Joe Mattivello's inside-the-park round-tripper in the fourth.

UMass softball gets swept up by rival Connecticut

By DAN WETZEL
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts softball team had, in the words of its coach, Elaine Sortino "a very tough day."

The Minutewomen, ranked 20th in the nation and 1st in New England dropped two close games (2-1, 2-0) to the University of Connecticut yesterday in Storrs, Conn.

In the first game, Connecticut, ranked 24th in the nation and 2nd in New England, got one run in the first inning and another in the fifth as Kim Mizsko shut down UMass for the win

Although UMass was only able to muster three hits in the opening game they scored one run on senior transfer Barbara Marean's RBI groundout. However, according to Sortino, they rest of the afternoon UMass just couldn't push the runs across.

"We had runners on 2nd and 3rd in the first and we blew it," Sortino said. "In the sixth we had 1st and 2nd but we just could not come up with a run. We stranded 6 women on third base today, we just couldn't catch a break."

Junior Holly Aprile pitched the first game for UMass and only allowed one earned run in a complete game outing.

In the second half of the double header it was more of the same for UMass. Twice, in the 1st and the 5th, they had runners on second and third with only one out but came up short both times. UMass was only able to come up with four hits in the game.

"We just were not executing at the plate today," Sortino said. "We painted ourselves in a corner by leaving so many players on the base path."

Connecticut scored off sophmore pitcher Darlene Claffey in the first on a passed ball that, according to Sortino "took a crazy bounce off our catchers shin pad." The second UConn run came in the 5th on a two out double. Patti Conlon picked up the win for the Huskies.

On the day UMass left 12 runners on base, 6 on third, and committed 5 errors.

"This was a very disappointing and costly day for us," Sortino said. "UConn is right behind us in the both the national and regional rankings. We are extremely frustrated right now but the good news is that we get to play them three more times this year, so we can settle this on the field."

It doesn't get any easier for UMass. The Minutewomen travel to Philadelphia this weekend to meet up with St. Josephs and Temple.

"Those are two very difficult A-10 matchups for us," Sortino said. "We will have our hands full with those two. The team just has to regroup, this was a tough day and right now we have 17 or 18 very disappointed ballplayers, but we should be back this weekend.

UM heads to Philly

Mmm, mmm. Can't you just taste those cheese steaks and soft pretzels now?

The University of Massachusetts baseball team is hoping to sample more than just the cuisine of Philadelphia, PA. — namely, the sweet taste of victory. And while cheese steaks are loaded with saturated fats and salt, four wins over St. Joseph's University in two Atlantic 10 Conference doubleheaders this weekend in Norristown, PA. would be very good for the Minutemen's A-10 Tournament hopes.

The Minutemen are currently 3-1 in the A-10 Eastern Division, tied with Rutgers for second place. With Rutgers playing four games against first-place Temple (6-2) this weekend, four wins for Massachusetts over the 2-6 Hawks could boost the Minutemen into first.

Although the Hawks are 2-6 in the A-10, those losses came at the hands of Temple and Rutgers, two good teams. SJU has decent hitting, some good pitching and motivation — UMass swept the Hawks last season in Amherst.

The big gun as of late for the Hawks has been lead-off hitter Tom Veratti. The Sophomore outfielder was named Wilson/Atlantic 10 Player of the Week, currently leads SJU with a .340 batting average and is tied fore the team lead with 34 hits. Veratti batted .444 in the past week, leading the Hawks to four wins in seven games.

Teammate Jason Hamilton, who shares the Hawks' hit lead with Veratti, also leads his team and the A-10 with nine home runs and is second in the A-10 with 36 runs batted in. He has nine doubles and two triples.

St. Joseph's pitching staff averages 4.92 earned runs a game, which is good enough for second-best in the A-10. Mike Mangano has averaged a startling 10 strikeouts a game over 6 starts, but he has a record of only 1-4 and nine wild pitches to go along with all those "K"s.

As of late, the Minutemen have cranked out 34 hits in their last three games, with Glen DiSarcina, Brian Bright and Mike Tobin leading the way. If the Massachusetts can continue that sort of run support, then probable starters Daryle Corriveau, Jim Telgheder, Rich Graham and Scott Meaney may find their task easier.

Both doubleheaders begin at 12 noon in Norristown.

Gorillas set to face Yale

By ADRIEN MATT
Collegian Staff

Tomorrow the University of Massachusetts lacrosse team faces No. 15 Yale. UMass (No. 16) comes in only one notch below Yale but it is necessary to look at some numbers to understand just how crucial this game is.

On Wednesday, No. 3 Brown beat Yale 11-5. Had Yale beaten Brown, it would mean more for UMass to beat Yale. Now that the reverse is true, the win against Yale won't mean as much and a loss could be disasterous.

Yale has faced Top 20 teams with mixed results. The Elis have lost to No. 2 Princeton (17-8), No. 5 Virginia (13-6) and No. 11 Penn (9-4), but upset No. 14 Cornell (12-8), breaking the Big Red's winning streak.

Yale (5-4, 1-3 in the Ivy League) was held to one goal for the last three quarters in yesterday's match. However, the defense held Brown to one goal per quarter in the first half. Brown blew the doors off the game in the second half, scoring nine goals. Goalies Pat Flynn (Brown) and Rich Dressler (Yale) came up with 18 saves each and endured 36 and 44 shots on goal, respectively. Brown was able to capitalize on man-up opportunities 50 percent of the time, whereas Yale failed to do so in four chances. Brown also took 75 percent of the faceoffs.

If UMass comes out as strong against Yale as they did against Brown, they have a very real shot of winning. And there's more than just numbers.

Although UMass is not a team on a roll, it is a team on a mission. Losses to Brown and Cornell set them back but they're not down for the count — not by any stretch of the imagination.

"It's not over yet," said coach Ted Garber. With an easy win like Providence tucked in their back pocket, the mental aspect of their game becomes a little bit easier. Now comes the physical part.

The Gorillas have made some position changes, the most recent being Hugh O'Callaghan. Since the beginning of the spring practice, O'Callaghan changed from a defensive-midfielder to a short-stick midi. He now weilds a long stick again.

Sox stay in slump

By Dave O'Hara
Associated Press

Eric King's first game with his new team went a lot better than Danny Darwin's debut.

King pitched six scoreless innings and Brook Jacoby drove in three runs as the Cleveland Indians spoiled Boston's 91st home opener, beating the Red Sox 6-4 yesterday.

Darwin, one of Boston's new multimillionaires, was booed after giving up six runs on five hits, three walks and a hit batter in 1 2-3 innings. Darwin, signed for $11.8 million after leading the National League in ERA with Houston, wasn't so hot.

"I just didn't throw the ball well, that's the bottom line," Darwin said. "I was excited. Maybe I was trying too hard.

"You're going to have bad ones and unfortunately, it had to be on my first day for the Red Sox," he said. "I was missing all day, hanging sliders and throwing fastballs on the other side of the plate. I don't hit batters and I don't walk many batters. It wasn't a good day."

King, acquired with Shawn Hillegas in a winter deal that sent Cory Snyder to the Chicago White Sox, blanked Boston for six innings. He left during a three-run seventh and improved to 8-1 on the road since the start of last season. Doug Jones pitched the ninth for his second save.

"Things just about went our way," King said. "They just got the bad end of it today."

The Indians rocked Darwin for three runs in the first inning and added three more in the second, the last two coming on Jacoby's wind-blown triple off reliever Tom Bolton.

"When the wind's blowing like it was today anything can happen," said Jacoby, who drew a bases-loaded walk in the first. "It doesn't matter how things happen, as long as they do for you."

Marine Brig. Gen. Richard Neal, a military spokesman during the Persian Gulf War, threw out the ceremonial first pitch while dressed in combat fatigues and boots. After that, Darwin was in trouble.

"It was a crazy wind," Boston manager Joe Morgan said. "But Darwin wasn't himself out there. He was all over the place. He's had a cold for about five days and maybe that took something out of him. I don't know."

King retired the first 11 batters before Mike Greenwell's broken bat, looping single to shallow left-center with two

Weld confident he can manage state's deficit

BOSTON (AP) — Gov. William F. Weld says he's confident his administration can manage the state's deficit, despite a recent $150 million drop in revenues.

But chances are he'll have to shut down state government for a week to do it.

"We have all kinds of contingency plans so no matter what the figure turns out to be, we'll be able to have at our fingertips plans that will make us come in balance on June 30," Weld said.

Weld said a shutdown of non-essential state services is likely in June to help wrestle the deficit down to $80 million.

"My guess is that it's going to happen, unless we have a bright April 15 and the revenue picture turns back up," Weld said.

The shutdown will probably occur the week of June 24 to 28, to save about $2 million, and would be in addition to mandated furloughs for state employees. The shutdown of all but those services that protect public health and safety is one of several options the Weld administration has put forward to address a burgeoning deficit.

The state Board of Regents got official notification Thursday morning that the governor has declared state college faculty members "essential" employees. That means they do not have an option of being able to take time off without pay as can other state workers affected by the furlough plan.

But the teachers were anything but flattered. Instead, they are raising an uproar over the unwanted compliment, which allows the state to make them work for up to 15 days without pay until they leave state service.

"One faculty member told me 'Only fools work for I.O.U.'s and only slaves work without pay,'" said Suzanne Davis, president of the faculty union at Westfield State College.

At least one educator raised the prospect of a strike. "We are trying to persuade people that a strike is illegal and we could just be coughing up an additional day's pay," said James F. Rice, chairman of the Higher Education Leadership Council, made up of unionized teachers and others at the state's public colleges and universities. "But people are very angry."

"The time has come when we have to bring the higher education issue to a head in the Commonwealth," said Steve Wollner, a spokesman for the Massachusetts Teachers Association, which represents the professors as well as other public school teachers.

"The budgets for the colleges ad universities have been cut more than 20 percent in the past two years and now the governor wants to cut them another 20 percent," Wollner said "And for the one-half of Massachusetts college students attending public schools, tuition and fees have gone up 50 percent and 90 percent respectively."

The schools did receive some good news last week. Weld said he will not try to close any campuses this year, as originally planned. "We would not be able to close any schools without causing a major disruption in the system," said his spokesman Ray Howell.

But the governor still wants to cut $79 million from the state's contribution to higher education, Howell said, adding it will come from a 7 percent across-the-board cut in administration and higher tuition and fees.

That and other plans have led Weld to say he is confident the administration will balance the books when the fiscal year ends in two-and-a-half months, despite a $150 million revenue drop.

The deficit had been pegged at $850 million. The new estimate reflects a $150 million revenue decline and unanticipated spending of $20 million, kicking the deficit up to slightly more than $1 billion.

Students organize fundraising drive

First Call for Help program seeks community contributions

By SARAH DEMASTER
Collegian Staff

While First Call For Help usually aids other people, this Amherst organization is now doing what its name says to the community in a week-long fundraising drive.

First Call For Help, which provides a list of local and state programs and services, support groups, clubs and health professionals, relies on community contributions for much of its funding and usually has drives in the spring, according to Kelly Erwin, the program's director.

However, this year is different. For the first time, the campaign is being handled by students.

Sheri Matylewicz, a UMass junior majoring in human services, is one of about 20 students enrolled in "Women in Human Services," at UMass. The class was split into three groups, and each group was assigned to create a fundraising event.

"I just happened to be doing a work study at First Call. I knew they needed money and publicity," and mentioned the group to her teaching assistant, she said.

Erwin said First Call For Help hopes the Dime Drop Benefit, which runs until Friday, will raise enough money to counteract the slight deficit it has been running for the past two years.

The group, which needs $100,000 per year to operate, also receives funding by submitting proposals to the United Way, of which it became an agency eight years ago, and from the town of Amherst. Although located on the third floor of the Jones Library, the organization receives no funding from the library.

UMass senior Tara Pavia, also a human services major, is one of the six other students in the group assigned to aid First Call For Help.

"It's an important tool to learn how to start fundraising events, especially with the state budget cuts," Pavia said. "Many human services are being cut and the alternative will have to be fundraising instead of grants."

"Instead of sink or swim, just because of the economy, we don't have to go down with our hands up — fundraising is an alternative," she added. "I just feel this is an extremely important field and is looked over."

Erwin said people sometimes don't realize the importance of First Call For Help as well.

"[It is a] problem sometimes that people don't understand what we do. They don't see it [being] as important as a homeless shelter, or a soup kitchen, but for people who don't even know where to start," the group is essential, she said.

The organization, started in 1975 by a reference librarian who has since returned to become the library's director, provides free and confidential services to residents of Hampshire County. While not a crisis hotline, most people access the group by telephone.

Last year the group received 5,600 calls, of which 70 percent were from low-income people, and 70 percent were from women. Fifty percent of these calls dealt with basic material needs, such as food, clothing, housing and transportation, or health care, both mental and physical, Erwin said.

Information about the organization as well as a container for donations will be located until Friday at a table on the Campus Center Concourse.

First Call For Help, located at 43 Amity Street, is open Monday through Friday from 9 a.m.-4:45 p.m., and can be reached at 256-0121 or outside Hampshire County at 1-800-339-7779.

Group protests voluntary prayer at BOG meeting

By ALEX DERING
Collegian Staff

Last Thursday's Board of Governors meeting was disrupted when a group calling itself "Hymie Nation" held a protest concerning a recently passed motion which allows for a voluntary Christian prayer to be said at each BOG meeting.

BOG member Daniel Cohen, who formed Hymie Nation, explained his actions as "an absurd response to the equally absurd idea of having prayers said at a governmental body meeting."

"Hymie Nation was born out of frustration [that] the BOG would pass a motion patently offensive to so many students, both Christian and non-Christian," he said.

The prayer in question says, in its entirety, "Dear Lord, please bless this meeting and the governing body. Thank You. Amen."

Cohen had previously tried to have the motion for the prayer reconsidered. However, Robert's Rules of Order, followed by the BOG, requires a two-thirds majority in order to suspend the rules to consider a motion not on the agenda for that evening's meeting. Cohen could not get the requisite two-thirds.

He then formed Hymie Nation, a group whose purpose was "to protest in a humorous vein." The word "Hymie," considered a slur by most Jewish people, was chosen, according to Cohen, "to show solidarity with Queer Nation" as several members of Queer Nation were in the group of protesters.

Queer Nation, in a similar venue, had adopted a name considered offensive to the bisexual, homosexual and lesbian members of that group.

Hymie Nation held a mock service, according to Sean Sullivan, who helped organize the group. Sullivan said he made a brief statement about the BOG having offended Jews, atheists and most other Christians by adopting the voluntary Christian prayer.

Professor speaks on Israeli conflicts

By JOE O'CONNOR
Collegian Correspondent

"I did more harm than any Israeli," said Yehoshafat Harkabi, "when I released my data in 'Arab Mind.'"

Professor Harkabi, Hexter Professor of International Relations and Middle Eastern Studies at Hebrew University in Jerusalem, spoke on present Israeli conflicts at Amherst College Sunday.

"The crux of the Arab/Israeli conflict is the Israeli/Palestinian conflict," Harkabi said. "There is no possibility but settling by negotiation." Harkabi gave several reasons why such negotiation may come soon.

It seems Arab neighbors to Israel are more accepting of Israel's prescence, Harkabi said.

For instance, in 1985, King Hussein of Jordan and Yassar Arafat of the Palestinian Liberation Organization proposed a "Peace for Territory" proposal.

In all of Harkabi's years of studying Arabian political dogma, this was a first, he said. "I've never come across such an expression," he said.

Also, in November of 1988, the PLOr stated acceptance to a two-state solution with a mixed Israeli/Arabian population. Harkabi pointed out at one time the PLO demanded all of Israel. Now, he said, they only ask for one-forth.

Harkabi also said complete annihilation of the state of Israel has become less feasible with time.

It was this destructive mindset Harkabi detailed in his study of the Arab/Israel conflicts in his publication called "Arab Mind." The result, Harkabi admitted, caused much animosity toward him.

He went on to further detail reasons for a near-future settlement of the Israeli/Arab conflict. Harkabi emphasized one would be Arab leaders would feel internal pressure from their people to settle the issue.

"They'll say, 'You bargained with the United States over the issue in Kuwait. Do the same with Israel.'" he said.

Though the occupied territories may not be easily given up, Harkabi said, "The longer we delay (a compromise), the more difficult it will become to reach a settlement."

On the other hand, Harkabi said giving up the West Bank would be difficult, since "the money and industry (invested) into the West Bank would be lost. . .and national pride will be hurt."

Harkabi said a third party is needed for negotiations, and the United States is a likely candidate.

However, he said if Israel delays a settlement, then the United States will "either give up hope and let peace talks stagnate or force a confrontation with Arab leaders and Israel's government.

"It seems to me that we're moving towards negotiations," he said.

At the lectured, members of the Palestinian Solidarity Committee, a Five College Group, handed out literature concerning Harkabi's role in military and strategic affairs prior to his academic career.

School of Education dean to leave for Purdue University

By AMY HENRY
Collegian Staff

Citing the state's fiscal problems and its impact on the University of Massachusetts, the dean of the School of Education announced yesterday that she is leaving to take the same position with Purdue University in Indiana.

Marilyn Haring-Hidore will stay at the University until mid-June. She assumes her new post on July 1. There has been no decision on the process for replacing Haring-Hidore, according to University Spokesperson Karin Sherbin.

"I am sad that the debilitating economic and political climate in Massachusetts has limited the possibilities of what we could do together," Haring-Hidore wrote in a memorandum to her staff announcing her impending departure.

"However, I will always be glad that I came to the UMass School of Education and worked with some very fine people."

In that memo, Haring-Hidore noted that the National Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education recently had some high praise for the School of Education and other academic programs on campus involved with teacher education.

The accreditation team called the program "a model for what can occur when an institution takes seriously," the mission of preparing teachers with the core of knowledge needed to be good teachers, Haring-Hidore said.

"It appears that the School is well-positioned to survive and eventually prosper, and that pleases me a lot," she said. "Please know that the School will always occupy a special place in my heart."

President-Chancellor Joseph Duffey said, "In the three years that Dean Haring-Hidore has been at the University, she has guided the School of Education effectively through some very difficult times. She has confronted substantial budget cuts, she has reorganized the school and she has led its programs in preparation for an important national accreditation.

"Dean Haring-Hidore has been a wonderful colleague and she will be missed. She has, since her first days on campus, spoken eloquently and effectively for teachers and for children — and for their schools."

Provost Richard O'Brien said, "This is just one more blow to our campus caused by the unceasing assaults on the University's budget and morale. It is becoming harder and harder for the University to maintain its academic quality.

"I hope that elected leaders see this latest resignation as a signal that the state has to re-dedicate its resources to public higher education or else shortchange our students and our future."

Haring-Hidore came to the University in August 1988 after serving as associate dean and director of graduate studies in the School of Education at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro.

Also at North Carolina, Harding-Hidore was an associate professor of counseling and specialized educational development and a senior research associate with the university's center for research and evaluation.

At UMass, Haring-Hidore established the Commonwealth Academy for Mentoring. The Academy was established to develop high quality mentoring programs for preparation of educational personnel and those in other sectors of the workplace. At the heart of its mission is collaboration between institutions of higher education and schools, exploration of the role of mentors in teacher preparation and induction and fostering the empowerment of women and people of color in education through mentoring.

SPRING — April's flowers, nurtured by March's showers, were in full bloom during last week's warm weather.

Hodgkins, Collins debate education

HOLYOKE (AP) — The nine Democratic candidates seeking to succeed the late Silvio Conte, R-Pittsfield, in Congress subjected each other to some close questioning on abortion and state funding of education at a forum here.

The three Republican candidates — former Westfield Rep. Steven Pierce, Clarksburg broadcasting executive Donald Thruston and Pittsfield lawyer Jane Patashnick — are to face off Tuesday in a similar forum, sponsored by the League of Women Voters, in Pittsfield.

The Democrats began sedately enough on Sunday until state Rep. Christopher Hodgkins, of Lee, claimed he could match the educational commitment of former state rep. James Collins of Amherst. Collins, who was House chairman of the Legislature's education committee and served briefly as chancellor of higher education in 1986, has repeatedly chastised the three state lawmakers in the primary for sharp cuts to the state's public schools.

"I'd advise him to follow me around and I'd advise him to look at my legislative record," said Hodgkins.

"As a matter of fact I've looked up your record," Collins replied. "Indeed, I've brought it with me."

And waving a copy of a roll call vote on a 1989 amendment to restore $16.7 million to public higher education, Collins pointed out that Hodgkins was absent for the vote, although he was present and had voted on roll calls minutes earlier and minutes afterward.

"You took a walk on that issue," Collins charged.

Hodgkins said he opposed the amendment, because he was concerned about funding and felt other human service programs needed support. He deliberately skipped the vote, Hodgkins said, because as a graduate of the University of Massachusetts "I didn't want to vote against the University."

"I'd never vote against my alma mater in order to save it," Collins said.

Support for higher education has emerged as one of the key economic issues in the sprawling 1st District that encompasses two state colleges, two community colleges and the 25,000-student University of Massachusetts, as well as several private colleges. And Collins has gained considerable attention for maintaining he was ousted as state commissioner of higher education by former Gov. Michael S. Dukakis for his outspokeness.

Congress emphasizes highway safety

WASHINGTON (AP) — As congress considers whether to require automakers to dramatically improve the fuel economy of new cars the debate is expected to focus less on energy conservation and more on highway safety.

"We need not, and should not, choose between safety and fuel economy. We can have both,' insists Sen. Richard Buyan, D-Nev., chief sponsor of a bill that would require new cars to have an average fuel economy of 40 miles per gallon by 2001.

His views are echoed by many environmentalists and some leading auto safety advocates. They contend that fuel efficiency can be improved dramatically without making cars smaller and that whatever reductions there are in size can be compensated for by new safety devices and tougher federal safety standards.

But auto industry executives and Bush administration officials argue that the only way to meet Bryan's fuel efficiency standards would be to make cars smaller and lighter, compromising their safety.

Since the late 1970s, the government's Corporate Average Fuel Economy requirements have resulted in a doubling of new-car fuel efficiency from an average of nearly 14 mpg to about 28 mpg for each automaker's product line. Many lawmakers see the potential for additional fuel savings in the decade ahead if Detroit is prodded by Washington.

Bryan's legislation requiring a 40 percent boost in fuel economy is awaiting Senate floor action after clearing the Commerce Commit??????ng the legislation.

Energy Secretary James Watkins has dubbed the Bryan bill the "National Highway Death Act" and Transportation Secretary Samuel Skinner maintains it would "undermine this country's progress in highway safety."

State employees protest Weld's policies

BOSTON (AP) — As Gov. William Weld marked his first 100 days in office, about 12,000 of his workers demonstrated against him and the policies he has promoted.

Angered over proposed furloughs and the elimination of government jobs, the disgruntled state employees, union representatives and other activists marched on the Statehouse Saturday asking Weld to "defend the 'common' wealth" as he balances the budget.

"I just got laid off and Weld wants to cut my unemployment benefits,' yelled Linda McEacheun, a fourth-year electrician apprentice and a single parent.

Demonstrators began a march at City Hall Plaza, circled the Boston Common and trekked up Beacon Street to the Statehouse steps.

"Our jobs are in jeopardy, but the institution of education is in greater jeopardy," said Paul Devlin, president of the Massachusetts Federation of Teachers. "We're here to tell the governor that he's got to get in touch with the middle class and stop the hemorrhaging of free public education in the commonwealth."

The administration has eliminated 1,344 state jobs so far, and plans to cut a total of 3,000 jobs by the end of June. The governor's fiscal 1992 budget calls for elimination of an additional 4,600 state jobs.

Also, Weld has proposed that state workers take furloughs to help balance the state's budget. Weld said he would make a symbolic deficit-reducing gesture by taking a week-long furlough from his own job.

Protesters carried signs that read, "Stop the cuts, defend the 'common' wealth" and "Make the rich pay."

"We're getting slaughtered by Weld's budget cuts. It's scary," said Ed Hunt of Boston City Hospital. He said funding for his position expires on April 18.

The Weld administration has pushed its deficit estimate from $850 million to $1 billion for the remaining two-and-a-half months of the fiscal year. Administration officials' plans for 1992 savings include some one-shot items, such as employee furloughs and the sale of surplus property.

"They want to make us work on furlough days," said Gloria May, a supervisor at Wrentham State School for Mental Retardation. She carried a sign that portrayed Weld with a baby's body with the words: "Our fair-haired boy is not too fair."

No Business As Usual
Stand up to save UMass

This is something we never thought we'd say: For the sake of your education, don't go to class for the next two days.

Governor Weld has hatched a series of proposals for public higher education that will make past years of budget cuts look like Easy Street. After being forced to work without pay, the faculty has taken the lead in fighting for the future of our university. In a meeting of the Massachusetts Society of Professors, they unanimously voted to take a stand against Weld's so called "furlough" and other budget cuts.

Tomorrow and the next day, the faculty will begin a state-wide campaign: No Business As Usual. Other employee unions on campus have voted to join them.

The campus unions have a strong history of fighting for quality, affordable education. In fact they had proposed to Weld a deal by which the faculty would work through the "furloughs" in return for a guaranteed three-year allocation at the original 1991 budget level. Weld rejected this very modest plan and instead designated faculty "critical and essential personnel." He ordered them to work without pay by legally grouping them in with police, firefighters and prison guards.

Weld has thrown down his cards. He's demonstrated a determination to destroy quality affordable public higher education. He has made it clear that he will accept no appeal to reason.

These next two days of No Business As Usual must send a powerful message to the statehouse. To do that, we must all participate. Undergrads and grads must join the faculty in working to save this university. Everyone concerned about public higher education will gather in the Student Union Ballroom at 9 a.m. (yes, 9 a.m.) for the next two days.

The days will be spent lobbying, picketing and demonstrating our concern for education. We will be sending the statehouse and legislature a message by mail, by phone and through the media. No Business As Usual can send a strong message — if we all work together. We'll see you tomorrow morning.

Unsigned editorials reflect the majority opinion of the board of editors

When UMass gets hit, we all hurt

The events of this week on the campuses of the state universities and colleges are an effort to draw attention to the travesty in public higher education in Massachusetts. Preceding these events were intensive efforts to lobby legislators and solicit the support of alumni, parents and the business community. Consistently the message has been to maintain the quality and efforts, the Mass. Society of Professors has consistently opposed tuition increases, scholarship to loan conversions and salary reduction measures that have served as an inducement for highly talented faculty and staff to leave the University.

Most students recognize what they have lost, or stand to lose, by Governor Weld's policies toward public higher education. Students at UMass have been asked to pay more than public higher education students in nearly every other state. Increased tuition and fees have not gone towards the maintenance or improvement of the quality of their education. In fact, tuition is largely retained by the state. Fee increases are retained on the campus; however increases have not even come close to offsetting the cuts in state appropriations in funding for public higher education.

Meanwhile, faculty and staff have made similar sacrifices. We are in our third year without a pay increase, while health insurance, taxes and the cost of living have risen. Our take-home pay has declined over the last several years, and will decline dramatically when the upcoming "furloughs" take effect. Many faculty and staff cannot afford to remain and have accepted offers elsewhere. The faculty and staff that remain are working at wage levels that range anywhere from 10 to 40 percent below the salaries of faculty at comparable institutions in other states.

Most of us have chosen to remain and fight for the quality and accessibility of the University, despite the fact that our abilities to provide an education and a reasonable quality of life for our own families is threatened.

It is urgent that we deliver a strong message to Governor Weld, while simultaneously giving our friendly legislators the courage to oppose his policies regarding public higher education.

Jane Giacobbe
Vice-President, Mass. Society of Professors

An invitation to students

Join us. No Business As Usual tomorrow and Thursday at UMass!

Instead of the usual classes, meetings and administrative work, faculty, staff and students will be protesting three years of budget cuts and plans for yet more cuts next year.

Join us on the picket lines, in special classes and discussions about the crisis and in planning for ongoing political action. Help us launch a campaign to save this university and public higher education in Massachusetts.

The legislature and the governor have failed to provide adequate funding for public higher education. It is up to us.

Which will you choose — Two days of canceled classes or whole programs eliminated next year? Help initiate the movement to energize the public to fight for their colleges and universities.

Wednesday morning we will gather in the Student Union Ballrooms to kick off No Business As Usual. We look forward to seeing you there. Join us.

John Cole
President, Mass. Society of Professors

The slavery budget cut

I'm confused.

Ever since I was a wee brat, I was told that I had to work for what I wanted. If I wanted a paycheck so I could eat, pay rent, buy clothes, and basically keep myself alive, I had to work for it. The corollary being that if I don't get paid, I shouldn't have to work.

So far, so clear.

Pamela McCarthy

Now comes the hard part.

Because of the economic problems in Massachusetts, professors are supposed to work for no pay. Because the people we elected into office didn't want to balance the books years ago, the people who are educating us (and, in the long run, we students) are getting ripped off.

I've heard plenty of arguments for the furloughs. "These professors get paid so much of our tax dollars, it's about time they give something back to society." "If they stuck to private schools, they wouldn't have to worry." "The loss of money won't hurt them that much."

Give me a break, people.

Professors and educators are already giving something to society: Education. Something we should value much more than we do. What's this crap about them taking from society? Get real. If it wasn't for them, no one would be educated enough to get those jobs that pays those taxes we all whine about paying.

Why should any professor go to a private school to teach? Anyone who says that should check out how much some of these places cost. I don't care how much you work or save, some of us just can't afford to go. And I don't see why I should be penalized because I can't — or don't want to — pay for a private school. Remember people, students and parents pay taxes too, and it burns me up to see they aren't used for my benefit.

I don't care how much a professor makes. The fact that they are expected to work for no pay is abhorrent.

Professors don't have a cushy job. They have to teach subjects to people who are either fulfilling a requirement and really don't care about the subject, or who are really interested but totally clueless. I've had to write extensive papers for classes with about 150 students in them. Someone has to correct those papers. Professors usually do research and get published. If they don't, they get buried.

What about the bozos who got us into the Savings and Loan crisis? No one has asked them to work for no pay. What about the legislators who vote themselves a huge raise, or vote in raises for administrative staff, but when it comes to teachers or professors, they are seen as expendable. We don't value education in this country. If we did, we'd show students, teachers, and professors more respect than we do now.

The professors should strike. Some may think that's because students have nothing better to do than lie in the sun or get wasted in the afternoon. But we could cut classes to do that, if we really didn't care about learning anything. We're out of high school, now. We can make that choice if we want to.

I support the strike because they are doing what I was taught. You work for what you get. And if you get nothing, that's what you should give: Nothing. If we aren't careful, we'll lose the professors who teach us. They'll go where their services are appreciated.

Work without pay is called a "furlough" now. In former times, we were blunt about the concept and called it by its true name.

Slavery.

Banning porn won't help

There I was, studying about obscenity laws in my civil liberties class, when I picked up a newspaper and read about Hampden County District Attorney William Bennett raiding an "adult" bookstore and confiscating 355 magazines and books labeling them "obscene."

Meredith O'Brien

When my political science professor told the class about raids on "adult" theaters and bookstores in the 1950s and 60s, members of the class laughed. It seemed absolutely ludicrous for the police and the court system to bother running around playing Big Brother, protecting us from so-called evil material. (At that time, what was rendered obscene would be considered PG today.)

But my amusement, or disbelief — that the government actually thought it could temper society's actions by shutting off what its citizens could read, listen to or look at — turned to disgust. I couldn't believe that today, people still harbor the idea that they can change society by allowing the government to tell its citizens what they can or cannot read.

The material Bennett confiscated was hardly chock-full of literary value and stylistic prose. What he seized was hardcore porn, books that only the sexually demented and mentally deranged purchase to get their jollies. Toting such titles as Rape of a Virgin Aunt and Two Cousins to Torture (and these are the tame ones), this material represents everything that feminists hate. It degradates women — reduces them to sexual objects — advocating their rape, torture, mutilation and beating simply because they are women, objects for men to use as they please.

This is Bennett's point. He claims that this material offends the community and should be purged from it because it advocates criminal activities and perpetuates the negative stereotype that women are men's sex toys. But Bennett does not stop at simply banning this material from legal sale, he also wants people who sell this material to be arrested. Yes, arrested.

Come on folks, let's use our heads. Does anyone really believe that outlawing obscene material will stop the astronomical amount of violent crimes committed against women? Does anyone think that the men who purchase this material will suddenly see the light?

We are not going to get Joe Schmo Rapist, who houses a huge portfolio of violent pornography in his bedroom, to believe that women are inherently equal to men and are not sexual objects by outlawing pornography. We are not going to get Sam Hormonally Throbbing Teenager to regard women as people and not jiggling body parts by telling him he can't buy sexually explicit literature.

Look at what happened to 2 Live Crew's disgusting album which contained a song glorifying rape. Once it was banned in Florida its sales skyrocketed. When material is banned, its appeal goes through the roof. Everyone's curiosity automatically peaks because obtaining what is forbidden is always more exciting.

You will not convince a vehement sexist that his views toward women are wrong by taking away one of his toys. You have to talk to him, show him why things are wrong, how certain attitudes and actions hurt women and treat them as objects. Outlawing pornography will not change people's actions or viewpoints. Not one iota. Education, discussion and societal rejection of sexist, stereotypical concepts and actions is the only way to turn people around.

And if Bennett has the idea that if the state of Massachusetts, or the entire country for that matter, bans pornography that it will simply go away like a bad hangover, he is sadly mistaken.

Did the arrest of the Florida record store owner who sold a 2 Live Crew album render their smut unobtainable? No, it only made 2 Live Crew more powerful, and with the glaring spotlight, they were able to perpetuate their sick and disgusting message even louder.

I loathe pornography. It is the symbol of a sick society. It is a symbol of the violent and patriarchical society we live in.

By banning porn we are overlooking the real problem. We cannot treat sexism and violence against women by burning books or by allowing the government to make our choice of literature for us. That just won't cut it.

BOG

Love (The Beast Within remix)," in which she reads passages from the Bible's book of Revelations, was performed.

The song was selected, according to Sullivan, because of its heavy religious content.

"This was an action by a group of people who find voluntary Christian prayers just as offensive as voluntary prayers of any other [religious denomination]," said Sullivan. "This motion is imposing Christian values on the BOG."

The event ended when Sue Gordon, the chair of the BOG, pulled the plug on the stereo the group was using.

Gordon could not be reached for comment, and Vice Chairperson Edward Corrigan did not return phone calls placed by the Collegian.

Both Cohen and Sullivan repeatedly stressed Hymie Nation was a one-time protest of student government failings.

Student government, claimed Cohen, has tried five times in the past four years to change its structure and has failed to accomplish anything.

He also said serious issues, like the budget cuts for public higher education, had been pushed aside for less weighty ones like the Guy Glodis Talk Show.

"The Commission on Student Governance," said Cohen, referring to the recently-formed commission charged with designing a new student government acceptable to students and administrators, "is the kick in the pants the Senate needed to get started working."

Because the Commission on Student Governance will most likely restructure the BOG extensively, a more serious protest of the voluntary prayer motion was not organized, said Cohen.

"Hymie Nation was an impromptu piece of guerilla theater intended to shock people," he said.

Neil Hockstein, a newly-elected member of the BOG, said although a voluntary Christian prayer will offend some non-Christians and is wrong, the protest by Hymie Nation was worse.

He labelled the event as "abominable."

WOMEN'S ISSUES

POWER prepares for congressional elections

By ALEX DERING
Collegian Staff

The UMass Progressive Organization for Women's Rights (POWER), met last night to discuss plans for bringing attention to the position of the candidates for the first congressional district seat on the issue of abortion rights for women.

According to POWER President Gina Gombar, the group is planning an intensive information distribution, including tables at the Campus Center and canvassing other campus buildings, including residence halls.

"We've got to make the biggest effort we can in the next two weeks. It's going to be hard to motivate students on this issue because the furloughs have been on everyone's minds," said Gombar.

Working in conjunction with the National Abortion Rights Action League (NARAL), POWER is seeking to "educate, not influence" the voters, according to Gombar.

"Even in liberal states, there are many attempts to pass legislation that would erode Roe vs. Wade," said Gombar.

She also said many of the candidates for the congressional seat are pro-choice and neither POWER nor NARAL was supporting one specific candidate.

On April 17, NARAL is expected to issue "report cards" on the candidates. These report cards will be specific statements, by the candidates, expressing each candidate's exact stance on the issue of reproductive freedom for women, said Gombar.

Copies of these report cards should be available at the POWER office in the student union by Friday, she said.

Media representation of the candidates, according to Gombar, will be crucial as it is the media which decides whether to put the issue of choice at the forefront or to focus on another issue in its place.

POWER will be circulating the Massachusetts Student Pro-Choice Voter Pledge Petition through some classrooms in the next few days in an attempt to increase voter awareness of the issue. The petition, paid for by a NARAL political action committee and not authorized by any candidate or candidate's committee, urges students "... to vote for and work to elect only pro-choice candidates to office in the special election this spring."

The Democratic candidates who are pro-choice, according to a memo issued by Elissa McBride of NARAL, are John Arden, Stephen Bloomfield, Donald Robinson, former state Rep. James Collins, Senator John Olver (D-Amherst), former state Rep. Sherwood Guernsey (D-Williamstown) and current state Rep. Chris Hodgkins (D-Lee).

On the Republican side, Don Thurston, endorsed by Silvio Conte's widow, is the only candidate who is clearly pro-choice. Jane Patashnick, another Republican candidate, does not have a clear stance on the issue of choice, according to the memo.

The other candidates, Hampden County Commissioner Leonard Collamore and Senator Linda Melconian, from Springfield, of the Democratic party, and former state Rep. Stephen Pierce, from Westfield, of the Republican party, are anti-choice, according to NARAL's memo.

The importance of the report cards, said Gombar, is that they will "nail down" a candidate on where he or she stands on the issue of abortion and prevent "flip-flopping."

POWER also discussed the problems with the parental concent laws in Massachusetts, which require minors to obtain parental concent in order to have an abortion performed in the state.

According to Gombar, many minors go out of Massachusetts for an abortion and cannot raise money for return check-ups. This leads to an increased number of post-procedural complications, such as infections.

Argentina more open to women

Visiting scholar cites greater mobility, autonomy in society

By ELIZABETH BUTTS
Collegian Correspondent

One of the main ways in which Argentinian women have developed public and private anti-authoritarian struggles is through their roles as mothers, a scholar of Latin American studies said in a presentation titled "The Invisibility of Mothers in the Democratic Transition of Argentina" held at Smith College yesterday.

Beatriz Schmuckler, who is a Visiting Tinker Fellow at the University of Massachusetts, said women's growing autonomy has been overlooked in analyzing democratization in Argentina.

"Changes in women's gender identity," Schmuckler said, "particularly changes toward a greater autonomy to rethink and redefine socially the concept and practice of motherhood, have been the main factor in promoting democratization at three levels of society [in Argentina]."

According to Schmuckler, Argentinian women have more of an impact in private and public institutions, training new generations in democratic or authoritarian values; outside traditional political organizations, developing a new type of collective action; and within the family, struggling to achieve a better position of authority for women in the home sphere.

"Through their political and community action," Schmuckler said, "women have disarticulated the ideological paradigm of the sacred mother that is traditional in popular culture: the mother allied with and at the service of the authority. The mothers' struggle in different realms therefore redefined femininity and disentangled the subordinate role from the democratic aspects of femininity."

Women's contribution towards a "more stable society" remains invisible, Schmuckler said, if the "liberalization of social institutions in daily life" is not taken into account.

This liberalization, Schmuckler said, became possible because of a greater freedom in the public sphere for women which increased female citizenship; the deepening economic crisis which made economic participation by women easier; and "the reciprocal effects of changes in the community and the home which erased the separation between these two processes of democratization."

Schmuckler identified three types of struggles of women-as-mothers: the antimilitary movement of the Mothers and Grandmothers of the Plaza de Mayo; the mother's non-conventional collective action in poor neighborhoods; and the mother's "power negotiations" to increase their authority and to provide new representations of gender and gender arrangements within the family.

These struggles took place during the military regime of the 1970s, during the liberalization of the country which began after the defeat of the regime in the Falklands War, and after the democratic election of Raul Alfonsin.

IUD dangers overrated, medical journal claims

NEW YORK (AP) — A study has found intrauterine devices do not increase the risk of pelvic infection, directly contradicting findings 10 years ago that condemned the Dalkon Shield and other IUDs.

The latest finding, published in the current issue of The Journal of Clinical Epistemology, charges the 1981 Women's Health Study report "showed an almost complete disregard for epidemologic principles in its design, conduct, analysis and interpretation of the results."

A committee of the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists will begin evaluating the report this week, The New York Times reported yesterday.

Dr. Harold Kaminetsky, an official of the group, said the report would be taken seriously because it "appears to be good solid work and it appeared in a very good journal."

The new report was based on raw data from the original study, and was run by a researcher who was a consultant to A.H. Robins Company of Richmond, Va., the maker of the Dalkon Shield.

The original study, sponsored by the National Health Institute, concluded IUDs heightened the risk of pelvic infections by 60 percent, but also found two devices other than the Dalkon Shield showed no increase in risk.

But an author of the new report, Dr. Richard A. Kronmal of the University of Washington's Department of Biostatistics, set up 12 points commonly used by researchers to evaluate studies like the 1981 report, and found 10 violated standards one way or another.

Dr. Kronmal's findings centered on the way researchers selected the women used for scientific comparison. The other authors of the report were Dr. Carolyn W. Whitney of the University of Washington and Dr. Stephen D. Mumford of the Center for Research on Population and Security in Research Triangle Park in North Carolina.

Finds from several other reports have also contradicted the 1981 study, and experts attribute the differences to variations in research methods.

The Women's Health Study report played a key role in litigation against Robins, sued in a class action filed by thousands of women who suffered health problems they attributed to the Dalkon Shield.

Silicon breast implants feared cancer-causing

WASHINGTON (AP) — Manufacturers of silicone breast implants have until early July to prove they are safe as regulators await results from a study of a possible link between two widely used brands and a cancer-causing agent.

Results of a laboratory study on implants made by Surgitek and marketed under the trade names Meme and Replicon are expected to be available in a week or two, a spokeswoman for the Food and Drug Administration said Sunday.

The product consists of silicon coated with a polyurethane foam to avert development of painful and unsightly lumps.

The FDA study concerns the potential breakdown of the polyurethane coating to a chemical known as 2-toluene, or TDA, which causes liver cancer in rats and other research animals.

"The FDA has conducted the laboratory study and it is analyzing the results of the breakdown of the polyurethane to TDA," said the spokeswoman, Susan Cruzan.

The New York Times, in its Sunday editions, quoted unnamed scientists familiar with the experiments as saying preliminary calculations indicated the implant might cause cancer at the rate of 200 to 400 cases a year for every million women in whom it is inserted.

Karen Garoukian Ferraro, a spokeswoman for Surgitek, a Racine, Wis., subsidiary of Bristol-Myers Squibb Co., said the company had conducted its own studies and believes that its product is safe.

Mrs. Ferraro said the FDA has not advised Surgitek of any agency findings. She said the company's scientists had concluded that the slow biodegradation of the foam creates a substance that prevents the release of TDA.

She said the company's studies show the risk of cancer would be less than one in several million. Risks of one in one million are generally considered to be insignificant, she said.

On April 10, the FDA gave makers of silicone breast implants 90 days to prove that they are safe or to stop selling them.

Breast implants were on the market in 1976, when Congress gave the FDA authority to regulate them, and were "grandfathered" into the market.

In 1988, the agency classified them as among the most stringently regulated medical devices, giving it authority to ask for evidence of their safety after a 30-month waiting period.

In its April 10 ruling, which followed the waiting period, the FDA said concerns about the implants include infection, pain, hardening of the surrounding breast tissue, false mammography results and silicone leaks.

ARTS & LIVING

Where there's smoke. . .there's fIREHOSE

By JEREMY BROWN
Collegian Correspondent

I ventured into The Music Box, a bar between Venice Beach and Westwood, 15 minutes from from San Pedro. A stone's throw form Lawndale. This must be the place to see a fIREHOSE show. . . .

Bass guitarist Mike Watt, drummer George Hurley and guitarist D. Boon formed the band the Minutemen in their hometown of San Pedro, California. That was in 1980. After the tragic loss of D. Boon in a van crash, Columbus native (and musical novice) Ed Crawford heard rumors that Watt and Hurley were auditioning frontmen for a new band. In reality Watt had little intention of starting again musically. But Crawford journeyed to LA anyway, with hopes of "hooking up" with Watt and Hurley.

Fourty messages on Watt's answering machine later, Mike Watt invited him to San Pedro. Crawford promptly acquired a sleeping space beneath Watt's desk, and the trio began writing songs as fIREHOSE.

Their first release on SST was Ragin' Full On in 1986. Most of the lyrics were written by Watt and former Black Flag Kira, who wrote the songs when they were the eight-stringed duo of bass, Dos. Ragin' was followed by if'n in 1987, and then fROMOHIO in 1989, both on Lawndale's SST label. On April 26 firehose will release Flyin' the Flannelr on Columbia. The band's name, by the way, comes from Dylan's Subterranean Homesick Blues ("Better stay away from those who carry around a firehose").

I questioned Crawford about the move from the notoriously anti-corporate SST to Columbia.

"I don't know," he answered, "we take care of ourselves."

Unappeased by Ed's insight, I was plenty worried about that major label thing. Then I obtained an advance copy of the new LP from Sony Mind Police agent Ami B. I'm not going to analyze it for you — but I'll tell you that it's hot those booming bass riffs, those violently accurate drums, and that working class commitment that has made fIREHOSE heroes in their own time. It's more similar to Ragin' than the other two. After listening to this LP, any worries that I had about the major label move have dissipated.

fIREHOSE can definitely take care of themselves.

. . .The line at The Music Box is starting to spill out onto Pico Boulevard. I'm there with m-biker chum Steven Fowler. We had spent the last of our money that day at Rhino Records in Westwood, where Steve ran into an old friend, so we couldn't frequent the bar. Instead we people-watched.

It's a diverse crowd. A lot of obviously music-biz types were crowded around the bar. A lot of clean cut UCLA guys were there also. Plus a lot of black-outfit-bad-

Parks receives award for excellence

For the second year in a row, a member of the UMass Music Department has received the Paul Smith Conductor of the Year Award at the Massachusetts Music Educators Association All-State Conductors Conference Banquet.

Last year, the honor was bestowed upon Professor Walter Chesnut. This year, George Parks, an associate professor of music at the University, received the award at the banquet given on March 22 at the Sheraton Hotel in Worcester.

Parks was honored for the significant contribution that he has made throughout his career in the field of instrumental music education.

Parks is a frequent clinician, guest conductor and adjudicator for marching and concert bands. He is director of the UMass Minuteman Marching Band. Considered to be one of the finest marching bands in the Northeast, they have been invited to perform at a variety of events including two Presidential inaugurations, New England Patriots games and New York Giants games. Professor Parks is also the director of the University's Concert Band.

Parks founded the George N. Parks Drum Major Academy. He is also responsible for many films, articles and books that provide information on the drum major. Parks has been given the Outstanding Drum Major award at eight Drum Corps Associates World Championships.

In 1989, he received the University of Massachusetts Distinguished Teaching Award.

The award was made by the Massachusetts Instrumental Association. According to MICA secretary Dennis F. Wren, Parks was chosen because his, "hard work, dedication and musical skills are appreciated by his students and recognized by his peers."

accessories people. Everybody seemed a lot more interested in schmoozing than getting a good spot in front of the stage.

A midwesterner-looking fellow wearing a hat introduced himself to Steve and I. He said that he worked at I.R.S. Records.

"I hear this band Firehouse is pretty cool."

"It's fIREHOSE."

"Yeah. Firehouse."

I didn't even want to correct him.

Just when the whole scene was starting to really bug me, Mike Watt strolled out from backstage.

"Night of the Living Basshead!," I said to him. He laughed, offered his hand and called me his "home boy." I expressed my dismay with the audience. He agreed that things looked pretty tame. I explained that I was a student in Western Massachusetts.

"Northampton," his face lit up, "we like playing there."

fIREHOSE will be performing with The Vestrymen at Pearl Street in Northhampton tonight at 8 p.m. Concertgoers who wear something flannel to the show will receive $1 ticket discount.

sion of Continuing Education offer, free of charge, some expert advice on the basics of making it as a professional artist. On April 16, 22 and 29, the AES will present a three-part lecture series designed to inform students about traditional and non-traditional opportunities, give ideas about promoting their work, and to introduce the basics of financial management, copyright, etc.

Successful visual artists, musicians, theater producers, actors and craftspeople will join AES staff to talk about their own career strategies.

If you haven't got any clue how to break into that seemingly intangible world of the professional artist, and are one of those art major seniors whose only hope seems to get lucky or "be discovered," or even you've already graduated and just want some inside advice from people who know the inside angle on the art world, come to this work shop. It will definitely be worth your while, and at least you won't have to look like Dan Quayle.

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"I like it when housemates aren't around, because I always am."

— overheard

By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Be content to deal with your regular work. A raise is possible if you tackle even routine matters with enthusiasm. Romantic partner is very understanding now. Share a happy secret.

TAURUS (April 20- May 20): Domestic and office tasks are a breeze today. Dig in — you can make any job look like child's play! Stop dwelling on old emotional wounds. Weigh your words when arguing with someone.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your special rapport with a friend or group is in the spotlight. Put a secret plan into action. Old pals will prove their loyalty again and again. You experience true peace of mind.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Group activities are favored today. Cancel social plans and tend to business. Strong family ties will help you cope with any ups and downs at work. Give a stubborn attitude the boot.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22):The pace quickens at work, placing extra pressure on you. Rise to the occasion – VIPs will be impressed. Reject friends' stock market tips; your romantic star shines brightly now.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Office and household tasks go quickly today if you engage in teamwork. Remember to keep loved one's best interests at heart if you want your relationship to flourish. Put romance on hold.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A desire to meet more people puts you on a new path this week. Banking matters require closer attention to detail. Your mate or partner could be pressuring you. Talk things over!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A sensitive day for financial matters. Be careful if asked to act as a go-between in a business deal. Some unexpected good news may involve travel to foreign shores. Pack a bag!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Do not try to do it all alone today. Teamwork is favored and will help boost profits. Encourage seniors to participate in community projects. Refuse to let a family squabble get you down.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Resentful people may be difficult to reach. Try a new approach.Become more self-reliant. Working on a research project could prove therapeutic. You have more strength than you realize.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Make the most of your work day by attending a group function. Refuse to be rattled by someone's temperamental ways. A friend's advice could save you hours of anguish. Cherish your friendships!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Welcomed career or financial news is featured. Your ideas get a hearing with the right people. Make a new beginning! You appreciate your freedom more than ever now. Go slow in romance.

In that race, six African runners, including Hussein, went out at a sucidal pace for the first 20 miles, breaking 11 course records along the route.

But they couldn't keep it up, and Gelindo Brodin of Italy, the 1988 Olympic gold medalist, whipped past them at 21 miles and went on to win in 2:08:19, the second-fastest ever at Boston.

This time, the pace was more sensible, and Hussein's patience and dicipline paid off.

"I didn't want to do things like last year," Hussein said. "My idea was to win the race."

Hussein kept disposing of all the early contenders as the later miles kept clicking off, before putting away his most serious threat, Ronan, with about four miles in the testing 26-mile, 385-yard race from Hopkinton to the center of Boston.

Now you can afford to dream in color.

Apple introduces the Macintosh LC. If you thought that finding a color Macintosh® system you could afford was just a dream, then the new, affordable Macintosh LC is a dream come true.

The Macintosh LC is rich in color. Unlike many computers that can display only 16 colors at once, the Macintosh LC expands your palette to 256 colors. It also comes with a microphone and new sound-input technology that lets you personalize your work by adding voice or other sounds.

Like every Macintosh computer, the LC is easy to set up and easy to master. And it runs thousands of available applications that all work in the same, consistent way—so once you've learned one program, you're well on your way to learning them all. The Macintosh LC even lets you share information with someone who uses a different type of computer—thanks to the versatile Apple® SuperDrive,™ which can read from and write to Macintosh, MS-DOS, OS/2, and Apple II floppy disks.

Take a look at the Macintosh LC and see what it gives you. Then pinch yourself. It's better than a dream—it's a Macintosh.

and Kristainsen.

Perhaps the most gallant performance — by a man or woman — was by Samuelson.

The 1984 Olympic gold medalist and American record-holder, who had not won a marathon since beating Kristiansen at Chicago in 1985 in 2:21:21, the American record, had come into the race with much trepidation after a two-year absence. In her last marathon, she was a disappointing ninth at Boston in 1989, in a race won by Kristiansen.

Afterward, Samuelson fought back tears.

"I didn't have the day I wanted," Samuelson said then. "I'm duly humbled. I'll be back."

Beset by injuries, illnesses and the birth of her second child, Samuelson had to wait two years for her comeback.

Monday, her goal was not necessarily to win, but just to break 2:30 and be competitive again.

She did it easily, clocking 2:26:54. Although she faltered toward the finish, being overtaken by Jones (2:26:40) in the closing mile, and by Pippig (2:26:52) in the final stretch, Samuelson was exhilarated by her performance.

"I was tearing after the race," she said. "But they were tears of joy, not tears of frustration."

"It didn't come as a shock when Kim came smoking by me. But I was surprised when Uta snuck by me."

Kristiansen, also running her first marathon in two years — she also had a child last year — was timed in 2:29:24, more than eight minutes slower than her world record of 2:21:06.

Panfil's winning time made her 39th overall.

Hussein also was excited about his victory.

He also had been a bust in his previous marathon, dropping out of the 1990 Boston race after 20 miles because of cramps in his

■ lacrosse wins at Yale

Yale's Brian Walter lead a one-man rally in the fourth quarter scoring thrice in seven minutes and giving Yale their first lead since the first quarter at 5-4.

Ed O'Callaghan assisted Jim McAleavey to tie the score at 5-all. A sudden death overtime of four minutes ticked down and left the tie untouched. Kushner decided the second overtime at 4:09.

Kevin O'Connor had his best outing yet winning 13 of 15 faceoffs which became critical possessions. But the game was more than just numbers, it was almost electrical.

"There was definately an energy flow on the bus coming down here," said UMass coach Ted Garber. "We knew coming here that guys like Kushner, [Hugh] O'Callaghan and McAleavey would have to come up with more plays in order for us to win — and they did."

Yale's Jeff Curran initiated the scoring unassisted at 5:06 and a Rick Senatore-Mike Caine combination tied it at 1-all. Yale responded with a Seth Dunn-Walter goal and Mario Guaglianone answered unassisted to tie it again to end the first quarter at 2-all.

Guaglianone netted another unassisted at 1:34 in the second quarter for a team-high two goals. UMass kept the 3-2 lead to the half.

Mark Millon scored with one second remaining in the third and Yale responded in the fourth with three consecutive Walter goals.

With 1:31 remaining in regualtion, the Yale bench was issued a penalty of 30 seconds for unsportsmanlike conduct, as a result of rough play by Eli David Ryan.

Garber said he was experiencing a bit of deja vu, looking at a 5-all scoreboard. When UNH faced Yale last year, Yale was in a man-up situation and had possession of the ball with 50 seconds remaining in regulation. Yale threw the ball away and UHN scored on a fastbreak to win the game 6-5 in regulation.

This was Yale's first overtime this season; they were 0-2 in overtime play last year. UMass is now 1-1 in overtime, 4-2 for the season.

"I feel happy for the players," Garber said. "A win like this makes you feel good. It's good to know you've worked hard all game and won."

Millon leads the Gorillas with 18 goals and five assists. McAleavey is not far behind in points at 20, with eight goals and 12 assists. Kushner has netted 10 goals and contributed four assists.

Lax takes Yale in 6-5 2OT

By ADRIEN MATT
Collegian Staff

NEW HAVEN, Conn. — With 51 seconds remaining in the second overtime, Jim Kushner netted the winning goal against Yale as the University of Massachusetts lacrosse team put away a 6-5 victory Saturday.

The Gorilla midfielders and defense held Yale scoreless for 42 minutes of play in the latter half of the first quarter and throughout the second and third quarters. Scrappy play and frustration occupied the larger part of those quarters for the Elis as they threw away fastbreak opportunities with lousy passes.

Ted Kellerman finished the day with 14 saves in 36 shots on goal for an overall saves average of .597.

Jim McAleavey (30) and Mario Guaglianone (1) contributed one and two goals, respectively, to the Gorillas' 6-5 double overtime victory at Yale Saturday.

Softball bounces back

UMass sweeps Saint Joseph's and Temple

By THOMAS A. GEORGE
Collegian Staff

The sweet song of revenge was sung this weekend, as the University of Massachusetts softball team defeated Atlantic-10 Easten Conference co-champion Temple.

The Minutewomen clipped the Owls wings in a doubleheader in Philadelphia Sunday, 6-1 and 13-3.

"I thought it was an immense win by a team under absolutely terrible conditions," said head coach Elaine Sortino.

The weekend proved to be open season on birds of prey, as the Minutewomen downed the St. Joseph's University Hawk's, on Saturday. The doubleheader yielded two 11-0 routs for UMass.

During the 1990 season, the UMass squad faced Temple thrice. All three meetings ended in UMass wins.

Come tournament time, the Temple club never faced UMass, due to weather. The A-10 committee handed down a ruling that UMass and Temple would share the conference crown as co-champions.

"They're very upset," Sortino said of her players at the time. "I'm totally and completely frustrated."

"We felt kind of cheated," echoed pitcher Darlene Claffey, when asked about last year's decision. "But you just take it every year as it comes, and play them like a whole new team."

Holly Aprile stood tall on the hill for the first game, making her 14th appearance of the season. She threw a seven-inning game, allowing one run off three hits.

Aprile has a 1.47 ERA and has recorded one save. She notched her 46th strike out of the season in the contest and has allowed 18 walks.

Aprile record stands at 9-5 with three shutouts. Her record since the trip to California is 7-1.

In the second half of the twin bill, Claffey took the mound, giving up five hits for three runs, over six innings.

Claffey has posted her ninth win, which includes a staggering four no-hitters inside of eight shutouts. The sophomore hurler has a 9-4 season record.

"It's nice to have a lot of hits," Claffey said in reference to support from her team. "It's definitely easier to pitch when you're ahead."

Claffey has 54 strike outs and an ERA of 1.65, not allowing home runs or triples. Even the down side is bright with only 16 walks and three wild pitches.

The wins resumed the team's winning streak, which was interrupted by losses to UConn.

"After the losses, we needed to regain our composure," said Claffey.

The Minutewomen face the Rhode Island Rams today in Kingston, R.I. This will be the second meeting of the season for the two ball clubs.

The 4-0 and 9-0 shutouts registered by UMass were attributed to a weak pitching staff. URI carries three pitchers on their roster, all of whom were relieved by each other during the contest.

UMass rang out 21 hits against URI's five, all of which came in the first game.

"They didn't make any mistakes," said URI coach Sue Tougas after the double header.

Claffey produced six strike outs in the no hitter and Aprile tallied four strike outs in her shutout.

Minutemen split pair of doubleheaders at St. Joseph's

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

PHILADELPHIA — The way the University of Massachusetts baseball team has been hitting, you'd think that if Richard Graham could hold the St. Josephs Hawk's to four runs, UMass could win.

But St. Joe's Robert Anne held UMass. Anne gave up only one run on three hits against the Minutemen, who in the first three games scored 29 runs, as the Hawk's earned a series split with a 4-1 win in the fourth game. The split leaves UMass at 5-3 in the Atlantic 10 and 13-17-1 overall.

"My roommate told me that when you play UMass, duck, because they always hit the ball," said Anne, whose sidearm curve baffled the Minutemen for most of the fourth game "holding UMass to one run, that really helps."

The Hawk's jumped on Graham for three runs in the second inning, courtesy of a Tom Verratti's single, which drove in Chris Carmolingo and Rich Coletta.

UMass threatened to win the game in the bottom of the seventh.

John Carelli singled, Dave Edwards walked and Mike Tobin was hit by a pitch, loading the bases.

But Steve Corradi's fly ball to center was hauled in by Varatti, ending the two-day, four-game series at two apiece.

The Minutemen won games two and three with a flurry of hits, after suffering through a sloppy first-game effort.

UMass quickly jumped out on to lead, and never looked back in games two and three, smoking 10 extra base hits for 24 runs.

In game two, after scoring two runs in the first, the Hawk's were silenced, as Scott Meany turned in another strong performance on the the mound, striking out seven.

Corradi and Glen DiSarcina both smacked RBI doubles in a hot UMass fifth inning, adding to a 4-2 lead. DiSarcina had three hits on the day for UMass.

Corradi had another RBI with a sacrifice fly, and a double from DiSarcina knocked in a runner to make the score 7-2. St. Joe's never threatened from that point on.

The Minutemen picked up where they left off in Sunday's opener, cruising to an easy win behind a 12-hit attack. The win came behind a strong effort from pitcher Jim Telgheder.

Derrick Dana and Corradi both homered for UMass, Dana's homer coming in the first inning and driving in two runs. Corradi hit a two-run homer in the third making the score 12-1. He had three RBI on the day.

Brian Bright and Ian Torres knocked in four runs in the second, hitting back-to-back ground-rule doubles. UMass loaded the bases on a Carelli single, an error, and walks to Mike Tobin and Jay Dodig setting up Torres' and Bright's doubles.

That was all the run support Telgheder would need, as he turned in one of his better efforts of the year.

"I just threw strikes and the defense did the work for me," credited Telgheder of his teammates. "It's always good to pitch with a big lead, because it takes the pressure off of you."

Baseball preps for UVM

The streaking University of Massachusetts baseball team prepares to face off against a tough Vermont team in a doubleheader at 1 p.m. today at Earl Lorden Field, as they hope to continue their recent success.

The Minutemen have rebounded from a slow start against some stiff competition in Florida, and have won seven of their last 10 games. Leading the way for UMass has been outfielder Brian Bright, who is leading the team in hits, home runs, runs batted in and doubles.

Mike Tobin and Derek Dana have also been productive this year. The least of the Minutemen's problem has been the offense. When the team has slumped, it has usually been a result of poor pitching and/or defense.

Like UMass, Vermont is worried about how many runs their pitchers will surrender. The Catamounts lost one of their best pitchers, senior co-captain Chris Rosseau, when he injured his elbow during the preseason. He needs surgery and will be out for the entire season.

Vermont has the potential to be one of the top teams in the North Atlantic Conference, and they may have the best outfield in New England. The trio of left fielder Steve Taylor, centerfielder Jim Wawruck and right fielder Mark Buckler help to put many runs on the scoreboard for UVM.

Hussein wins third Marathon

By BERT ROSENTHAL
The Associated Press

BOSTON — For the first 92 years of the Boston Marathon, no African runner won the race.

Ibrahim Hussein of Kenya ended that drought in 1988, beating Juma Ikangaa of Tanzania by one second in the closest Boston Marathon ever.

Monday, the 32-year-old Hussein won again, the third victory by an African in the past four years. This time, Hussein won easier than three years ago.

Running a smart, controlled race, staying with the lead pack throughout, Hussein was timed in 2 hours, 11 minutes, 6 seconds, beating Abebe Mekonnen of Ethiopia, the 1989 champion, by more than 50 yards.

Medonnen came on fast in the closing miles and overtook Andy Ronan of Ireland in the final mile, finishing second in 2:11:22. Ronan was third in a personal-best 2:11:27, while favorite Douglas Wakiihuri of Kenya, winner of three straight marathons over the past two years, wound up sixth in 2:13:30.

The women's favorite, Ingrid Kristiansen of Norway, also was badly beaten, losing for the first time after six victories since 1985.

The women's 1-2 finish was the same as at the New York City Marathon in November, with Wanda Panfil of Poland the winner in 2:24:18, the second-fastest ever by a woman at Boston, and Kim Jones of Spokane, Wash., the runner-up. It was the first victory by a Polish runner — man or woman — in the Boston Marathon.

The top two were followed by Uta Pippig of Germany, Joan Benoit Samuelson of Freeport, Maine, Kamilla Gradus of Poland

Professors to strike against cuts

By MARC ELLIOTT
Collegian Staff

Angry faculty, staff and students will not work or go to classes today and tomorrow and instead plan to head for picket lines protesting Gov. Weld's job furlough plan and higher education cuts.

The "job action," as organizers describe the two-day protest, will be kicked off with "informational pickets" from 7:00 a.m.-9 a.m. at the three main entrances to campus and from 9 a.m.-4 p.m. at several administrative and academic buildings on campus. Picketers will a break at noon for an hour-long rally on the Student Union Steps.

The Whitmore Administration Building, Bartlett Hall, Herter Hall, the School of Management Building, the Morill Science Center, the Graduate Research Tower, Thompson Hall, Machmer Hall and the South College Triangle are to be picketed today and Thursday.

The picketing is not meant to discourage people from entering the University or from going to class, but to educate the public about the damage being done to public higher education by state budget cuts, according to picket coordinator Sara Lennox, a professor in the German Department.

"We will encourage faculty, staff and students to join our pickets but we will not discourage anyone form going to class," Lennox said.

Leaflets with information regarding the effects of recent budget cuts will be distributed to commuters stopped at red lights by picketers in the morning and then to students, faculty and staff on campus in the afternoon.

Rallies will be held in front of the Student Union tomorrow at 9 a.m. and at noon.

Participants at the noon "Access to the University" rally plan to march from the Student Union to the campus pond after hearing various union leaders, faculty and students speak.

Once at the pond, ralliers tentatively plan to encircle the pond while a spokesperson will throw tea into the water to compare the unity of faculty, staff and students against budget cuts to the unity of American dissidents against British taxes more than two centuries ago.

Alternative education, to explain the need for public higher education in Massachusetts, will be held in the Student Union Ballroom from 9:30 a.m.-4 p.m.

More pickets and rallies are also scheduled for Thursday.

Many University staff members and students have recently joined the Massachusetts Society of Professors' decision, made last Thursday, to spend today and tomorrow protesting public higher education cuts. About 750 faculty are expected to cancel class, according to MSP President John Cole.

"The MSP call upon the faculty not to conduct business as usual, but instead to engage in public actions protesting the dismantling of pubic higher education," was the motion passed unanimously by the more than 300 faculty who attended Thursday's MSP meeting.

The Graduate Employee Organization decided last night to ask graduate employees to support the faculty and to "not conduct business as usual" while still fulfilling their contractual obligations, said GEO representative and job action organizer James Dell.

"GEO intends to fulfill its contractual obligations, but we feel at this point it's necessary to support the faculty in this action," he said.

While the University Staff Association (the clerical union), the Service Employees International Union (the professional union) and the American Federation of State and Municipal Employees (the physical plant union) support the job action, it is unclear whether or not the unions have officially asked their members to participate.

President-Chancellor Duffey last week said he encouraged professors to hold classes. Duffey also said he sympathized with the faculty and that he would do what he could not to be the "agent of enforcement" for the state if the professors chose not to work.

Although the two-day "job action" is now being organized and run by an alliance of faculty, staff and students, the idea originated two weeks ago in a MSP meeting when it was proposed that the faculty all take their furlough days at the same time and shut down the University in protest of the state's furlough program.

The governor told faculty last week that they would have to work and receive deferred payment, after declaring them "essential and critical" personnel, barring them from legally choosing not to work and not get paid.

Before they were declared "essential," professors could either not work and not get paid or not work and receive payment for those days when they leave state service.

Letters urge parents to fight cuts

By AMY HENRY
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts Society of Professors Union has launched a letter-writing campaign asking parents to take an active part in putting pressure on Gov. Weld and state representatives to stop further cuts to the higher education budget.

The campaign comes in response to Gov. Weld's recent furlough program which mandates that state employees work a certain number of days without pay.

Professors have been handing out envelopes to students in their classes asking them to write their parents' address on them so they can press parents to lobby legislators. Ten thousand letters have been sent out to date. Professors are enclosing postcards addressed to state senators and representatives inside the envelopes.

The letters also tell parents to call Gov. Weld and "ask that he stop the cuts, restore funding, and make public higher education a top state priority."

A member of MSP and professor involved in the campaign Jules Chametzky, director of the Institute for Advanced Study in the Humanities said, "We're sending these letters because we want parents to take an active part in saving their son or daughter's education. We are asking that they call their local representatives urging them not to cut higher education next year."

According to Chametzky, tuition and fees have risen 60 percent in past four years.

"Higher education is in a crisis and these new cuts in 1992 will be crippling. We're hoping this campaign can head off cuts and keep level funding," he said.

"We are asking the parents to be aware of what is going on," Chametzky said. "We feel if there is enough pressure from all over state we may be able to stop the destruction of higher education."

Students to rally in Boston

Some 1,000 students are scheduled to lobby in Boston today against Gov. William Weld's proposals to further cut public higher education.

A press conference is scheduled for 10 a.m., to be held on the State House steps.

Mark Montigny, president of the Fall River Chamber of Commerce; Jim Braude, director of the Tax Equity Alliance of Massachusetts; Mark Roosevelt, chair of the House of Representatives Education Committee and several student leaders are scheduled to speak.

Following the press conference, students plan to lobby legislators door-to-door.

"Everyone's a lobbyist, no one's a spectator," said Student Trustee Angus McQuilken.

"We're gonna go to everyone's door and whoever is there, we are going to sit down and talk to [them]," he said.

In October of 1989, some 20,000 students, 3,000 from UMass led an angry protest in Boston, which many remember for its chaos and subsequent destruction of the Statehouse's flower garden.

"This will be a lot more controlled than the last one," McQuilken said.

Students from the Massachusetts College of Art baked a cake the size of an average person, which they have dubbed the "student body." At noon, in the Statehouse's Dorik Hall, students plan to "feed" the cake to members of the legislature to illustrate that they are demolishing education.

International Center moves to Goodell Library

By AMY HENRY
Collegian Staff

The Clarke International Center was temporarily relocated yesterday to the Goodell Library after a "suspicious" fire destroyed much of the building last Wednesday.

According to Maryelise Lament, associate director of International Programs, the program has been relocated to the North Reading Room in Goodell until a permanent location can be found.

She said the program may remain there until the end of the semester but the decision of where it will be permanently moved will be made in the upcoming weeks.

The center served international students as well as students interested in studying abroad.

Lament said although a lot of the center's material was lost, very few vital files were lost. Efforts to replace lost and damaged ones are in progress, she said.

"We expect to maintain all services and we are in the process of xeroxing smoke-damaged files so we can reconstitute files as much as possible," Lament said. "Essential documents such as immigration records can be xeroxed, but luckily most students have copies of these."

Transcripts for study abroad programs have survived and credits still will be able to be transferred, she said.

"What is most important is that we maintain contact for overseas programs for study abroad and exchange students," she said.

The new phone numbers for the center are 545-2710 for the study abroad program and 545-2843 for international students. These numbers will be in operation later this week. If students have an emergency they can call these numbers and leave a message.

Women explore body image through writing

By LISA VESHECCO
Collegian Correspondent

A powerful act occurs when women come to write about their lives, according to local poet and fiction writer Leslea Newman.

Through the application of simple writing techniques, Newman encourages women to explore issues of body image in the workshop.

"We all deserve somebody to love," Newman said.

As women come to write about love and unconditional self-acceptance of their bodies she said women find out that they can write.

Newman will be holding a one-day workshop entitled "Some Body to Love," this Saturday in Northampton from 1-4 p.m.

She said her goal is to bring women to this place of realization. "Every woman has something important to say and write," she said.

"Some Body to Love" is open to all women with all ranges of experience, including beginning writers.

Newman said this is a writing workshop, not a "diet workshop."

One participant, Yohah Ralph, said she started attending Newman's workshops as a beginner writer.

Looking for an outlet for self-expression, Ralph, herself an artist, said the workshops gave her a way to research herself through writing.

"I address different aspects of my personality through writing," Ralph said. Character development and autobiographical writing are styles which she said she learned from Newman.

"The workshops are productive and there are plenty of assignments that are given during the workshop," said Ralph.

Ralph, who is getting ready to publish one of her written pieces, has been involved with three of Leslea's workshops.

Newman has published several including Good Enough to Eat, a novel about a bulemic woman. She also facilitates a variety of workshops, including one titled "What You Are Eating/What Are You Eating/What's Eating You," for women with eating disorders.

She is also running an upcoming workshop entitled "We are All Daughters" for mothers and daughters on May 11.

For more information, call 584-3865. A sliding scale fee is available for women interested in attending.

Israeli occupation, curfew of Palestinians criticized

By MADANMOHAN RAO
Collegian Staff

The effect of Israeli occupation and the recent curfew in the West Bank and Gaza Strip formed the focus of Umaiyeh M. Khammash's talk yesterday at Amherst College.

Dr. Khammash is the vice president of the Union of Palestinian Medical Relief Committees. Established in 1979, the UPMRC is a health care organization which today comprises several hundred physicians, nurses, pharmacists and other health workers.

"The current plight of the Palestinian people needs to be examined in the backdrop of two crucial events in the Middle East — the mass immigration of Soviet Jews, and the recent Gulf War," Khammash said. "Both have grave consequences for the future of the Palestinian people as well as for the peace and stability of the region and the world.

"As the Cold War came to an end, there were many who placed hope in this new historical age," Khammash said. "Unfortunately, recent events have demonstrated beyond doubt that a free hand has been given to the forces of domination and oppression. Nowhere has this been as marked as in the case of the Palestinians."

He continued: "For 50 years, the Palestinians have been denied their most basic human rights, while Israel has been lavishly rewarded for aggression and violation of human rights. United Nations resolutions providing for the protection of the Palestinians from the brutalities of the Israeli army occupation have been shelved.

"Increased settlement in the Occupied Territories continues despite the fact that the United Nations has deemed it illegal and in violation of the Geneva conventions," Khammash said.

Thanks to a shift of world attention towards the Gulf region, he said, the Israelis are taking advantage of it by resorting to "extra brutal" measures with the least degree of accountability.

"It is very alarming that there is shift in the Israeli cabinet towards the right," he said. "There is a talk of transfer in the air. The waves of Soviet Jewish immigration, increasing unemployment, and the attempt to break down the Palestinian infrastructure and the will of the people is a way to tell them to get out."

Under the pretext of security during the Gulf War, Khammash said the Occupied Territories were placed under 24-hour curfew for 45 days, which was the largest in 25 years.

"The whole population was kept under siege and house arrest. This was a form of collective punishment," he said.

"While Israel claimed that the curfew was lifted on occasion, the truth is that these announcements were made suddenly and without advance notice, the curfews were lifted for only a few hours at a time, and there were selective restrictions," Khammash said. "For instance, in the Gaza Strip, the curfew was lifted sometimes only for women. On the West Bank, it was lifted at times only for those above 40 years of age.

"Most health care groups were banned from movement. Some hospitals were operating with only 35 percent of the staff," Khammash said. "Patients were turned back by soldiers and refused treatment. A pregnant woman was told to get permission from a military officer, and she gave birth in his office."

Khammash said he and other doctors received phone calls from women who were giving birth. "Since they could not make it to hospitals and the doctors could not reach them, we gave them instructions over the phone."

There has also been an increase in malnutrition and outbreak of measles in the Occupied Territories, he said. "This also has a very harmful psychological effect on adults and on children."

He said another significant issue concerned gas masks.

"Even though the Palestinians, like the Israelis, were under the threat of chemical attacks, the Palestinians received almost no protective measures or instructions," he said. "A shipment of ampoule injections, meant as antidotes for chemical gas, was delayed by the Israeli authorities for three weeks."

One very common criticism, Khammash said, which Israel has used very heavily as a propaganda tool, is the fact that the Palestinians supported Saddam Hussein. "Yes, we were cheering the missile attacks on Tel Aviv," said Khammash, "but that was not because we wanted to kill Israeli civilians.

"It was because of the bitterness and resentment of being under Israeli occupation for 24 years." This should actually be used as an indica'ion of the seriousness of the problem, Khammash said, and how important it is that it should be settled.

Addressing the killing of 26 Palestinians by Israeli security forces in the Al Aqsa mosque last October, Khammash said that he was involved in the treatment of several of those cases. "Many of them had been shot from behind, proof that they were running away from the Israeli forces.

"They had also been shot in the neck and chest, clearly indicating that the Israelis were attempting to kill them," he continued. "Medical support for the victims was also obstructed. In one case, the three members of an ambulance team were shot at, and one nurse lost her arm."

Speaking of the future of the Palestinian issue, Khammash said: "What is needed is not just autonomy in the form of a municipal government. It is a question of political rights, and the right of the Palestinian people to national dignity. This can be resolved only through an independent state."

The Shamir proposal, which the United States seems to approve, still leaves Israel with most of the authority and control in the territories, and is not acceptable to the majority of the Palestinian people, Khammash said.

Addressing the role of the Intifada, the uprising of the Palestinians, he said, "The Palestinians have no choice — the Intifada is the only answer. The Intifada has different forms, and involves more than just throwing stones. It is also building up the infrastructure of the Palestinian people, such as through the UPMRC."

Pissed off? Working together we can make a difference

I'm a newcomer to UMass — a university that defines itself against other universities and colleges whose students pay at least 10 times as much tuition as we do.

Roger Long

Did you know that Harvard — a "theological seminary" by law — pays no property taxes? Yes, it's true. Harvard University, with billions of dollars in endowments, pays no property taxes. In spite of this, the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, land of the private school, will furlough workers, cut its public education budget, and eventually carry out its goal of making UMass into another Amherst College.

As taxes and general living costs fall more heavily onto the shoulders of working people, UMass will regress to a school that will admit those who are precisely the ones who won't have to worry about its high costs of attendance: the wealthy who benefit from our labor and/or the labor of our parents. The wealthy who eventually will only end up in the statehouse passing more budget cuts.

One minor glitch, of course, is that the best professors at UMass will have already left. Those who can sell their houses, that is. What do we get in return?

UMass raises next semester's fee by $79. UMass increases the bill for those who will be living in dorms next semester. And there are innumerable hidden costs, as you know. Does this actually mean higher revenue for the University? I wonder. Actually, the dorms have been having a difficult time lately attracting enough students to fill them. You people in Southwest should know what I mean.

The fact that all graduate students in Prince next year will have single rooms has nothing to do with the kindheartedness of Whitmore. The University has too much dorm space and it doesn't know what to do with it. Otherwise, they'd by building more student housing, or at least filling up what they had. And this will inevitably lead to higher dorm bills for you who remain living on campus.

There's a major contradiction here. Fees go up to increase revenue; the number of students who can afford to pay the new fees goes down. Fees go up, students go down, etc.

It's vital to realize that this cycle is supposed to continue until UMass turns into Amherst College Jr., just like Billy "the liberal Republican" Weld wants. So then what will happen to us? Can we get jobs? It won't be so simple. Already more and more young people between the ages of 21 and 30 are living with their parents, when 10 years ago they might have had decent jobs and their own apartments.

It sure isn't due to a lack of willingness to work. Many young people who can find jobs just don't earn enough to support themselves, and others simply can't find work or have to rely on sporadic employment with temporary agencies. The average number of hours worked by workers in this country has in fact increased in the past decade, not decreased as the victim-blaming conservatives want us to think. As wages go down, of course people have to work more hours to make ends meet!

Without strong universities, without strong unions — both of which we should fight for — we're sunk. And they want to sink us. The people in power are doing their utmost to preserve their privilege at our expense.

So what's the "solution?" For one thing, consistently oppose those who would claim that students shouldn't be too upset by next year's fee increase. As people who deserve better you should be upset. I'm pretty pissed off! But, alone, as students, we can't do it all. As students and workers — That's a different story.

Porter: 'Don't confuse message, messenger'

In light of the recent criticism concerning the "Frotter" comic strip, it is important to remind people to not confuse the messenger with the message. Racism was portrayed in the strip, but the nature of comics, including "Frotter," is often to lampoon attitudes such as these. While the characters portrayed were racist, the overall message of the strip and the creator is not.

David Duke is an admitted racist. His beliefs are not acceptable. However, it is vital to be aware that racism existed in this area before he came to speak and that it did not leave when he left. The racial inequalities inherent in society makes it difficult for African-Americans and other minorities to advance. The purpose of the strip was to remind people of the problems that still exist and which are being perpetuated in this area.

There are two valid questions which may be raised about the strip. These are whether the racial attitudes portrayed are an acceptable subject to lampoon and, if so, was it done in an acceptable manner? I feel that the answers to both of these questions is "yes." However, I do realize that humor is very subjective and some people may not agree with me.

If one was to say that the attitudes of the characters were racist, that person would be correct. If it was said that the strip and/or the creator is racist then that is incorrect.

Alumnae need to take an active role

As a recent graduate, I attended this University when people still had a reason to be proud and boast about higher education in Massachusetts. The past years of continuous cold bath treatment from officials in Boston have numbed all high-spiritedness and a justified sense of pessimism has become pervasive. The prospects for public higher education appear to be dismal. The University will have a hard maintaining, not to mention recruiting, the talented faculty and staff who gave this school a strong and merited reputation. The quality of education will suffer in other ways as well. One of the better learning experiences I had in college was in meeting people of different backgrounds and challenging views. It seems more likely though that in the future the student population will be headed towards a "selective" and stifling homogenization. The result will be a dull and pre-fabricated environment.

Even though, as alumnae and upperclass men and women, we are least affected by these events, we should still take on an active role. Our society and culture teach us to think that we owe our accomplishments exclusively to ourselves, that we are self-made individuals. I know that I on my part could spare some of my sense of pride and self-esteem and be left with a good dose. At different times during my college years I received help and encouragement from people at the University even when I didn't ask for it, and even didn't deserve it. We ought to be able to give back at least some of the help that all of us at one time or another got while we were here.

The use-and-dispose attitude that the clique in Boston is showing towards state employees is fit at most for a BMW, not people. We don't need to stoop to this debasing form of behavior in our relationships with people. We've had better experiences and we're more gifted. They are afraid to hear that we won't put up with this anymore. I doubt any of them could take it on the chin a couple of times and still get back on their feet. The people in Amherst have shown they can. By taking an active role as alumnae, the University would have one reason to be optimistic again. I think we owe it to the people here.

Let's shut down Boston by phone

We are not governors, representatives, political leaders nor individuals with large amounts of power. But we are one thing. We are more than 20,000 people.

What can 20,000 people do without the desire or the means to cause violent protests? There are two things to start with.

At 3:00 on Friday, every person who is reading this article should call this number: 1-617-555-1212. It's the directory assistance number for the 617 area code (Boston). It's free. It takes very little energy and effort and 10,000 phone calls to the same number within a 10-minute period have the tendency to tie up the major trunk lines of the phone system for hours. When you call, try to stay on the line with the operator for as long as possible. Maximize the effect.

At 5 p.m. on Friday, every person who is reading this article should turn on every light around them, operate every appliance, and in general, suck electricity out from the wall outlet. Don't be surprised if your power goes out for a few hours — 10,000 people all drawing from the same current within a 10-minute period is quite effective at creating blackouts.

If Gov. Weld doesn't want to listen to this — if there is no response — do it again on Saturday.

And Sunday. And Monday. Do it until he decides that he's heard us.

Ten thousand people with the power of the phone system and the electric company in their hand are difficult to ignore.

Hampden Snackbar guffaws

There are several ways to describe that movement of muscles and breath that occurs when you are amused. You can say, "she laughed 'til she wet herself," or "we giggled all the way to the bank," or "boy, wuz we in hysterics. . ."

Guffaw is what you can do tonight if your interested in rhythmically flexing your solarplexus while breathing out cough-like breaths. Under the auspices of the new "Guffaw Comedy Series" presented by Res Arts, comedians Al Ducharme and Donna Cooper will be gracing Hampden Snackbar tonight for to get your ha ha-s out.

Bragg mixes music and politics at Horse

By ANDREW BROADHEAD
Collegian Correspondent

I can still recall the first time I heard a Billy Bragg song. It was July of 1986 and I'd just finished high school and flown to England with a backpack. I turned on the TV in a friend's dingy London flat and the "Whistle Test" was on. There behind a lonely mike stood a young man and his guitar I was immediately riveted. The harsh lighting enhanced the passion on his face as he slashed his electric guitar and barked out the lyrics to "Levi Stubb's Tears." When Billy Bragg begins his sold-out, two night engagement at the Iron Horse tonight, the fortunate few with tickets can expect to be equally riveted to their seats.

Even at $17.50 a ticket, a night of love and politics with Billy Bragg is worth every penny. A regular set, for Bragg, is rarely less than two hours. During this time he tells stories, makes jokes, and plays his heart out on electric guitar. Although music is the focus, he often spends a lot of between-song time lecturing the audience on U.S. politics and his own global view. He speaks with charm and good nature and often welcomes banter and heckles as all part of his open forum. A Billy Bragg concert attracts a diverse crowd; with everyone from ageing hippies to fourteen year old punk rock girls in attendance. Accordingly he alternates his Dylan references with Morrisey jokes.

Billy Bragg's songs are of two sorts. One kind is his social-political song. These are often scathing indictments of Reagan/Bush/Thatcher injustices. Bragg reveals his socialist views convincingly with Costello-ian wit and wordplay. Rest assured though, Bragg is also a "paid member of the romantic softies." His love songs are endearing, moving, and realistic, as he sings lines like, "in the end it took me a dictionary/to fine out the meaning of unrequited."

Bragg's influences are diverse and many. During a show he'll often cover Sam Cook or Sweet Honey in the Rock. Fifties folk singer Phil Ochs has had such an influence that Bragg's written a song "I Dreamt I Saw Phil Ochs Last Night." At the same time he'll talk about having to come to grips with the sad fact that the Clash didn't change the world.

Bragg's career began in the early eighties when he played the pubs of his native Barking in the east-end of London. "The Bard of Barking" released his first EP in 1983 entitled Life's a Riot with Spy vs. Spy.

THIRD WORLD AFFAIRS

The New World Order: who's next?

Much of the Third World watched the recent Gulf War with dismay. For one thing, it was a grim reminder of the fate that awaits all those who upset the new world order. For another, it showed how the United Nations was but a pawn in the hands of the empire and its beneficiaries, and could be used to justify wars to preserve their interests.

Only two voices spoke out against the UN mafioso in the Security Council. One was Yemen. The other was Cuba. Having seen the triumph of the North over Arab nationalism, one wonders: who's next? Cuba?

The influence Cuba has exerted on the international arena has been disproportionate to the size of its territory, population, and economy. It is hard to believe that until a generation ago, it was a near protectorate of the United States and a playground for its wealthier citizens.

Strategically located at the northwestern limit of the Caribbean sea and the mouth of the Gulf of Mexico, Cuba is also less than 100 miles off the coast of mainland North America. It is also endowed with arable soils and a salubrious climate. Its geopolitical blessing, by a cruel stroke of fate, also led to its initial downfall.

"This is the fairest island human eyes have yet beheld," exclaimed Christopher Columbus when he landed on Cuba on October 24, 1492. Eager to plunder it and use it as a transit point and staging area for expeditions to other Spanish possessions, the Spanish forces embarked on a genocidal campaign of murder, starvation and the spread of disease to kill the native Tainos and Ciboneys.

By 1535, over a million indigenous people were exterminated, and a few decades later none were left at all. Cuba had been successfully integrated into the European colonial system. Slaves were brought to replace the original inhabitants. Several centuries later, in the early 1800s, revolutions and independence movements swept across Spanish possessions in Latin America — in Colombia (1819), Venezuela (1821), Mexico (1822) and Peru (1824). The decaying Spanish empire was left with only two colonies in the Western hemisphere — Cuba and Puerto Rico. The Spanish kept its loyal Creole class in power in Cuba with a lucrative and liberalized trade policy.

Independence movements did break out in Cuba too, however, in 1868. But by then, the United States began to eye Cuba as a vital strategic asset and an important colonial possession. They first tried to buy Cuba from Spain, then invade it by force. Both strategies failed.

One more alternative was left — a direct war with Spain. In the 1898 war, the United States, under the pretext of helping the Cubans, acquired the territory of Cuba from Spain under the Treaty of Paris. And so, just as Cuba was being liberated by the Cubans, victory was snatched at the moment of success.

The Platt amendment of 1902 ensured that the United States would retain the right to intervene militarily in Cuba at any time. True independence was denied of the Cubans until 1959.

Madanmohan Rao

In the 1950s, revulsion against payoffs, gangsterism and corruption in the Batista regime took a hold of the Cuban populace.

This was when Fidel Castro commenced his meteoric rise to power. In 1953 he organized an unsuccessful attack against the Moncada army barracks. He was captured, tried and imprisoned. It was during his trial that he made the historic "history will absolve me" speech. Castro was sentenced for 15 years in prison, but was released in 1955 by public clamor.

In 1956, with a group of other guerillas, including his brother Raul, and Ernesto "Che" Guevera, Castro landed on the Cuban coast. His rebel army succeeded in ousting Batista.

In the very first year, remarkable social, economic and educational reforms were made. Rents were slashed, the ITT-owned Cuban telephone company's rates were cut and large-scale attempts were made to wipe out corruption.

Faced with a strangulating economic U.S. blockade on machinery, industrial parts, food and medicinal supplies, the Cuban government was forced to turn to the Soviet Union for economic subsistence.

This angered the Unites States even more, and numerous attempts were made to assassinate Fidel Castro. The CIA-backed Bay of Pigs invasion failed, because the United States grossly underestimated the popular support for the Castro regime.

In fact, this contributed to the consolidation of power by the revolutionary leadership. Cuba then took an aggressive messianic mission of championing revolutionary causes in the Third World, and lent military plus civilian assistance to a dozen regimes in Latin America and Africa. Most notable among these were the stationing of thousands of Cuban troops in Angola as a defensive measure against the South African invading forces, and in Ethiopia against the Somalian invasion.

Cuba also cultivated good relations with liberation movements like the South Western African People's Organization and the Palestine Liberation Organization. It portrayed itself as the unflinching enemy of oppression, colonialism, racism and Zionism. Thanks to Cuban and Angolan assistance, Namibia shook off the shackles of South African colonial rule and became independent in 1989.

The recent unglamourous pulling out of the Russian empire from the Cold War threatens the very survival of Cuba. The United States, always looking for an opportunity to humiliate Cuba, is now looking to using U.S. aid to the Russians as leverage to cut off Russian ties with Cuba.

There are some who look forward to these developments with glee. These are the people who lament the destruction of Western values like free enterprise and economic diversification in Cuba. They look upon Cuba as little more than a Russian puppet.

They decry the lack of governmental opposition in Cuba, and the lack of alternative voices in the media. They condemn the Cuban policy of jailing or exiling its dissidents.

But then, there are also millions of Cubans who will remember what domestic development has done for them. And there are also millions of Third World people who will remember Cuba's military and development assistance programs.

Today, in Latin America, the United States has succeeded in ousting the Sandinista regime through mercenary actions and economic embargos. It is also bent on crushing the Salvadorian revolutionary movement.

In the frightening gloom of the new world order, there are some who wonder if Cuba will be the next victim.

Others wonder when Cuba will be the next victim.

Some myths debunked

Creation Myth

"The creation of all the evil on planet Earth emanate from the designs of the State Department."

This is the favorite whipping boy of the pseudo-enlightened. These pundits develop amnesia when told that U.S. policies are framed by people well-versed in international affairs and wheeler-dealers of power. The military-industrial complex admittedly provides broccoli to some and caviar to others. Without it, not only might the caviar remain with the sturgeon in the Volga, but the broccoli at home might also wilt.

Rabi Dutta

Creator Myth

"The media is the creator of public opinion."

Most journalists are far more open-minded than the average citizen. The media ignores certain sides of an issue because the people do not want to hear about them. Even when a conscientious journalist does provide unpalatable facts, all that happens is utter apathy. Finding scapegoats did not start yesterday.

Love thy neighbor myth

"Most Third World people we have met here are very nice people. How can the people living in the Third World be any different?"

Yes, they are apolitical . . . if that is what being "nice" in this context means. It is an opinion poll among a rather unrepresentative sample.

Capitalist myth

"An international free market in goods and services will be of benefit to the average person in the North."

No, because wages in the North are higher for the same job than in the South. A true free market in services would therefore involve mobility of labor. However, a market which is controlled and called "free" greatly benefits the entities that control it.

Socialist Myth

"The U.S. provides $10 billion worth of foreign aid to the world. That's $40 per year per person living in the U.S. Isn't that altruistic? In these days of budget cuts this money could probably used to fund a UMass-type of school in each state."

The $10 billion a year is bribery to a few countries of the world to buy friendship. In the recent past, four countries have received 70 percent of the bounty. It is good for influence peddling to get people indebted.

Independence Myth

"Countries like Germany, Italy, Belgium, the Netherlands, Spain, Denmark, etc. are independent."

These countries are happy to swallow their pride and sign the Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty which prevents them from possessing nuclear weapons but awards the right of possession to some other countries. On what basis are they sovereign?

Naive Myth

"Foreign investment is good for Third World countries."

Only if they have unqualified jurisdiction over the operations of the foreign corporations, i.e. they must be able to defend themselves militarily and economically should they decide to nationalize the foreign corporations.

Order from Chaos Myth

"Stability is good for mankind."

That is the stuff revolutions are made of.

Puritan's Myth

"Good principles are better than national interest."

No, one cannot withdraw from "good" principles without indignity.

Prehistoric Myth

"The U.S. intervened in the World Wars to fight tyranny."

The major reason was to restore a balance of power in Europe. A hegemon in Europe is inimical to U.S. interests. Of course in World War II, the quarrel with present-day banker of the world, Japan, was the clash of two titans at odds over national interest.

Recent Myth

"The United States was fighting for oil in Kuwait and Iraq."

No, the United States was fighting for unqualified principle.

■ Bragg

The next year saw a second EP, Brewing Up with Billy Bragg, released. These EP's and a 45 are available in the states as Back to Basics. Talking with the Taxman About Poetry, self-effacingly subtitled "the difficult third album," came out in 1986. With the subtle addition of organs, violins, and even a bit of extra guitar courtesy of Johnny Marr, Poetry showcases some of Bragg's best material to date. In anticipation of the 1988 presidential election, Bragg toured the U.S. in support of the EP Help Save the Youth of America. The album contained voter registration info and urged voters to "please be more careful this time."

In late 1988 Bragg teamed up with producer Joe Boyd to record Workers Playtime. Taking a break from socialist politics, the album looks more at the politics of interpersonal relationships. With lines like "the chain that fell off my bike last night/ is now wrapped round my heart/ sometimes I think/ fate has been against us from the start," it's a gentle bittersweet album that's cathartic for both Bragg and anyone else watching a relationship fade. Bragg's most recent effort is 1990's The Internationale. Back to politics, this album sees Bragg reworking and reinterpreting old and traditional songs and melodies, with mixed results.

With all this material to draw from Bragg promises to be good. Add to this the experience of the extensive touring he's done in the south in support of the coal miners and in communist Europe and he's sure to have some stories to tell. Bragg also likes to try out new songs on his audiences. All this combined guarantees an exciting and provocative two evenings.

Billy Bragg will appear at the Iron Horse Cafe tonight and tomorrow night. The show is sold out.

41 OUT OF 50 STATES HAVE OPTIONAL RETIREMENT PLANS.

WHY NOT MASSACHUSETTS?

Optional Retirement Plans (ORPs) are an accepted part of American public higher education. Together they form a nationwide, portable pension system, allowing academic mobility — which enriches experiences, fosters the exchange of ideas and learning, and promotes the cultural and ethnic diversity of our institutions and their communities.

Massachusetts needs a portable pension system in order to compete with other states for high-quality faculty and administrators during the current financial crisis and in the future. A strong public university system is essential for Massachusetts' long-term economic health.

WHY NOT HAVE AN OPTIONAL RETIREMENT PLAN IN MASSACHUSETTS?

The proposed Optional Retirement Plan is carefully designed so that it will not increase pension costs for the Commonwealth of Massachusetts or its citizens. It will not have an adverse effect on the Massachusetts Retirement System, nor will it require additional administrative personnel.

TIAA-CREF is working with sponsors of legislation that would allow the Board of Regents to establish an Optional Retirement Plan in Massachusetts. In the last year alone, five states have implemented ORPs, and California is in the process of doing so now. Currently, ORP-type plans are offered in 41 out of 50 states. And TIAA-CREF is the only organization chosen in all 41 of those states.

TIAA-CREF: THE POPULAR CHOICE

TIAA-CREF is building a sound financial future for more than 1,000,000 people at over 4,500 institutions of higher education and research. And over 200,000 retirees are now enjoying the benefits of their TIAA-CREF annuities. People just like you. Here are a few good reasons why:

Expertise— TIAA and CREF are nonprofit organizations focused exclusively on the education and research community. We pioneered pensions for your profession and we have been leading the way ever since.

Full Investment Choices— Sound retirement investing requires both security and growth: security, so the resources are sure to be there when the time comes; and growth, so your retirement income will be sufficient for the kind of retirement you want. TIAA-CREF provides you with all of the investment choices you need — for growth, diversification and safety.

Performance— The CREF Stock Account outperformed the mutual fund industry averages for the last one-, five-, and ten-year periods. The CREF Money Market Account has shown excellent returns since its inception, outperforming the industry average since May of 1988.*

Security— Your future is protected by the largest retirement system in the world. We currently manage over $84 billion in pension assets. Because of its stability, sound investments, and overall financial strength, TIAA has received the highest possible ratings from all three of the industry's leading independent rating agencies: A+ (Superior) from A.M. Best Co., Aaa from Moody's, and AAA from Standard & Poor's.

DON'T LEAVE MASSACHUSETTS OUT OF THE PICTURE

Support ORP legislation. Join a broad-based group of supporters including academics, business people and legislators who are monitoring the Massachusetts ORP legislation's progress. For more information, call or write:

YOU KNOW, YOU'RE QUITE RIGHT, SID— I HAVE CHANGED...
HAVING TO FEND FOR MYSELF THESE PAST SEVEN MONTHS HAS MADE ME MUCH MORE SELF-SUFFICIENT. AND I STICK UP FOR MYSELF A LOT MORE!
FOR INSTANCE, SEVEN MONTHS AGO, I PROBABLY NEVER WOULD HAVE MENTIONED HOW INCREDIBLY OFFENSIVE I FIND IT THAT YOU'RE CHECKING OUT MY BOD RIGHT NOW!
HEY, C'MON! WHAT DO YOU THINK I DROVE OUT HERE FOR— THE VIEW?
FROM NOW ON, ALL BUSINESS IS STRICTLY BY CAR PHONE!

I DIDN'T NEED HELP.
YEAH, RIGHT.
WHAT ARE YOU REALLY DOING HERE?
I'M WHAT YOU WOULD CALL "A FRIEND AND SOMETIMES ALLY OF REX ROCKETT."
YOU MEAN YOU'RE A NEW CHARACTER?
THAT'S RIGHT, SO BACK UP ROCKETT & LET THE READERS CHECK ME OUT.

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"I can't mate in captivity."
— Gloria Steinem on why she has never married

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Be willing to try someone else's methods. They may be more effective than you expect. Welcome new responsibilities, a nice raise or bonus is in the works. Keep an eye on legal affairs.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) A financial goal may be difficult to achieve right now. Your timing could be off. Exercise patience. Arguments could mean you have to work late. Handle routine matters as efficiently as possible.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) It is up to you to launch a pet project. Other people are too wrapped up in their own affairs to really care. Seek their cooperation and suggestions at a later date.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) An opportune time to engage in confidential talks, write letters or conduct research. You are able to promote your plans without arousing opposition. Give a key partnership extra attention now.

LEO (July 23-Aug 22) You can communicate with strength and sensitivity today. Discuss your professional aims with someone who has an impressive track record. Expense incurred cultivating a new friendship will be worth it.

VIRGO (Aug 23-Sept 22) An exchange of ideas with your colleagues could spawn a brilliant financial concept. A great day for fundraising. Show more initiative. A special campaign will produce wonderful results.

LIBRA (Sept 23-Oct 22) Patience is your strongest ally if you are faced with constant interruptions. Isolate yourself to complete difficult paperwork. Welcome a candid discussion with your loved ones.

SCORPIO (Oct 23-Nov 21) You are the catalyst that brings people and ideas together. An introduction will light up your life. Avoid getting involved in office squabbles. Preserve your reputation for objectivity!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov 22-Dec 21) An alliance is very fragile now. Adopting a playful approach could get everyone back on track. Do not allow an impulsive mood to jeopardize a romantic bond.

CAPRICORN (Dec 22-Jan 19) It may be difficult to concentrate today. Reconsider your plans to start a new project. Get caught up on paperwork. A platonic relationship intensifies.

AQUARIUS (Jan 20-Feb 18) The tides of friendship shift in your favor. Adaptability is your biggest asset. Sign agreements. Do not let obstacles deter you. Your mate makes a special request. Try to oblige.

PISCES (Feb 19-March 20) Channeling money into shopping or socializing boosts your spirits. You are a welcome addition to any gathering. Wear something elegant and dine somewhere special. Romance sizzles.

while the defense has given up fastbreak opportunities and too many goals.

"We realize we're the underdogs coming in and we should be happy we can play a team the caliber of UMass," Nelson said. "They're talented, athletic and very dangerous."

Gorilla Tracks: Garber said Kenny Randazzo will be out for the remainder of the season due to a left calf muscle injury. Enduring seven stitches underneath the chin (acquired at Yale), Matt Garber will play in today's game.

The second game could only be described as a crowd pleaser.

In the first inning, senior catcher/outfielder DellAnno stole home base to score the winning run.

In the second, Marean poked her third home run of the season, bringing in Jen Miller.

In the sixth, Kuchinskas nailed another homer, making her third stroll around the basepath this season. This was also a two-run shot, as Beth Fulcher crossed the plate as well.

ground ball, but the umpire called interference with the second baseman. Mike Tobin's walk across the plate was called back to third, and UMass' rally was killed.

"We have to concentrate all of the time," Stone said. "We can't take mental vacations."

UMass scored once in the sixth on a Derek Dana sacrifice fly, but O'Brien pitched on guts, getting out of every jam he created with his eight walks.

Lefty Ron Villone (3-2) also pitched impressively, as he struck out seven in a rare starting appearance that Stone said he hoped would give the team a spark, but Villone gave up two runs in the fifth inning that gave Vermont the lead they held until the end. UVM added two more runs off of reliever Scott Meaney in the sixth.

Crews race Trinity with mixed results, varsity men successful

By LYNN FRANKEL
Collegian Correspondent

The men's varsity crew team defeated Trinity College on Saturday and set an all-time course record of 5 minutes, 48 seconds, winning back the Mason Cup, a trophy cherished by Trinity for over five years. UMass stands at 3-1.

"It was a relaxed race and we just overcame them," said senior rower Dave Ring. Senior Benny Marino said that by the 1,000 meter mark the team had Trinity by open water and never let up.

Ring and Marino rowed with Rich Scannell, Mike Rademacher, Jeff Vohr, Brian Jewitt, Keith Burgoyne, and Dave Schor. The crew was coxed by Mary Lockyer.

The JV boat lost to the Trinity varsity lightweights.

Sophomore Steve Casco said the race was dead-even at the halfway point, but the home course advantage gave Trinity the boost it needed to take the Minutemen.

The novice lightweight eight won their race by a margin of eight seconds. Novice coach Shawn Talbot said his heavyweight crew faced a bunch of "classless" Trinity rowers and that his crew overcame several serious hurdles and still made the race exciting.

The women's crew team faced Trinity as well as long-time rival Mount Holyoke. The varsity boat lost to both opponents.

Third-year varsity rower Jennifer Geary said the boat is coming together well and is "hoping that a unified performance will bring the boat its first victory."

The junior varsity team beat Trinity and collected the much sought-after betting tee. The boat was led by seniors Susanne Maloney, Lisa Maloney and Jen Koiles. Annie Schwab, Ann Budreski, Laura Scollan, Kim Kadzik, Laurel Collins and coxswain Elizabeth Harford comprised the remainder of the eight.

Minutemen split UVM doubleheader

Junior John Corelli singled yesterday but was picked off at second base in the second inning of the first game against Vermont.

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Correspondent

Just like yesterday's weather, the University of Massachusetts baseball team started off on a bright, hot note, only to finish the day dark and cooled off.

UMass exploded for 11 runs in the first game, capped by seven runs in their last two at-bats, as they won 11-4. In the second game, UMass failed to capitalize on early opportunities, and they only mustered one hit in a 4-1 loss.

The Minutemen were led by right-hander Jeff Toothaker in the first game. Toothaker (2-1) pitched a complete game, scattering four runs on seven hits. He struck out two and walked one.

"He did a very nice job once again," coach Mike Stone said. UMass broke out of a 3-3 tie in the bottom of the fourth inning when Justin Howard scored, garnering his second of three hits in the game. The Minutemen were ahead permanently, but they weren't finished scoring.

In the fifth inning, UMass scored three runs, and in the sixth, they added four more. Catcher Derek Dana had a single, double and home run, driving in three runs.

If the first game was prolific of UMass' offensive production, the second game's offense was nowhere in sight.

"We had our opportunities early, but we just didn't take advantage," said Stone. "We had [runners on] second and third with no outs, and we came out with nothing."

Vermont's freshman pitcher Scott O'Brien, 1-1 on the year with a 10.6 earned run average, started off as shaky as the last San Francisco earthquake, but finished the game strong.

In the first inning, Steve Corradi slid hard into second base on Brian Bright's

Widening their winning streak to six games, the University of Massachusetts softball team powered past Rhode Island 10-4, 9-0 in a doubleheader yesterday at Kingston, R.I.

This betters the Minutewomen's record to 20-9 overall, and clinches a pair of Atlantic-10 Conference wins for a 6-2 conference mark.

Holly Aprile was the winning pitcher for UMass in the first contest. With this win Aprile moves her record to 10-5 on the season. Aprile gave up four hits, struck out five and walked five.

Earning her sixth shutout in the last eight outings, Darlene Claffey bettered her record to 10-4, winning the second game. In her ninth shutout appearance of the season, Claffey gave up two hits, one walk and struck out two.

In the first game, UMass batters showered losing pitcher Jennifer Hapanowicz with 14 hits.

There was no joy in Mudville for Hapanowicz, as the Ram's fielders bumped and boggled to the tune of five errors.

Cherie DellAnno hit a single and a double, contributing three runs batted in for the Minutewomen. Aprile went 2-for-3 with a single, double and two RBI.

Team batting-average leader Barbara Marean (.466) had a one and two bagger. Amy Cockley and Rachel Lawson turned in an RBI each, with singles. Heather Dorsey and Sherri Kuchinskas contributed a pair of singles each.

The UMass outfield committed only two errors in the first game then went unblemished in the second.

Men's track takes second to Rhody

By KEITH BENNETT

The University of Massachusetts men's track team finished second behind Rhode Island scoring 73 points. The Minutemen out-distanced Westfield State by 56 but could not match URI's 99 points.

Despite a number of strong individual performances, the Minutemen were unable to overcome the strength of the Rams. Both UMass and URI scored in 16 of 18 events but the Rams placed first 13 times, as opposed to only 4 for UMass.

"I think this meet was an accurate reflection of our differences," said UMass head coach Ken O'Brien. "They're stronger than us up front but I think we performed very well."

Joe Kourafas scored in four events to lead the Minutemen. He captured first place in the long jump with a distance of 21 feet, six inches. Kourafas also placed second in the high jump with a personal-best height of 6-6 and in the javelin with a throw of 174-1. His time of 16.7 seconds in the 110-meter hurdles was good enough for fourth place.

The Minutemen swept the top four places in both the 1,500 and the 5,000. Matt Simon won the 1,500 in 3:59.3. He was followed by Bill Wallace (4:00.5), John Raach (4:02.4) and Jon Corso (4:03).

Senior Gerry Squires out-distanced the field in the 5,000 with his time of 14:56.8. Brian Fallon took second in 15:30, Pat Ryan followed in 15:38.1 and Mike Davis completed the sweep with his time of 15:52.

Junior Steve Brown earned a personal-best in the 800 in a time of 1:53.6, more than two seconds faster than his winning time of the previous week.

Kevin Walters finished second in both the 100 and the 200 for UMass. His times were 11.2 seconds and 22.5, respectively.

Other second-place performers for the Minutemen were Mike Grey in the 400 (50.8), Dave Borges in the pole vault (12-6) and the 400 relay team of Jeff White, Kristian DiMatteo, Pat Smith and Rob Pedowitz. Paul Doyle finished second in the 110 hurdles (16.5) and third in the 400 hurdles (56.8). White was also clocked in 16.5 in finishing third in the 110.

Jeff Peterson also placed in four events for UMass. He finished third in the triple jump with a distance of 39 feet and earned three fourth place finishes in the shot put (42-0), the javelin (137-6) and the discus (128-5).

Jay Young in the 400 (52.5) and Tom Hooper in the 800 (1:58) took thirds.

Gorillas host Big Green on The Hill

By ADRIEN MATT

You could say Dartmouth's Big Green is out of kilter this year, checking in at 1-6. The lacrosse team's only win has been at Boston College (15-14).

They even dropped their home-opener to Middlebury (10-4), their only home match so far this season. But a team like this tends to get dangerous as the season progresses — they get anxious — to win.

"They play a very deliberate, disciplined, controlled set play," said University of Massachusetts coach Ted Garber. "They have to play to their strengths . . . They have good stick work. The last thing they want to do is get into a run-and-gun game with us."

Dartmouth coach Tim Nelson echoed Garber's comments, "We want to slow down the tempo," he said. "If we can keep UMass to 10 goals, we have a very good shot at winning, but that's easier said than done."

Freshman Brendan Bowler has a team-high 17 goals plus three assists for a team-high 20 points. Sophomore Tim Wencrich boasts 10 goals and seven assists. Tim McHugh, the only senior meeting the net, has seven goals and five assists.

Sophomore goalies John Banks and Will Wynperie have seen six and four games, respectively, averaging 14 goals against per game.

Nelson said although the Big Green offense has been playing pretty well, they have been giving the ball away

Profs on campus take day off to protest

Hundreds of classes were cancelled, cut short or held in other locations yesterday while professors at the University of Massachusetts formed picket lines to protest cuts to public higher education.

The day marked the first of a two-day protest which includes rallies, picketing and teach-ins or classtime devoted to discuss the cutbacks. Organizers called it a victory and said they plan to meet with members of Governor Weld's office staff today.

About 400 faculty and staff members, as well as graduate and undergraduate students, formed picket lines in front of several buildings this morning and passed out leaflets to cars at busy intersections.

About 15 percent of regular classes were held at the University, according to John Cole, president of the Massachusetts Society of Professors at UMass, which represents the campus's 1,200 faculty.

Cole, a professor of anthropology, said he got the estimate by surveying the classrooms at one of the peak classroom times — 10:30 a.m. The classes that were held had lower attendance than average, he said.

"It has been wonderful," Cole said. "This has been one of the biggest turnouts I've seen at a protest in my 20 years at UMass."

The job action coincides with the first week of the state employee furlough plan in Massachusetts, which requires employees to either take vacation time or work up to three weeks without being paid until they leave state service.

However, professors only have one option. They must work the days without pay because they were declared essential personnel by the Weld administration.

Cole said the action was planned this week to focus attention not on the furloughs, but to the "far graver" problem of cuts to state higher education.

Gov. Weld has proposed a $92 million cut in funding for state higher education for the 1992 budget year, which starts July 1.

According to an MSP fact sheet, student tuition and fees at UMass have increased 60 percent in the past four years.

Since 1988, UMass has lost $34 million in state funding, declining from $167 million in 1988 to $133 million last year.

Although the University's contract with the faculty union forbids strikes, work stoppages or withholding of services, Cole said he expects there will be no penalty against striking faculty members.

Jo Ann Vanin, the vice chancellor of student affairs, said she supported the professors' efforts to bring attention to the budget cuts. "I'm also trusting in these efforts that students are not being penalized through the loss of classes," she said.

Provost Richard O'Brien issued a statement which said that he expects professors who miss classes will make alternative arrangements for their students.

A noon rally — which featured the Minuteman Marching Band and culminated with cannon fire — drew more than 400 students and faculty.

Mike Thelwell, a professor in the Afro-American studies department, said the faculty were not only protesting the furlough plan but also the growing inaccessibility of public education.

"The issues of this job action go way beyond abrogation of contract," Thelwell said. "We're here to make affordable education a priority worth fighting for."

Richard Wolff, a professor in the economics department, said the action was part of a bigger movement to shift the nation's spending priorities from military and police forces to education. "The wind is blowing in our direction," Wolff said.

Walter Chesnut, a professor in the music department, wearing a black robe played "Taps" on a herald trumpet. Dangling from the trumpet was a cloth UMass ensignia covered in black gauze, a symbol of what UMass could become with further cuts, he said.

David Mitchell, an electrician at the University and a member of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees said the furlough plan affects staff as well as faculty.

"They're attacking everything public our families have fought for," he said. "If this keeps up, we'll have another depression; we'll have pockets of Weldvilles."

Hundreds of students protest at State House

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — Some 1,200 students from several state colleges and universities gathered at the State House yesterday to protest Gov. Weld's proposal to cut the state's budget for public higher education.

"The overwhelming thing that we've been hearing from legislators is 'we're not hearing from people,'" said Angus McQuilken, student trustee at the University of Massachusetts. "Today they are hearing from us."

Weld's proposal would slash the education budget by $79 million. He plans to raise tuition and fees as well as compose a seven percent cut in administration.

If passed by the Legislature, tuition would increase by nearly 50 percent, according to Rep. Stan Rosenberg (D-Amherst).

At a press conference held at 10 a.m. on the State House steps, speakers urged students to go inside and lobby their representatives.

"It's terrific that you're here, but it's a disgrace that you have to be here," said Jim Braude, director the Tax Equity Alliance of Massachusetts.

"This is not a debate about dollars and cents, it's a debate about values," Braude said. "Public higher education is a right that everyone must have."

Jane Giacobbe, assistant professor of management at the UMass said, "We are not just an expenditure. The rest of the United States has already figured this out."

"There is no good news," said Rep. Mark Roosevelt (D-Boston). "My guess is there will be more cuts than just $79 million."

"Until we find an oil field somewhere in central Massachusetts, education continues to be our greatest natural resource," McQuilken said.

After the press conference, students entered the State House to meet with representatives, most of whom were not in their offices, according to several frustrated students.

In November of 1989, when close to 15,000 students traveled to Boston to protest budget cuts, the doors of the State House were locked.

Inside, students from UMass/Boston performed skits which depicted Gov. Weld as insensitive to students' needs and the needs of the homeless and sick. They showed Weld giving money to the rich and to his cabinet members, but not to students and homeless people.

Students from the Massachusetts College of Art made a life-size chocolate mocha cake of a student, which they named "the student body." They fed the cake to members of the Legislature to show them that their politics are destroying the student body.

Sunday race to promote 'health floor'

By MARC ELLIOT
Collegian Staff

A five-kilometer road race — stretching from the top of the Southwest horseshoe to the end of the football loop — will be held at 2 p.m. Sunday to promote the "Health and Fitness Floor" in John Adams Residence Hall.

The race is meant for less experienced runners who enjoy running but do not usually participate in highly competitive races, according to Chris Palmer, the resident assistant of the Heath and Fitness Floor. The floor, on the 20th floor of John Adams, is devoted to health and fitness enthusiasts.

"We're expecting to pull in normal everyday people who enjoy the competition of a race without having to be highly trained athletes," Palmer said.

"It's for the promotion of health and fitness and basically to just have a good time and to promote floors like this for people who are interested in staying healthy," he said.

About 15 different prizes, ranging from gift certificates at local restaurants to free memberships to the Body Shop Fitness Center, will be awarded to runners, he said. The first 50 applicants will receive free t-shirts.

The top three male and female winners will receive some of the more expensive prizes, while the remaining prizes are to be distributed among the rest of the participants.

Runners must pay a $3 registration fee in advance or $4 on the day of the race, a $4 fee. All proceeds will go to arrange future road races and other events promoting good health, he said.

Applications are available at in the lobby of Kennedy Residence Hall and the Body Shop Fitness Centers in John Adams, Kennedy and Totman Gymnasium. There will also be a a table set up on the Campus Concourse today.

Another fitness floor called the "healthy lifestyles" floor is to open in next semester in Leach House.

Teach-in held to educate about cuts to higher ed

By AMY HENRY
Collegian Staff

An "Alternative Education" teach-in was held all day yesterday in the Student Union Ballroom as part of a two-day effort to educate people about state budget cuts to public higher education.

The event was organized by faculty, staff and students. More than 250 people attended throughout the day.

Governor Weld instituted the furlough program last month to save money by asking state employees to take unpaid vacation time or work a certain number of days without receiving their pay until they leave state service. All employees have to take their furlough before June 30, 1991.

Phil Cox, a union organizer for the Graduate Employee Organization, said the purpose of the teach-in was to provide an educational alternative to the classroom.

"We're asking teachers to either bring their students here or talk about the cuts to public higher education in their classes," he said.

"We realize that undergraduates have so many other things on their mind like finding summer jobs that they have not been able to keep up with what's been going on at the State House and higher education," he said.

Bill Strickland, a professor of the Afro-American studies and the political science departments, said the state of public higher education today is a result of the Ronald Reagan era, when Reagan reduced taxes on corporations.

According to Strickland, corporations paid 11 percent of their capital in taxes when Reagan became president. When he left they paid only 8 percent, Strickland said.

This affected Massachusetts because there are many corporations here who pay low taxes, forcing the burden onto the individual, he said.

"The very efforts they are making to balance the budget will contribute to the deficit in the future because people's incomes are being decreased which means there will be less money that can be taken for taxes."

Strickland compared the budget cuts to events worldwide.

"The U.S. government forgave Egypt's debt and recently Poland's," he said. "This is your money. It is being spent everywhere except on the public.

"We're experiencing an attack on the public sector," he said. "The government doesn't think such issues as the environment, women's rights, health care and discrimination are important. They only care about corporate capital.

James Arthur Jemison, a junior social thought and political economy major said: "Public education is the last frontier for people of color. We are in need of a public university that offers education for a low rate because African-Americans are already an under-educated and

Some profs opt for business as usual

Citing 'responsibility to students,' faculty hold classes

By DAVID RIVERA
Collegian Staff

Saying their first responsibility was to their students, a percentage of UMass faculty decided to teach classes yesterday.

Though many classrooms were empty, professors choosing to teach during the protests kept lecture halls and classrooms filled with students.

"The students have paid their tuition and I think it's totally inappropriate for faculty to deny students something that they've paid for," said botany Professor Ed Davis.

Davis said he would teach on both protest days and also said he felt very disappointed and unimpressed by the faculty meetings.

Professor of finance, Kazemi Hossein also decided to teach but said he wanted to educate his students on how the state has entered the present crisis.

"For the next few classes, I'm going to start off my lectures by discussing the budget cuts and how it has affected us," he said.

Hossein said he sympathized with his colleagues who decided to strike, but said his first obligation was to teaching his students.

Just outside Hossein's office, a gathering of faculty and students picketed and chanted slogans condemning Governor Weld's stance on the issue.

"I would like to tell parents of UMass students and parents of six-year-olds that they might not have a state university to send their children to in the near future," said Professor James Cathey of the German department, as he protested. "If cuts continue as they are, then we're dead."

Some students joined faculty on picket lines, but others declined to skip classes.

"It's a choice for my professors to make, but I think students could do more good by lobbying the State House than by cutting class," said Lenny Levine, a sophomore.

"People running our state are extremely ignorant towards what a strong country is built on, education is the foundation for any strong country," he said.

Students in the picket lines said they believed that the faculty were making this statement for the students and for future students.

"It's not just our future, it's the future," said sophomore Elissa Glatz. "We as students have to realize that these cuts are not just going to affect us but may even affect our children."

Day-long festivities to celebrate Israeli Independence Day

By ALISON BUCKHOLTZ
Collegian Staff

When University of Massachusetts students celebrate Israeli Independence Day in the Student Union Ballroom today, they will recognize that Israel is more than just "palm trees, camels, and politics," said junior Paula Yolles, one of the student organizers of the event.

"We're here to educate people about Israel, and have fun in the process," said senior Adina Zarchan, another coordinator. "It's Israel's 43rd birthday, and a time to celebrate Israeli culture at UMass. We want people to come in with an open mind and leave with an understanding that Israel is composed of many different cultures and religions."

The daylong celebration will incorporate aspects of Israeli culture and the arts, including Israeli food, music, dancing, dress, crafts, and poetry, Zarchan said. A large birthday cake will also be cut around noon, she said.

The holiday, though a happy one for many, is tinged with a residue of sadness left by yesterday's annual Israeli memorial day, Yom Hazikaron (Day of Remembrance). "The holidays were set up that way, a celebration after a commemoration, to combine the fun of independence with the remembrance of those who died for it," Zarchan said.

In Israel, the clear connection between independence and sacrifice "makes it hard for some people," said Revital Gal, a Smith student who is an Israeli. "Some people can't get out of the grief. But for those that do, the day is a big carnival in the streets, pure exultation."

Gal said it is important for her to celebrate her country's independence while in America, but added that American Jews also share a spiritual connection with Israel.

"Every Jew has a deep corner in his or her brain with the fear of being hassled...they know that Israel is a safe place for them," she said.

Today's Independence Day party at UMass is part of a series of Hillel events marking Israel's birthday. Throughout the week, they have shown contemporary Israeli movies such as "Shell Shocked" and "Late Summer Blues."

Next Wednesday they are sponsoring a speech by 'Itzhak Oren, Zarchin said. Oren, consul of 'srael for New England, will discuss "New Order in the Middle East: Post-Persian Gulf War."

At 6 o'clock tonight, Hillel and Active Israel Response will host a barbecue on the Hillel House lawn to continue the Independence Day party, which is open to all. "People around the world mark this day," Yolles said. "It's a celebration of Jewish life, culture, and existence."

Most classrooms in Thompson, Machmer vacant yesterday

By MARK PRESTON
Collegian Correspondent

The picket lines began to form again after the rally and march concluded yesterday.

Chants such as 'Hey, hey, ho, ho Governer Weld has got to go', and 'Hey, hey, what do you say, higher education is here to stay' were heard throughout the area. Although some professers continued to hold classes, the halls of Thompson and Machmer were all but vacant.

Michele Powers, a freshman, said she supported the professers, but had no choice but to go to class. Shana Corbey, a sophomore, joined in the demonstration but still felt obligated to go to class because her parents are paying for her education.

Numerous support seemed to be brewing on campus from a wide variety of people which varied form students to faculty, to library assistants.

"This campus is known for its demonstrations but in the past it was only the liberal consensus that participated," Corbey said. "Today that barrier was broken down and a more conservative crowd was present."

Anger for the cuts was not only directed at Governer Weld. Both students and professors said the situation has been in the works for many years, but added that Weld is not handling it properly.

"Weld is the latest in line who has undervalued state education," said James Derian, professor of political science. "Massachusetts is known for education, but it falls below both Mississippi and Alabama in the amount of money allocated for state education."

"If Weld tries to put another stone on this burden it is going to explode," he said.

Sam Bowles, professer of economics, felt the support of the unions on campus made a huge difference to the professors who chose to take action against the furlough.

Kevin Smith, a library assistant, said: "Those who chose to work through the furloughs were potentially hurting the cause, certainly not helping. Smith chose to take a personal day to lend his support to the professors.

Joannah Whitney, a teaching assistant in the school of education, said she thought the protest was successful.

"It increased the awareness of what is going on with our state's educational crunch, but we need to be more vocal and make people aware of the depth of our concern."

Sam Coleman, an exchange student from Humboldt State in California, said although Massachusetts is being hit hard with budget cuts, it is happpening all over the country.

Profs skip class to picket outside, bash Weld's cuts

By JOHN ESTRELLA
Collegian Correspondent

Anthropology and English professors said they tried teaching introductory labor relations from an open air classroom yesterday.

"By screening himself behind high paid cabinet secretaries, he [Governor William Weld] shows cowardice and a lack of leadership," English professor Robert Creed said while picketing in front of Bartlett Hall.

Creed said pay cuts Weld initiated galvanize professors and state employees. Creed has written to the governor, inviting him to see "what is really going on."

"If he took the time to come out here, he'd be on our side," Creed said.

But, Alan Hudson, professor of anthropology, said what happens at UMass doesn't really affect what happens in Boston. He said students come from all constituencies and can be most effective in getting any real results.

"When students talk to legislators, things get done,"

Now you can afford to dream in color.
Apple introduces the Macintosh LC
If you thought that finding a color Macintosh* system you could afford was just a dream, then the new, affordable Macintosh LC is a dream come true.
The Macintosh LC is rich in color. Unlike many computers that can display only 16 colors at once, the Macintosh LC expands your palette to 256 colors. It also comes with a microphone and new sound-input technology that lets you personalize your work by adding voice or other sounds.
Like every Macintosh computer, the LC is easy to set up and easy to master. And it runs thousands of available applications that all work in the same, consistent way—so once you've learned one program, you're well on your way to learning them all. The Macintosh LC even lets you share information with someone who uses a different type of computer—thanks to the versatile Apple* SuperDrive,* which can read from and write to Macintosh, MS-DOS, OS/2, and Apple II floppy disks.
Take a look at the Macintosh LC and see what it gives you. Then pinch yourself. It's better than a dream—it's a Macintosh.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

By not participating we send a message — the wrong one

Apathy: 1) absence of emotion. 2) lack of interest of concern.

Fellow students, what will it take for you to take action against a system which is steadily dismantling public higher education? When will it be too much? When tuition raises to an unbearable level? For many tuition is already at that level. But tuition is not what the current 'No Business as Usual' protest is directly about. Disproportional State budget cuts on public higher education is the basis for the protest.

Bruce Peppard

By not participating in the 'No Business as Usual' campaign, you are sending a clear message to Bill Weld that you are not concerned about public higher education. You are also delivering the message that future cuts will not bother you nor prompt you to voice your outrage. Whether these messages are the ones you are intentionally sending or not isn't the issue. The issue is how the apathy on this campus will be viewed and received in Boston, by Governor Weld.

Weld has suggested that those teachers refusing to work during the protest are not concerned with education. How ironic that statement is in view of the fact that they are risking their jobs to save education in this state. To those teachers who choose to still have class during these two days, you should be ashamed of yourselves. Your apathy generates the same non-committing attitude toward the future of this University, within students. As student protestors, we are protesting for your cause as well as ours.

There is a strong correlation between our unique relationship as student and teacher. We are interdependent. You cannot exist without us, nor we without you. Help us help and you help everybody. I ask teachers to abstain from having class today. I further ask for students to boycott those classes which are not canceled. Am I asking a lot? Absolutely, but then, I'm asking for a system to reconsider their views on public higher education. Am I asking too much? In light of what is becoming of this University, I think not. Do I have a right to ask these things?

As students concerned with our future and the future of education, we all have a right to ask for universal protest.

Even if cuts aren't halted, at least we will have made a statement, a statement which cannot be made without your cooperation. If we do not join together as students and teachers, we are fighting ourselves rather than Weld's system. I'm sure he is counting on our lack of cooperation. Let's disappoint him.

Please join the 'No Business as Usual' campaign today. Turn you apathy into action. Your future does depend on it as does the future of this university.

Thank you for your time and attention.

What is Patriots' Day anyway? A brief peek at history

War begets patriotism. The Gulf War induced a rush of patriotism across our fair land. In fact, the very theme of the "patriot" was emphasized in the overrated missiles which were used in the war to seek out and destroy the SCUDS. Now with the war over, you would think that the president might try to capitalize on the patriotism by declaring a Patriot's Day. Well guess what? "What?" There already is a Patriot's Day, and it's today. Go figure. That's why we just had a three day weekend. Do you know what Patriot's Day is all about? What does it comemmorate? Who celebrates it? I asked a famous historian (okay, me) to discuss the significance of this holiday.

Two hundred and sixteen years ago, conditions in the Massachusetts Bay colony had become quite tense. While most American colonies were paying homage to their British crown (albeit somewhat tentatively), the Boston colonists were growing very ill-at-ease about the state of the British occupation. The Boston Tea Party, only a year before, resulted in the closing of the port of Boston, and the granting over semi-dictatorial powers to the British General, Thomas Gage. These "Intolerable Acts" prompted the Bostonians to write their fellow colonies and convene the First Continental Congress to debate the issues at hand.

Mark B. Adler

In those days a "Patriot" was a colonist who hated the British. In the eyes of the Crown and of colonial loyalists, the "Tories," these Patriots were quite rightly traitors and should be tried for treason. Boston was the epicenter of patriotism (or treason) and the leaders of the Boston Patriots were John Hancock (who would become the President of the Continental Congress) and Samuel Adams (who would brew a great beer). General Gage planned to arrest them and have them tried for treason, but they were hiding in the Concord area. Gage ordered Major Pitcairn to march is seven hundred redcoats to Concord in order to arrest them and to seize some rebel ammunitions at a nearby arsenal. On the night of April 18, 1775, Pitcairn set out for the long march. He would have succeeded and much of American, and therefore world, history would have been very different had not the news of his march reached the ears of one of Boston's most talented silversmiths.

Once Paul Revere learned of Pitcairn's plans, he and a few other patriots mounted their horses and rode into the countryside to warn the residents of the small towns along the way that the British soldiers were marching. Most of the Middlesex farmers were prepared at a minute's notice, hence the term "Minuteman" and hence the names of another modern missile, a neo-conservative student newspaper, and a fantastic basketball team. As the British marched though Lexington and Concord, they met resistance in the "embattled farmers" who shot at them from behind walls and trees, pushing the well-trained redcoats all the way back to Boston.

Now this is all very basic American History. If you didn't know this lesson, you should crack open a history book. Patriot's Day celebrates the beginning the American War of Independence. It celebrates the Bay State's preeminance among the other states and it's dedication to liberty. Only Massachusetts and Maine (which was part of Massachusetts until 1820) celebrate Patriot's Day.

The amazing coincidence about all this, is what people are doing today to celebrate the holiday. I haven't been to classes since last week because of the furlough. The Commonwealth, whose past glory we exalt and run the world-famous marathon, is too cheap to fund this school. My professors have been told to furlough and (strangely) they all got the flu this week. I don't need to go on. You know the rest.

Today we celebrate the greatest day in Massachusetts history. Go figure.

Mark B. Adler is a Collegian columnist.

Celebrate independence

In 1948 the United Nations voted to create a Jewish homeland, The State of Israel, out of the ashes of the gas chambers.

Yisrael, as it is known in Hebrew, existed in peace for a few short hours. Almost immediately Iraq, Iran, Jordan, Egypt, and Syria attacked, threatening to sweep every Israeli into the Mediterranean Sea. They failed, and Israel survived to be attacked again and again.

1948, 1956, 1967, 1973, and 1982 all were years which will not be forgotten by Israelis. These were the years that she bled the blood of her young, her innocent. The enemies? Iraq, Iran, Jordan, Syria, Lebanon, and until 1979, Egypt.

Terrorist attacks from the West Bank were a daily fact of life for Israelis long before the occupation of Gaza or the West Bank began. Before the five Arab countries banded together to destroy Israel in 1948, Jordan instructed Arabs living in Israel to congregate in the West Bank while the Arab front attempted to destroy the Jews. Jordan would not let those Palestinians into their own country, and when Israel survived, the Palestinians were left refugees, without a home. In this same manner the Gaza Strip became the residence of its Arab population when Egypt would not let those people into its country in 1956.

Every year around this time, there is a moment of silence throughout Israel. Yom Hazekaron, the day of rememberance, is observed. At this moment, in Israel, all activity ceases. Those who died in Israel's defense are remembered. Few are the families who have not lost someone to one of the wars.

At 10:00 AM on Thursday, the bells of the old chapel will ring to remind us of Yom Hazekaron. For one moment stop what you are doing, and think of the men and women who have been killed in Israel's defense. The sacrifices of many will not go unforgotten.

Take a risk — be a heterosexual ally

The oppression that is felt by gay, lesbian and bisexual people is different than the oppression felt by other groups of people, because of homophobia. No kidding, everyone knows that.

The risks involved with being a heterosexual/straight ally, are directly related to the particular aspect of homophobia concerned the "fear of being perceived as gay, lesbian, or bisexual." We live in a 'heteosexist' society, in which there is a lot of hatred against gay, lesbian, and bisexual people. I am not writing this to the people who perpetuate this hatred. I am not writing this to the people who believe that homosexuality is fundamentally wrong or to those people who believe that homosexuality is a psychiatric disorder (This is what the National Psychiatric Association had on the books as late as 1973).

Scott Dworkin

I am writing this to the people who are generally supportive, but just haven't received that 'little push' inspiration or 'kick in the butt' to get involved, and be a heterosexual ally to gay, lesbian and bisexual people. I am writing this to those 'straight' people who believe that it is important to deal with their own homophobia, in order to benefit themselves as well as people in the gay, lesbian and bisexual community.

There are many ways to be a heterosexual ally. To begin with, be "out" about being and ally! Take part in activities on campus. In the Fall, you can show your solidarity by wearing pink and black clothing, and pink triangle pins, on National Coming Out Day. This semester, you can take part in the upcoming Lesbian, Bisexual, Gay Alliance (LBGA) Awareness Week. There is also a terrific course in the education department called Social Issues Training Project: Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Oppression. (It's one credit, for one weekend. Keep this in mind during pre-registration!). You can also be an ally by attending an LBGA dance — a very fun time that happens about three times every semester. Also, the Program For Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual concerns accepts a few heterosexual allies on to their "speakers bureau" — just attend one of their training sessions early next semester.

Ironically, coming out as a straight ally to gay, lesbian and bisexual people, is one way of announcing your own heterosexuality, as is wearing a pink triangle pin with the word "ally" in the middle. So, perhaps you are not really risking as muchas you might think. Remember, with issues as sensitive as these, you are going to risk offending people (perhaps I have offended people by writing this article). My hope is that this article will help me to be perceived as the ally that I believe myself to be, and perhaps you want to write a similar article to show your support. Most importantly, whenever you can, educate yourself about gay, lesbian and bisexual rites and concerns, and combat homophobia in any form. But remeber, when you refuse to take part in the gay bashing that you may witness in many forms, you may be perceived as being gay, lesbian or bisexual yourself.

This is part of the risk involved, but its worth it, for the sake of all sexual people!

At the crossroads, which path does the Middle East take?

We stand at the crossroads. The choice facing Arabs and Israelis is whether to continue down the road of war, which is becoming a way of no return, or to choose the path of peace. This is far less glib and cliched than it would at first sound. For what path we take will be chosen, at least for our generation, in the coming decade and there will be no way out.

The future will be dictated in the coming few years because they contain the fate of the key to peace. I mean, of course, the occupied territories. If the path of peace is chosen then we all know to some extent what it will look like. It is called the two state solution, with the Arab world recognizing Israel and normalizing relations with it, coupled with the establishment of a Palestinian state on the West Bank and in Gaza and a withdrawal of occupation forces in Lebanon and Golan. This is the single feasible scenario whereby a devastating future conflict can be avoided. Furthermore, it has the backing of the entire international community, except Israel and the United States.

The critical danger to the future of this rare flower is the determination of the Israeli government to ensure permanent control over the territories by using the great mass of Russian immigrants as colonizers. It is very clear by both their ideology and policies that they see the so-called miracle of the Russians as a weapon to permanently alter the demography of the territories and make them safe to annex formally. The program of colonization is becoming frenzied. All indications are that it will become a human wave. The Israelis know that by a combination of colonization, small scale expulsion, and terrorizing Palestinians, they can can gain control of the territories in the next few years. They will probably not even need to repeat the mass expulsions of 1948. But they will sentence us all to a grim future, and place themselves in an impossible position.

Hussein Ibish

It is tempting for Israelis to take a foolish, but quintessentially human view that since they have won what appears to be a total victory over the luckless Palestinians, there is no need to make concessions. This is an infallible prescription for future wars since, with the territories gone, there will be nothing left to talk about. I am a firm supporter of peace with Israel, and further believe that an effort ought to be made to embrace it into a regional community of nations. However, absent a Palestinian state in Palestine, not in Jordan, I for one will be lost. I have no idea how I might feel about future wars with Israel, but I will certainly oppose normalization and cooperation.

As for Palestinians, the sad truth is that justice will probably never fully come their way. By accepting a two state solution, most of them are, in effect, renouncing forever all rights to their houses, flower gardens, olive groves, and the land they cherish. It is a bitter pill indeed. We must never conveniently forget that the majority of Palestinians live in exile from their homes in Israel proper. True justice would demand that they be accorded the right to return to their houses and lands. However, cruel reality dictates that Russians who have never set foot in the Middle East are in posession of rights denied to the people of the land. There are at least five and a half million Palestinians and they must be allowed this token twenty percent of their country in which to be born, sheltered, and buried. They must have a government and a passport. That is why they should and will accept this unjust but attainable peace.

I appeal to all to face the truth about what will be made inevitable if the territories are fully colonized. Do not deceive yourselves by noting the aquiescence of the doomed Arab regimes, or the myth that most Arabs do not care about the Palestinians. What will you expect if this last scrap of dignity and justice is withheld? I repeat, what will be left to talk about?

As usual, the truth about practical peace is that it requires concessions and so makes nobody very happy. As the Israeli Y. Harkabi has said, it is not a question of choosing between good and bad, but bad and worse. The two state solution is bad, of that most can agree, but the future that may well be made inevitable shortly is certainly worse. I hope and pray that the road to peace will not be blocked forever. As Mahmoud Darwish wrote, "Should we not have some other task than digging graves and seeking new words for a eulogy to make it seem unlike the one we'd just written? How small these flowers are. How deep is all this blood."

Christianity is a truly funny thing

The Board of Governors has done it again. This cheap excuse for a governance body recently decided to have a "voluntary" prayer before their weekly meetings. Apparently Ted Marvelias, who was responsible for this motion, felt that we had to have Christianity imposed upon our government (sorry, Ted, that proposed prayer of yours sounds very Christian). Not only does that violate American constitutional principles of separation of church and state, but it also exposes Maravelias' basic hypocrisy as a Christian.

Kathy Lamothe

Now, I would never call myself perfect — my Creator and I know full well what I have done in my life — but at least I wouldn't try to be so high and mighty. Maravelias claims to live by basic principles of the Bible; apparently he has missed a few parts of the Book. Let's face it: if you pride yourself to the rest of the campus as holy, your sins are going to be very public.

And when you pray, do not be like the hypocrites, for they love standing in the synagogues and on the street corners to be seen by men. (Matthew 6:5)

Have you ever noticed that Maravelias loves to be seen quoting the Bible in public? It doesn't matter if it's an Undergraduate Student Senate meeting, or a BOG meeting, or a rally or in The Minuteman, Ted just does it where he sees fit to do it. Nor does it matter what he is quoting, although it seems his favorite quotes involve sodomy.

Does this public Bible thumping make you any happier, Ted? Do you think it makes you holier? I don't know about your happiness, but your purity of heart could be considered questionable.

Love your neighbor as yourself. (Mark 12:30)

From what I remember from my religious education, one's neighbor could be anyone at all, regardless of — among other things — race, sex, national origin and even religion or sexual orientation. This was a call to treat everyone with respect and to fight injustice purely out of love for one's neighbor.

Well, it seems that Marvelias has forgotten this simple rule. He's very selective about who does or does not have rights. For example, when he was elected to the senate this past September, and he ran for a seat on the Nominating Subcommittee, he was asked if he believed in discrimination. He said, "I don't discriminate against anyone — except homosexuals."

Ted, let's go over this again. Love your neighbor. Some of our greatest civil rights leaders have been those who have taken their basic love of God and followed the Bible's teachings to help others. They didn't go around threatening people, accusing their ancestors of murdering Jesus or haranguing them in the middle of the night at their residence hall. Sound familiar, Ted? It should — you've done precisely these things.

As a Christian myself, I am willing to admit that I have strayed from the moral teachings and that I shouldn't consider myself perfect. I also feel offended that Marvelias can do what he has done and think he is abiding by his faith. If there is one Bible quote that has kept me humble — and which our Christian soldier should keep in mind — it is this one from Matthew 7:1: Do not judge, or you too will be judged.

Think about that one, Ted.

Katherine T. Lamothe is a Collegian staff member

Weld must be nuts to treat the faculty this way

The teachers are going to have to work at least a week without pay? Something does not seem right here. Is it fair to make people work without any kind of income? These are the questions that have been circling through my brain. There have been many protests and flyers flowing about campus urging the teachers to strike and the students to abandon their classes. I myself feel that the furlough is wrong. For one thing, the students have already paid for the professors to teach. Plus, many of the teachers really need the weekly paycheck and may have a struggle surviving without it. We are paying for the government's mistakes! Everyone is suffering, nobody is going to be unaffected.

Even though I would like to stay out of class and protest for my beliefs, I cannot academically afford to. The T.A.'s are still teaching and I have to go to classes. Many students are in this predicament and have no other choice. I may even have to cross a picket line to get to a review session for an exam. How ironic it is for me to go against my beliefs for an education. We cannot allow this mess to happen again. Something has to be done. The teaching profession is one of the most important in this country. They are molding and shaping the minds of future presidents and great leaders. Yet these same people are not being treated as such. Where have the priorities of this country gone to? How can we set them straight? Have they been so twisted that his country can make workers go without pay?

Kimberly Shucka
UMass

"I didn't know the band was so political."

— Overheard

UMass is designed to crush your soul

One might ask why would a UMass student burn her body as well as a school book bag in an act of self-immolation? As I walk through the alienating campus, a place where students have become mere consumers of 'educational' degrees, rather than seekers of inner truth and scientific wisdom, I too have felt the desperate need to leave this callous place.

After administrators lied to students in my program, Future Studies at the School of Education, that they would save the field of study, they terminated it during the first round of budget cuts. My T.A. was also eliminated. We discussed the global problems and their visionary solutions enacted, they will cause our species to go extinct as we have done to countless other species.

Then in 1989, the Dean of the Graduate School threatened to expel me from UMass for being at a demonstration to stop biological weapons research.

After finishing a research paper on the mission statements of the university, concluding that the economically corrupting forces of the military/industrial complex are even written into the statements, I cannot find a way to alert the public to my insights. Where do intellectuals and morally astute individuals in both the arts and sciences gather on campus to discuss issue of planetary gravity? Where do we go to express our love for one another?

For the most part faculty members are not concerned with the general welfare of the world and to student needs. Most professors are concerned their bourgeois families, houses, and receiving tenure, rather than with working to create universal justice.

UMass is a self-serving brutal system of charlatanism, which destroys, not educates the minds and spirits of the youth. It kills dreams by making students serve the system rather than fosters the way students learn to serve their compassionate dreams of the future.

Libby Hubbard
UMass

There are things we can do

Wake up UMass! We are over twenty-thousand strong and only making a whisper!

Have you called or written to your state senator or representative? I have and was shocked to discover that she:

- Doesn't really know what all the fuss is about, BUT,
- feels that our tuition and fees are so dirt cheap that they should be raised,
- thinks that all the students go on exotic vacations every spring so can easily afford increases,
- and that for those who can not, a year or two off working would build character and straighten them out.
- She had not heard from any other students or parents and therefore had dismissed any notion of problems.

A misinformed legislature swarming with such ignorance only serves to maintain or even accelerate the rate of decay of this and other learning institutions.

The good news is that my representative listened respectfully to my opinions, was delighted to schedule a meeting within weeks to discuss in detail the plight facing UMass, and to reevaluate her position on public higher education based upon the facts and figures I will present.

What is my point? Your senator and representative do care but must be informed in order to act. Write, call, or best of all, meet with your legislators! Encourage your parents to do the same! Bring a collective support of the legislature. An immediate and concerted effort on the part of all students would provide just the resounding shock that the statehouse needs to feel.

Economics Professor Sam Bowles, speaking on the "Crisis in Higher Education," said: "There is a great misconception out there that students are apathetic. We have to work hard to fight this. Get out there on the picket lines and show them that we can fight this attack from Boston."

"I am very proud that I've been here for 17 years and that two of my kids graduated from here," he said. "UMass is not going down the tubes. We're under attack."

The Kurdish crisis: A historical interpretation

The pattern of Kurdish experience repeated today

By HUSSEIN IBISH
Collegian Correspondent

Without doubt one of the greatest human tragedies of the twentieth century is upon us in the form of the refugee crisis in Iraqi Kurdistan. As these brave people trudge wearily across their ravaged homeland, they trail behind them a history whose tears could flow down from the snow-capped mountains and irrigate all of Arabia.

At present there are at least a million Kurdish refugees along the Iraqi borders with Turkey and Iran, and reports indicate that they are dying at a rate of 500 to 1,000 per day. Meanwhile, fighting is still going on between Kurdish Peshmerga guerillas and Iraqi troops around as-Sulaimaniyah and six other cities, and people continue to flee their homes.

The international relief effort of less than 24 planeloads of supplies is a token gesture. Many note that international efforts are concentrated on the Turkish border, not the Iranian border where most of the refugees are, suggesting that the relief effort is to relive the burden on Turkey, not the suffering of the Kurds. It has left many pondering the truth of the adage, "the Kurds have no friends."

News Analysis

This catastrophe is particularly painful to those of us who are directly tied to Kurdistan. Although we have deep roots in the Arab world, my family traces its origins to the Kurdish city of Mardin, now part of Turkey (Ibish is a Kurdish diminutive form of Ibrahim). And the most painful part of this horror to those who are familiar with Kurdish history is that really this is nothing new, only on a larger scale. As well as anger, fear and compassion, we are feeling a deep and haunting sense of deja-vu.

This appalling situation is the result of the intervention in the region by imperialists in search of power and oil, the bombing of Kurdistan by those imperialists, the exploitation of the Kurdish national movement by those imperialists in an effort to undermine a local central authority, the abandoning of the Kurds by the imperialists and bloody revenge by the local government. This is the pattern of Kurdish experience in this century and has been repeated in 1991 to the letter.

In attacking Iraq the United States bombed many Kurdish areas and Kurds suffered greatly from the embargo of supplies, food and medicines that the imperialists imposed. Through a clandestine radio station "the Voice of Free Iraq," the CIA called on Iraqis in general and Kurds in particular to rise up and rebel. Many of the foolish collaborators who taped such Kurdish language broadcasts for the CIA have expressed their outrage at how cynically they and their leadership were tricked with false promises of aid for the rebellion.

Unwise Kurdish leaders sought to take advantage of Iraqi weakness and the illusion of American support. They launched an uprising against the central government which met with initial success but soon collapsed under an army counter-attack. The help promised by the United States never came. In reasserting control over Kurdistan, the Iraqi army has undoubtedly resorted to indiscriminate shelling and a variety of atrocities.

Thousands of Kurdish civilians have certainly been killed. Hence, the exodus of hundreds of thousands of Kurds towards the border areas, fleeing from the shelling or fearing the revenge of the same army that had used gas at Halabja a few years before.

The unhappy Kurdish experience with Western imperialism began in earnest after the end of the World War I. The British and the French were feasting on the remains of the Ottoman Empire at the victors banquet. The British fostered nascent Kurdish nationalism, envisioning a state to serve their interests against those of Soviet Union and Turkey.

The promise of an independent Kurdistan was formally made in the 1920 Treaty of Sevres, committing the British and Turks to the terms of their post-war relations. However, due to the successes of Mustapha Kamal and the Young Turk movement, the treaty was never ratified by Turkey and a new pact was negotiated.

In the time between the negotiations the British had reconsidered and were now agreed to split Kurdistan into shares. They were eyeing the oil fields of Mosul and Kirkuk, which they proceeded to incorporate into their new protectorate Iraq. There were doubts about its "viability" without the Kurdish area at the India office, the center of British power in Asia.

Most of rest of Kurdistan was left to Turkey and Iran. Further, the notorious 1916 Sykes-Picot agreement by the British and French to carve up the Ottoman empire committed the British to provide the French with a percentage of the region's oil supply. The British had apparently concluded that this would be easier to accomplish through the vehicle of Iraq than Kurdistan.

Thus, at the signing of the 1923 Treaty of Laussane that formally ended Anglo-Turkish hostilities, no provision was made for the promised Kurdistan. In 1922, the Turkish army had overrun much of Kurdistan. The British were in military control of the wilayat of Mosul which they turned into "Iraqi Kurdistan" by use of a rigged referendum.

In the process of this elaborate Anglo-Turkish minuet, with the Kurds serving as the ballroom floor, the degree of Albion's perfidy was staggering. When the man chosen by the British to head the promised state, Sheikh Mahmud Barzinja, began to behave independently, he was crushed by the colonial troops of the India office and taken to India as prisoner in 1919.

However, due to unrest in Kurdistan, they felt it neccesary to return him to Iraq in September, 1922. Once again the brave man refused to kowtow before the colonial master and acted with integrity and independence. This was too much for the British, who responded with some of the most unspeakable atrocities in the history of modern warfare.

On the Kurds and some other Iraqis in the twenties, the British pioneered the technique of bombing civilian populations, and it was here that the doctrine that a war could be won by using air power was advanced. Under the leadership of Winston Churchill, the British used not only bombs, and delayed action bombs (meant for children) but poison gas against Kurdish civilians. Much of the fighting was centered on as-Sulaimaniyah. He was driven from Iraq in 1924.

Not content with exploitation of Sheikh Mahmud, the British also sought to use the Sheikh Said rebellion in "Turkish" Kurdistan to undermine central authority. The rebels enjoyed an initial string of successes aided by the British, but as the fighting wore on they were abandoned and the Turks, using superior technology and numbers, crushed the Kurdish rebels, and thousands of refugees streamed southward to escape the fighting.

The Turks responded to the rebellion by trying to destroy Kurdish culture and identity. The Turkish need to assimilate the Kurds was regarded as an issue of national survival and this attitude has not changed. There has been a similar but far less virulent attitude in Iran, which put down its own Kurdish rebellion in twenties, that of Ismail Agha Simko, who was eventually defeated with the aid of Turkey.

Traditionally, the Kurds have been most repressed in Turkey where they are regarded only as "Mountain Turks," totally forbidden to express their identity. The Kurdish language is banned and culture is suppressed. Ironically, it is probably in Iraq, the site of the current and greatest Kurdish tragedy, that the laws have been the least repressive of the three main states. Paradoxically, the most massive brutality has come from the various Iraqi central governments.

The three main central government authorities, under the direct guidance of the imperialists, concluded a number of agreements that contained provisions aimed at quelling Kurdish nationalism, primarily the Saadabad pact (1937) and the Baghdad pact (1955). But the imperialists continued to use the Kurds as a weapon to enforce the cooperation of recalitrant central governments, but not to support Kurdish national rights.

Shaded areas show regions inhabitated by the Kurdish people.

The British sought to use Mullah Mustapha Barzani against a nationalist coup that temporarily overthrew their puppets were restored, the government was encouraged to crush the rebellion, driving the rebels into Mahabad in Iran. There the Russians had facilitated the establishment of the Kurdish "Mahabad Republic." The Shah destroyed the republic when Anglo-Soviet rivalry over who would seize the most from Tehran under the guise of helping the Kurds paralize both forces. The British and Iranians chased Barzani along the border regions and eventually he sought refuge in Russia, where he remained for ten years.

After the Iraqi coup in 1958, Barzani returned to Iraq. He was warmly greeted at the airport by the new leader, Colonel Kassem, who sought to use Barzani as a means of controlling Kurdistan. Barzani made a set of very bold demands for the fullest sort of autonomy short of independence. They were rejected and Barzani launched a revolt.

Learning from the British, Kassem used the air force as a main weapon against the rebels. The first Ba'athist regime was also unable to reconcile with Barzani, and made an all-out assault on his forces in 1963. But, after the Aref coup in 1964, Barzani made a deal with the new government that split the Iraqi Kurdish movement to this day, between the more personal and tribal PDK of Barzani and the more ideological PUK of Jalal Talabani.

The coming to power of the second Ba'athist regime in 1968 brought about a tremendous assault on Barzani's forces. But the Peshmerga fought valiantly and soon the government made what amounted to an offer of autonomy. But the Iranians warned the United States that a peaceful solution to the Kurdish question in Iraq would be useful to the Soviets, and the CIA used a dispute between Barzani and Saddam to re-ignite the war.

Nixon and Kissinger personally oversaw the American exploitation of the Kurds. Barzani rightly distrusted the Shah, but foolishly believed in the Americans. To assure the war would start again, the Pike commision reports that "...the US acted in effect as a guarantor that the [Kurds] would not be dropped by the [Shah]."

But the CIA, Nixon, Kissinger and the Shah were, of course, not to be trusted. The commission reports that "The CIA had early warning which suggested that our ally [the Shah] would abandon the [Kurds] the minute he came to an agreement with his enemy [Saddam] over border disputes."

At the OPEC meeting in March 1975, the Iraqis and Iranians pledged to resolve their disputes. The Kurds were dropped by the United States instantly, without regard to their commitments. Kissinger replied to Kurdish protests with compassion and integrity, "Secret Service operations are not missionary work."

The result was a crushing defeat of the Kurdish rebels. Hundreds of thousands of refugees were stuck at the Iranian border, starvation and disease rampant. A doctor of Medcins Sans Frontieres observed, "Whole families wait with only their baggage and some blankets. Many have done what little they can to camp in villages. Tuberculosis, typhiod, meningitis are all prevalent."

During the Iran-Iraq war, as usual, the Kurdish groups tended to side anyone who was attacking the central government, and Barzani's forces cooperated with the Iranians in eastern Iraq. The result was the still disputed gas attack on Halabja, and numerous other civilian deaths.

And so here we are today with one of the greatest humanitarian crisis since World War II afflicting this abused people. Once again the cooperation of Kurdish leaders with the Western imperialists has lead to utter catastrophe. One can only pray that they have learned the lesson. The imperialists, specifically the British quite deliberately put the Kurds in an impossible position by arranging a regional order that could not accommodate Kurdish rights.

The imperialists, first the British and then after control of the Middle East was passed on to them by the events of the early 1950s (Suez and Mosadegh), the Americans, used the Kurds as pawns in their divide and rule tactics.

Clearly the problem of Kurdistan is a creation of colonialism and will certainly not be solved by any colonial order. Like the rest of the Third World, the only real hope for Kurds lies in a total overthrow of the system of global oppression. For example, the safe haven areas first proposed by Britain and now adopted by the French and Americans is unquestionably a plot to undermine Iraqi central government authority and gain control of the country again.

The biggest fault of leaders like Barzani and Talabani is not their disunity so much as their willingness to get into bed with treacherous organizations such as the CIA and Mossad. Such behavior is not only foolish because it will inevitably result in betrayal but also because it alienates all natural allies.

The solution is an independent Kurdistan, but its creation must and only can accompany the demolision of colonial rule in the Middle East. Let this be the last repetition of an old story.

he said. "I'd like to see 50,000 to 100,000 people demonstrating in Boston."

Hudson said the University is slated to be cut another $25 million next year and the entire state system of higher education is on the verge of being destroyed.

While Hudson sees many of his colleagues leaving UMass, he said he turned down offers to teach in the private sector because of the lack of bonding between students and professors there.

Hudson said there are already devastating holes in the faculty because of those who left.

"We've lost professors we can't replace," he said.

Creed said while he could be making at least $10,000 more a year at a private university, he does not want any animosity between the faculties at public and private colleges.

A reversal of priorities plagues state, prof says

By AMY PRENDERGAST
Collegian Staff

Chants to save higher education were heard outside of Herter Hall yesterday as faculty and students banded together to protest the furlough plan instituted by Governor William Weld.

A group of 10 picketers carried signs and handed out flyers in protest of the mandatory furlough demanded by Weld during the afternoon.

"There has been a complete reversal of priorities in this state," said Professor Harry Seelig of the German Department. "The state government is not being responsive to the needs of the Commonwealth. I am very pleased and encouraged with the support we have received from the students."

Professor James Cathey of German said: "We have to start worrying about the kids in sixth grade. Will there be a University for them to come to? We can't just let this thing slide. If we do nothing, it is like saying we can absorb these cuts. This protest is not just a message to Weld, it is a message to the whole Commonwealth."

Senior Katrin Verclas said she was protesting for the benefit for the returning students of the University. "I'm a senior and I'd really like to be a faithful alumni to this school, but I can't if it's not around."

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Look forward to improved domestic conditions. A real estate transaction brings record financial gains. Take a rosier view and a romantic relationship will blossom before your eyes!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): The emphasis today is on practicing moderation in everything you do. New prestige and success are part of the picture. Deal directly with an attractive member of the opposite sex.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A work overload could be sapping your strength. Get better organized and delegate more responsibility. Heated exchanges should be avoided at all costs. Keep your friends' secrets.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Take a long-range view and rise above petty squabbles. Your financial affairs may be linked to those of a family member with whom you have little influence. It is time to conquer an old fear.

LEO (July 23-Aug 22): Avoid direct confrontation today and you could receive a special break! The new support you get from your loved ones is reason to rejoice. Give romance a second chance. Trust pays off.

VIRGO (Aug 23-Sept 22): Keep your ideas under wraps until all your research is completed. Consolidating resources will help you achieve better results. Choose a healthier lifestyle with mate's encouragement.

LIBRA (Sept 23-Oct 22): Someone assumes that what is good for him will also be good for you. Set the record straight before you find yourself painted into a corner. Listen to mate's sensible suggestions. A tip-top weekend is in store for you.

SCORPIO (Oct 23-Nov 21): Spend time with those who will fall in with your mood. Domestic relations may deteriorate if you do not find out what is troubling a loved one. Ask probing but sympathetic questions.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov 22-Dec 21): Involvement in a romantic triangle could cause great embarrassment. Be smart! Keep your personal and professional life strictly separate. A neighbor's pet may be a nuisance.

CAPRICORN (Dec 22-Jan 19): You find it easier to communicate with your co-workers now. Good news could arrive by mail or phone. Express your feelings openly and romance will become more rewarding.

AQUARIUS (Jan 20-Feb 18): Concentrate on projects you can handle alone. An older relative may need some advice. Be prepared for last-minute changes. Complete old projects before embarking on new ones.

PISCES (Feb 19-March 20): You can make up the ground you lost by getting an early start today. A promise of financial support arrives from an unusual source. A romantic relationship becomes more meaningful.

Graduates join faculty, undergrads in pickets outside tower

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

A group of faculty, staff, and undergraduates picketed at the Lederle Graduate Research Center yesterday in an effort to show the solidarity among the University community in opposing the continuing cuts to public higher education in Massachusetts.

Lee Levin, a fourth-year graduate student in the economics department and a member of the Graduate Employee's Organization, picketed after giving students in his Intermediate Macroeconomics class handouts to help them with their classwork.

"I decided not to teach today because GEO has taken up the 'no business as usual' theme," Levin said. "It's unusual for the faculty and staff to be so unanimous.

"We needed to get out and send a message to Beacon Hill and it's important for graduate students to be a part of that," he said. "I think some undergraduates may be questioning what the faculty and staff are doing, but we need to make it clear that we are doing this out of a strong sense of commitment to the University."

Rich Hudson, a staff member of the University Computer Services for the past ten years, said cuts to the state's higher education system will jeopardize the state's future.

"It's very shortsighted of Governor Weld to think that the current recession is going to end without leadership, and leadership is developed in diverse communities like this," Hudson said.

"The extent that this University is a much better place to study and staff," Hudson added. "The quality of students we attract is much higher than before, and to see that torpedoed under the guise of fiscal responsibility is outrageous."

Within view of the picketers, Dan Carter taught his Math 233 class outside to show support for the faculty and staff.

"Basically, my class wanted to do this," Carter said. "Right now people are making their plans based on what will happen in the future of the University.

"Students are making plans based on whether or not the University can continue to support them," he said. "This University will take decades to recover from the cuts that are coming right now."

Cummings scored the final goal for Dartmouth, unassisted for a score of 12-7. Francis Pepe finished the scoring for the game with 1:24 in regulation.

UMass' Ted Kellerman and Dartmouth's John Banks continued to come up with amazing saves throughout the game. Kellerman finished with 19 saves for the game, his best outing yet this season.

"The last two games Kellerman has had good games," said UMass coach Ted Garber. "It really helps to boost the confidence of the defense."

The defense looked cohesive and Rick Mullins had a good day, stripping Bowler often and working upfield for the clear.

"Everything I threw today landed," Mullins said. "It was a good, clean game. I mean, with so few penalties and all. It helps the flow of the game."

UMass outhustled Dartmouth in groundballs, 57-45, and made 47 shots on goal, compared to the Big Green's 38.

The faceoff position saw changeups for UMass. O'Connor played through the third quarter then freshman Sam Joseph, John Villali and Jim Kushner faced off for UMass. Dartmouth's Peter Fahey won 13 of 24 faceoffs and UMass finished with 11.

O'Connor was pulled from the game due to a painful right leg.

Clark helps Sox beat KC

By DAVE O'HARA
The Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — After going 0-for-9 with eight strikeouts and a double play grounder, Jack Clark insisted there would be good days as well as bad in his new role as the Boston Red Sox' designated hitter.

Clark, benched for one game, showed what he meant Wednesday, returning to the lineup with a two-run homer and a double in Boston's 6-2 victory over the Kansas City Royals.

"I felt better, this is the best I've felt this season," said Clark, who became a multimillionaire in signing as a free agent with Boston durin gthe offseason. "But this day is over with and now I'm thinking about tomorrow."

Mike Greenwell also homered, giving the Red Sox five home runs in two days after only two in their first seven games.

Left-hander Tom Bolton (1-0) allowed just six hits and two runs in seven innings, getting the victory in his first 1991 start as Jeff Gray retired six batters forhis first save in 44-degree weather.

"There were a lot of swings on first pitches," Bolton said. "I don't think the hitters wanted to stand around too long up there at the plate. As it turned out, we didn't need sunshine to make it a nice day."

"We've got to score some runs," Kansas City managter John Wathan said after the Royals managed just ttwo runs for the second day in a row. "Fenway Park is supposed to favor run production..."

Clark, who ended his drought with a second-inning double, broke a 2-2 tie with his second homer, a drive high into the screen in left field in the fourth.

That was all Bolton needed as the Red Sox beat the Royals for the second game in a row after losing five of six previous starts.

Gorillas beat Big Green 13-7 behind McAleavey, Millon

Attack man Mark Millon scored four goals yesterday afternoon at Upper Boyden field against Dartmouth College. The Gorillas defoliated the Big Green, 13-7.

By ADRIEN MATT
Collegian Staff

Jim McAleavey put on the afterburners in the second half, contributing five assists to the University of Massachusetts lacrosse team's 13-7 victory over Dartmouth yesterday on The Hill.

McAleavey had six assists for the game, three of which were fed to Mark Millon who had four goals for the game.

"When [McAleavey] has the ball, the attention goes to him," Millon said. "It's sometimes makes it a little harder to come out."

UMass tucked away a 5-2 record and Dartmouth dropped their second straight loss of the season for a 1-7 record, 0-1 in the Ivy League.

"We're not as big and strong as they are," Dartmouth coach Tim Nelson, an '85 Syracuse grad, said of UMass. "Plus we got tired...We're just glad we get an opportunity to play a team like UMass."

Although sluggish in the first quarter, Gorilla Rick Senatore initiated the scoring unassisted nine minutes into the game and was soon answered by Brian Heberlig's goal, assisted by Mike Pence.

One minute into the second quarter McAleavey fed to Senatore during man up. Heberlig scored unassisted at 2:46, followed by a Tim McHugh-Brendan Bowler combination, and Dartmouth led for the first and only time of the game at 3-2.

For the first time this season, the Gorillas were 100 percent in man-up situations as Dartmouth went 0-for-5.

UMass proceeded to blow the doors off the scoring game when Hugh O'Callaghan tied it up at 3-all and the Big Green's offense began to break down.

Millon was fed by Ed O'Callaghan then Mario Lopez scored unassisted, ending the half at 5-3.

Dartmouth's defense was frustrated and changed up long and short stick positions, but to little avail as UMass continued its offensive barrage of shots on goal.

Although Dartmouth's Tim Wennrich scored the first goal of the second half unassisted, it was answered by Kevin O'Connor, after winning the faceoff, six seconds later.

A Millon-McAleavey combination was followed by Mike Caine's feed to freshman Chris Nentwich, his first collegiate goal. The score settled at 8-4.

Millon and McAleavey teamed up again during a man-up opportunity and was finally answered by a Bowler-Ben Cummings combo from Dartmouth. Mario Guaglianone netted a McAleavey feed and a Big Green Wennrich-McHugh combination followed to set the tone at 10-6.

During unsettled play, UMass showed some fancier stickwork in the fourth quarter.

From the top right corner of the box, Guaglianone passed to McAleavey in the center, who then fed a behind-the-back pass to Ed O'Callaghan who netted a behind-the-back shot, his second goal of the season. This was the first game in which both O'Callaghans scored.

Less than one minute later, Matt Garber passed to McAleavey who assisted Millon for his fourth and final goal of the game with 5:47 remaining.

Baseball to renew rivalry with Springfield College

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

Ahh, tradition.

It may not make a lot of sense for either the University of Massachusetts' or Springfield College's baseball teams to schedule games against each other. UMass has nothing to gain by beating up on the Division II Chiefs, but could wind up embarrassed if SC pulls off the big upset. Both teams have demanding conference schedules to tend to as well, which means niether team is apt to put their ace on the mound for a non-conference game.

But its tradition. UMass and SC play every year, and the rivalry continues this afternoon in Springfield at Barry Allan Field, located on SC's Alden St. campus. Game time is 3 pm.

"I'd like to think our players will get up for UMass," noted SC coach Charles Roys, "but with both team's conference schedules the way they are, UMass/SC has turned into just another ballgame. It's unfortunate that it dosen't stand out on our schedule as it once did."

UMass (14-18-1) may find itself looking past SC with four huge games against Rutgers coming up this weekend. The Minutemen and Scarlet Knights are tied for second place in the Atlantic 10 Eastern Division, and since only the top two teams from the division make the A-10 Tournament, the Minutemen are in a must-win situation. It would be easy to overlook SC given this scenario.

However, the Chiefs are a hot team. They have won eight of their last nine games, including a 1-0 win over Dartmouth — proof positive that SC can compete with Division I schools like UMass. The Minutemen split with Dartmouth in a doubleheader.

"We've been getting better hitting," said Roys, "but our pitching has been a concern." SC has a 5.58 earned run average as a team, and a team batting average of .289.

Roys cited Sam Gillen, a Senior outfielder/pitcher, as SC's best all-around player, and the statistics agree. Gillen does everything but sell hot dogs and drive the team bus — he leads the Chiefs with 26 runs batted in, 32 hits, four home runs, 23 runs scored and a team-best 1.99 ERA.

Other performers for SC include outfielder Bill O'Connell (.397 BA) and pitcher Sean Keating (nine appearances, 28 strikeouts).

Meanwhile, back at the A-10: The Minutemen are 5-3 in A-10 Eastern Division play with eight league games left to play. Included are four home games vs. Rutgers this Saturday and Sunday, and four games against division-leading Temple on April 27 and 28. All eight games, in the form of four seven-inning game doubleheaders, are scheduled for Earl Lorden Field.

Things are looking Bright: Right fielder Brian Bright is currently third in the A-10 in home runs (six) and fourth in RBIs (30) and doubles (10). Ron Villone is fifth in the A-10 in pitching with a 3.72 ERA and two saves.

Brian Bright is currently third in the Atlantic 10 in home runs and fourth in doubles and runs batted in. The Minutemen face Springfield College today at 3 p.m. in Springfield.

Track bounces back at Smith Inv.

By TOM QUINN
Collegian Correspondent

What a difference a week of hard training can make.

Prior to last Saturday's Smith Invitational, the University of Massachusetts women's track team faced injuries and illnesses that plagued them in virtually every event.

But this team proved they could overcome adversity, as they out-performed some of the Northeast's top track schools. Out of 12 events, the Minutewomen qualified for the New England Championships 15 times.

"Overall, I thought the team did much better," LaFreniere said, in comparison to last meet's outing. "I was disappointed last week, but the team bounced back. They looked much stronger at Smith."

An indication of the new and improved Minutewomen showed up in the 5,000-meter event, where UMass swept the top four places.

Mo Meldrin won the event with a New England Championship qualifying time of 18:16.5.

Lynn Kirchoff followed close behind finishing second and also qualified for NEs.

Cate Dean took third and Kathy Holt ran a solid fourth.

Lennice Johnson, who has been battling with anemia and a thyroid condition, placed first in the 400 meter hurdles with a strong NE qualifying time of 1:05.39.

"Lennice's performance was a great improvement," said LaFreniere. "She looked strong for the whole race."

The 100 meter proved to be the meet's most exiting event as Tana Henderson ran neck-in-neck for 70 meters before holding her smooth stride to pull away with a win. She ran a New England qualifying time to boot.

LaFreniere said she anticipated strong competition from URI in the throwing events, and got it.

However, URI could not shoot down UMass' Simone Marisseau, who won the shot put and discus, while Diane Ozzolek was out thrown by Rhody's mighty Liz Legault in the hammer event.

LeeAnn Ambrose outdistanced her competition in the 800 on the final leg of the event for impressive win and qualified for NEs with a time of 2:14.48.

In the relays UMass placed first in the 4x400 (Lennice Johnson, Kathy Crocker, Dana Smith and Ambrose) and second in the grueling 4x800 (Meldrin, Michelle St. Laurent, Kelly Kiljeblad, Kathy Holt).

JESUS JONES

By CHRIS MUTHER
Collegian Staff

Labels.

People are try to label everything — from colors to social classes, everything must have a label. This system of labeling works well with music too. Sometimes. But in the case of Jesus Jones and SOHO, two bands that will be playing the Student Union Ballroom Sunday night, labels do not come easy.

Jesus Jones, the eclectic London quintet, have evaded the usual pop music labels like "heavy metal" or "dance music" by mixing together a sound that has been described as a "cross between Sonic Youth and the Cowsills."

After forming three years ago on a beach in Spain, the Jones' have gone on to fame in the British and American college charts with two thrash-punk hit albums Liquidizer and there latest effort Doubt

A key ingredient in the Jesus Jones sound is sampling. Lead singer Mike Edwards explains unlike other bands, he looks for samples that people don't already know, to expose them to something different.

Another band that is difficult to categorize is the funk/dance/soul/country/punk trio SOHO, who bolted up the U.K. and U.S. charts with their hit, the peace-loving "Hippy Chick" earlier this year.

"Hippy Chick," the story of a woman arrested at a demonstration by her ex-boyfriend policeman, is first release from the album Goddess, is a mix of dance, soul and psychedelic that includes a sampling from the Smiths for good measure.

The trio, which features identical twin sisters Jacqueline and Pauline Cuff along with guitarist Timothy Brinkhurst, has been together for nine years after the sisters gave up their day jobs as psychaictric nurses.

SOHO's second single, "Out of My Head," is an infectious blend of pop and reggae that reflects a common theme on the band's debut album, strong women trying to exist in a male dominated world.

Jesus Jones and SOHO will be performing Sunday at 8 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom, admission is $7 for students and $9 for non-students.

Dry-witted Wright does benefit for children

By DANIELLE DOWLING
Collegian Staff

It's late. You come home a wee bit tipsy from too much carousing with your friend Harold. You fumble for the keys and proceed to unlock the door with your car keys. Its engine revs up and you figure, "What the hell, let's go for a spin." You cruise down the highway in your split level, ranch style house. Then you stop in the middle of the freeway and scream at everyone driving by, "Get out of my driveway."

This is the bizarre and humorous world of Steven Wright, a comedian who mixes monotone, dry wit and absurdity to create a world so strange it's almost believable. I bet you anything IKEA (you know, it's a big country, someone's got to furnish it) has looked into the idea of decaffeinated coffee tables.

It is rumored that it all began when an iguana named Fred told Wright he could solve the mystery of McDonald's special sauce if he went to the desert for 40 seconds to meditate and then devote the rest of his life to spreading insane, mind-bending humor across the world.

Actually, it all started after Wright graduated from Emerson College and wandered from job to job in search of some kind of calling. Then at Ding Ho's Comedy Club and Chinese Restaurant in Cambridge, Massachusetts, Wright got his big break.

After attending an open mike audition, he became a regular at Ding Ho's and when Tonight Show producer Peter LaSally caught a glimpse of his act while digesting bamboo shoots, LaSally immediately booked Wright's first performnace on the show. Wright performed so well on the Tonight Show that he was asked back a week later.

Since that fateful experience in August of 1982, Wright has been involved in many projects. He has done two HBO specials, appeared in Desperately Seeking Susan, and won an Oscar for his involvement in the 30-minute film short, The Appointments of Dennis Jennings.

A shy and introverted kid, Wright always dreamed of making people laugh, but he kept quiet about his dream fearing that he would jinx himself. But eventually, as he told People Magazine, "I had to finally confront it. I didn't want to be selling insurance at 40 wondering what would it have been like to do stand-up."

Wright will be visiting the Happy Valley on Saturday night to perform a benefit for Friends for Children, Inc. and the Children's Advocacy Center. The two organizations focus on programs and policies that impact large groups of children. They are committed to fighting for the unmet needs of children. Someone has to, since the government sees it more beneficial to finance war machines than protect the future of this country.

Hey, where's the laugh track?

Steven Wright will perform at Smith College in John M. Greene Hall on Saturday night at 8 p.m.Tickets are $16 for general admission; $25 for VIP seating; and $18 on the day of the show. All proceeds will go to benefit Friends for Children, Inc.

Earth Day celebration takes place at Foxboro Stadium

By PAUL DeGEORGES
Collegian Staff

Every year around this time the weather starts to get warmer and warmer and the environmentalists get louder and louder about how the ozone keeps getting thinner and thinner and how nobody seems to care.

Then, as if to dispel the myth that we humans are just a bunch of shortsighted, chronic litterbugs who refuse to believe in global warming and think that the earth is ours to rape forever, all of a sudden it's Earth Day!

O.K., so Earth Day celebrations actually produce more waste than a '74 Nova — it's still the only way to get everybody thinking environmentally conscious at the same time. Last year Earth Day turned out to be the largest peacetime event in the history of the world, with more than 200 million people in over 140 countries participating in community concerts, clean-ups, tree-plantings and teach-ins. On Saturday, starting at 2 p.m., Foxboro Stadium will come alive with The Earth Day 1991 Concert: Because the Earth Can't Wait. So, put down that hairspray and get ready for one heck of a good cause, with an equally good lineup.

The diverse combination of artists who are donating their time and talent to this extravaganza include Jackson Brown, Bruce Hornsby, Jesus Jones, Maxie Priest, Indigo Girls, Beat Surrender, Queen Latifah, Willie Nelson, Bruce Cockburn, Roseanne Cash, Billy Bragg, 10,000 Maniacs, Young Nation, and Boogie Down Productions.

The show, which will run for as long as it takes all the bands to play (a long time), is being produced by Concerts for the Environment which is a non-profit organization. "It is crucial that awareness continue to be expanded and translated into action over the next decade," says Michael Martin, the organization's Executive Director.

The Earth Day 1991 Concert will start at 2 p.m. on Saturday in Foxboro Stadium. Tickets are $19.50 All proceeds will be donated to twelve environmental action groups, including the local Student Environmental Action Coalition. Call:(800)-362-8080.

1000 end two-day protest with march to Amherst

By K.A. BURKE and CHRIS MUTHER
Collegian Staff

British pop star Billy Bragg urged some 300 University of Massachusetts students, staff, and faculty at yesterday's "End of the Action" rally to continue fighting to keep education a priority.

The rally, held on the steps of the Student Union, marked the end of a two-day "job action" at UMass, in which hundreds of classes have been cancelled or moved, to bring attention to cuts to public higher education and Gov. Weld's furlough plan.

For a second day, professors picketed buildings on campus and handed out leaflets at busy intersections.

Members of the Massachusetts Society of Professors at UMass were claiming the job action a success yesterday as MSP President John Cole met with budget officials from the Weld administration to discuss the action.

At yesterday's rally, which was attended by congressional candidate and state Senator John Olver (D-Amherst), Bragg said he was in solidarity with the faculty and staff in their strike.

"The issue of education has international ramifications," Bragg said. "I believe education is a basic human right — a nation that does not provide free education cannot really call itself civilized."

Following Bragg's speech, the crowd marched across campus, through Southwest, to the center of Amherst.

Amherst Police Captain Sherpa estimated the crowd at 750 to 1,000 students.

At the Amherst Town Common, Bernard Hayes of Digital Equipment Corporation said UMass is an important research university, and that Digital is very concerned about the cuts to public higher education. He said the corporation has invested $6 million in research within the computer and information science department and the computer engineering department.

Commuter Area Government President Susan Church spoke about the importance of putting public higher education at the top of the agenda. Voting, she said, is the only voice citizens have in government and it should be used to let legislators know that education is a priority of the people.

David Keenan, a local realtor, spoke of the adverse effects the furlough will have on local businesses. He said since the University, the area's major employer, has hit hard times, "vacant storefronts [on Main Street] are an obvious sign of an anemic university."

Keenan said the state government has a tendency to think "that the state ends at [Interstate] 495," and that they should "come out here and see what we are so proud of."

Economics professor Samuel Bowles, also speaking at the Common, said companies do not leave the state because of higher taxes but stay as a result of a more educated work force.

Duffey says students face severe cuts or tuition hikes

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

President-Chancellor Joseph Duffey yesterday addressed some 120 students and faculty in the Cape Cod Lounge about the state of Massachusetts' economy.

He talked about the cuts that public higher education may incur and what can be done to prevent those reductions.

"I think two things will happen next year," Duffey said. "Either tuition will go up, or this campus will take tremendous cuts."

Gov. Weld is planning a $79 million cut in the education budget. He plans to raise tuition and fees and compose a 7 percent cut in administration.

"I don't think anyone should suppport tuition increases when the governor is planning on taking away financial aid," Duffey said.

"I think that there are a good number of parents who still haven't fulfilled their obligations as parents . . . they benefit from a good education system," he said.

"Nothing would be more important than to visit representatives in the next few weeks, he said. "Take the initiative — call your representative, go with your parents and see them. These reps. don't get visited."

Duffey attempted to recap Massachusetts' politics during the past 10 years to explain why the state has the tremendous deficit which it has.

"It's clear that the 1980s created a decline in understanding government," he said. "More and more, we turned to international activity and avoided the problems domestically.

"We had a governor [Dukakis] who was going around talking about the Massachusetts Miracle and how Massachusetts had the lowest unemployment rate . . .," he said. "It never was quite a miracle.

"At the end of the decade, the state found themselves embarassed with a presidential loss and a new governor who has no ex-

Protesting profs speak out

State employees demoralized, they say

By AMY PRENDERGAST
Collegian Staff

Despite yesterday's cold weather, students, professors, and employees of the University of Massachusetts continued their second day of picketing to protest Gov. Weld's furlough plan.

A group of about 15 protestors picketed in front of Lederle Graduate Tower and later moved to the sidewalk on North Pleasant Street.

Jorgen Berglund, a UMass teaching assistant and graduate student of math, said, "Seventy percent of students at this University take math classes taught by graduate students. It is becoming more and more difficult to get graduate students to come here. Eventually there will be less qualified individuals teaching these classes."

Berglund said he continued to teach his classes because he is required to do so by contract. "I am out here picketing when I'm not holding class. During my classes, I have discussed the situation with the students because this is directly affecting them. It is unfortunate that nationally known and respected professors may start leaving this University."

Wearing an "IMPEACH WELD" sign, computer electronic technician for the COINS Department, Glen Loud, expressed his frustration with the furlough plan. "Governor Weld has gone back on a lot of his promises. This whole situation is ridiculous. I chose not to work today because there was no guarantee that I would receive pay when I retire, or get the vacation days."

Kevin Gallagher, a computer programmer for the Science Department, said, "This is really depressing. The University has taken a hit for the past three years and I haven't seen a raise. Every state employee is being demoralized."

Professor of Resource Economics Carolyn Harper said, "There is great support on campus, but I think many faculty may feel demoralized because this has been going on for so long. Education has always been cut more deeply than other parts of the budget.

"When I was growing up, I was proud of the fact that anyone in the United States could get an education. That is now changing, and it's unfortunate because we need to keep the doors open," Harper said.

Dave Berton, a freshman physics major, said he was disappointed with the undergraduate turnout. "There are students protesting, but they are the same few who are always at the major progressive protests. We did a lot of advertising for this, but that general feeling of apathy remains among the students."

Berton said, "The continuing idiotic onslaught coming from Boston is depressing. There is only so much letter-writing campaigns and lobbying you can do. People have to get out in the streets."

perience in administration," Duffey said.

Asked about the effect the past two days of protesting has had, Duffey said, "It's created a beginning of awareness in communities; a spreading sense of alarm that what is happening to education is serious."

Palestinian supporters picket Israeli celebration

By MARC ELLIOTT
Collegian Staff

A handful of protesters calling attention to the Palestinian presence in Israel yesterday picketed outside the Student Union Ballroom at the University of Massachusetts where some 300 people celebrated 43 years of Israeli independence.

Four or five members of the Palestinian Solidarity Committee stood outside the S.U.B. displaying a Palestinian flag and handing out leaflets to "complete the picture" of Israel.

"All we see as Palestinians is the Israel with the concentration camps, the Israel with the gun," said PSC member Eyad Kishawi. "When they want to celebrate Israel's independence, they have the liability to portray the truth for people. And if they don't want to do that, then we're here to complete the picture."

Citing examples of Arab food and wares for sale in the S.U.B., organizers said the celebration was not a political event and maintained they had made a "complete attempt" to show a balanced view of all of Israel's cultures.

"We decided to have this celebration at UMass because we want people to come in here and see what Israel is all about," event organizer Adina Zarchan said. "Israel is made up of many cultures, all different sects, Christians, Muslims and Jews, and we have represented everything here."

Ariella and Noam Pearlmutter, children of UMass Hillel Rabbi Saul Pearlmutter, prepare to blow out candles yesterday at the 43rd annual celebration in the SUB of Israeli independence.

Kishawi belittled organizers' attempts to show the Palestinian side of Israel.

"Having pictures of Arab mosques by no means portrays the conditions and brutality of an occupation that the Palestinians are undergoing," he said.

Israel declared independence from Great Britian in 1948 and immediately afterward fought a war of independence with neighboring Arab states which opposed the creation of a Jewish state.

Yesterday's festivities included Israeli music, art, dancing, dress, crafts and poetry. A large birthday cake was served to participants around noon and a group of Israeli singers performed in the afternoon.

The controversial photo series "Glimpses of Israel" by UMass senior Alisa Berkowitz was on display for the celebration.

The series, which shows points of interest in Israel, stirred up some opposition three weeks ago when it was put on display in The New Africa House.

Critics accused the series of ignoring Palestinians in Israel, while supporters pointed out the series included a picture of an Islamic Mosque and said the series was not meant to be a political statement.

A barbecue, open to all, was held on the Hillel House lawn later last night.

Israeli Independence Day comes immediately after the Israeli Memorial Day, Yom Hazikaron. Observed two days ago, the day commemorates those who died for Israeli independence.

Students walk with professors in picket lines

By PRESTON P. FORMAN
Collegian Staff

As thousands of University of Massachusetts students took advantage of the professors' work action to catch up on school work and tans, Jessyka Melendez reluctantly boycotted her classes on Wednesday so she could join professors on the picket lines.

"We are really obliged to attend the rallies and protest with the professors," she said. "If it is affecting the professor, then it is affecting the student."

A junior education major who moved to Massachusetts from her native Puerto Rico so she could attend college, Melendez said she had to take out loans this semester to bridge the financial aid gap. Rising tuition and fees will likely force her out of UMass next fall, she said.

"I just refused to go to my classes today. It was much more important to picket and go to the rally," she said.

John Greene, a junior COINS major, juggling flaming torches at yesterday's rally, said most of his classes were cancelled although, he believes, with little effect on the legislators in Boston.

"Even if all my classes were held I would not have gone," he said. "I don't think [this action] is going to be effective but it's worth a try. Yet I just don't think the people in power give a damn."

Pessimism marked the thoughts of many students during the two-day job action.

"When students struck from this place in the fall of 1989, professors were few and far between on the picket lines," said an unidentified student. "Now when their pay checks are getting cut they want us to jump to help them. Well, where were they a year and a half ago when we were fighting?"

Sophomore philosophy major Matthew Griffing said he lent his support on the "No Business As Usual" picket lines because of the "destruction" the University faces. His Thursday classes were cancelled.

"Access to public education is a need for people of all walks of life. I'm obviously concerned about myself, but I'm also worried about this University as first-rate professors leave and enrollment declines," he said.

Griffing, who is an out-of-state student, said the loss in school time is small compared to financial losses the University has taken the past three years. He said complaining about the lost education is "short-sighted.

"The legislators have put professors in this bind," he said. "Professors care. That's why they are fighting the budget cuts that are striking at the heart of UMass.

"What will a degree from here be worth in 10 years?" he asked.

Winnie Mandela enters her third day of testimony

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Prosecutors tried to punch holes in Winnie Mandela's alibi at her kidnap and assault trial yesterday, suggesting her version of events did not make sense.

Chief state prosecutor Jan Swanepoel hammered away at Mandela's claim she was out of town in December 1988 when four black youths were allegedly abducted and beaten in her Soweto home.

During a second day of cross-examination, Swanepoel asked why Mandela did so little to protect youths she believed were being homosexually abused by a White minister at a Methodist Church home. He asked repeatedly why she did not take action to confront the minister or remove other youths from his care.

Mandela, 56, replied that some of the matters were "not my area" and said her main concern was to help a youth who she believed was raped by the Rev. Paul Verryn, although a doctor said there was no evidence to support the claim. She said she intended to confront Verryn when he returned from vacation.

"I want to put it to you that you are being evasive," Swanepoel said.

Mandela denied she was evading answering questions.

Mandela's husband, African National Congress leader Nelson Mandela, was in prison for anti-government activity at the time the crimes allegedly occurred. He did not accompany his wife to court yesterday for her third day of testimony.

The trial could have wide-ranging political ramifications, coming at a time when the government is trying to woo Black leaders into formal negotiations on a new constitution eliminating White-minority rule.

Mandela has many admirers among the more militant ANC members, and her husband might find it difficult to continue talks with the government if his wife is convicted.

1,000s of Kurdish refugees await aid in Turkey

ISIKVEREN, Turkey (AP) — A U.S. Special Forces team scouted Iraqi territory yesterday to search for sites for refugee camps, and a new Army commander arrived in Turkey to lead the international relief effort for Kurdish refugees.

Hundreds of thousands of Iraqi Kurds fled into the mountains of Northern Iraq after a rebellion in their ancestral homeland was crushed by Saddam Hussein's forces.

Up to 1,000 refugees are dying daily of hunger, disease and exposure in crude encampments in the rugged terrain along Iraq's borders with Turkey and Iran. Authorities yesterday expressed fears that epidemics could sweep the camps.

Officials expect that finding sites and building the new refugee centers will take up to 40 more days, and some say even those estimates are too optimistic.

Mahmoud Yildirim, the Turkish commander of the huge ramshackle settlement at Isikveren, estimated that many more people would likely die in that period.

"We are looking at many infections right now," said Yildirim. Yildirim estimated that up to 20 people are dying each day at the Isikveren camp alone, one of several dozen settlements of refugees. And every day, he said, an average of 10 babies are born in tents on the mountainside, with little or no medical care available.

The new refugee centers, surrounded by smaller camps, are to house at least 400,000 Kurdish refugees near the Iraqi town of Zakho, the Turkish border, and Dohuk, about 30 miles into Iraq. Iraqi troops occupy both cities.

The Pentagon said an Army and Marine Corps reaction force will set up a base at an undisclosed location inside Turkey and stand by in case Iraqi troops try to interfere with the relief effort. Defense sources said the force would number at least 5,000.

Meanwhile, Iraq's official news agency reported yesterday the Baghdad Government has signed an agreement with the United Nations to coordinate overseas aid to hundreds of thousands of refugees.

Crisis in democracy: If you can't afford any — Tough

We have a crisis in democracy in this country. In fact, so much so that we don't have democracy. What we have is reminiscent of the Republic of Rome in which the privileged class, the rich — the Patricians — who comprised the senate bribed their way into political hegemony. They manipulated the whole political scene. They used their resources to put a slant on the situation, cheating the Plebes out of the power-sharing guaranteed to them by law.

They were good at what they did — for a while. They arranged elections so that it would be almost totally impossible for the average citizen-farmer to participate. They arranged for the setting up of districts in such a convoluted fashion as to render the majority people, the Plebians, with far less than their share of power, to say the least. And they threw their gold around to shamelessly bribe everyone in sight. That system finally exploded under the weight of Patrician utter stinginess and idiotic shortsightedness. What followed was military dictatorship, beginning with Julius Caesar.

With the close parallels to our own American political system, we must learn from history and divert our course away from destruction. First, we need to examine the word 'democracy.' It means 'rule of the people' in Greek. It does not mean 'rule by the people who can swindle and steal the pie from everyone else.' It means 'rule by the people' — all people in other words, the majority. This seems sort of obvious to us. We understand freedom. Democracy is our middle name — or is it? Yet who's looking around and noticing the irony in this? Not too many.

Jonathan Hymer

Everyone who is not convinced that our system is built upon total equality has a different version and list of what exactly is wrong. To get at the bottom of the problem, we must look at our primary political power: Our vote. What is it worth? A lot of folks don't feel it has much voice. About half of American citizens feel so alienated from the system they cast their ballot for the None-Of-The-Above candidates — they don't vote.

Next question: who runs for office and who gets elected? There isn't much color there (literally and figuratively). It's a pretty homogeneous group. Very rarely do we have a candidate who boldly challenges the system and moves for egalitarian change. The system doesn't allow it. The present system is set up to hinder democracy. This is because a candidate doesn't have a chance generally to be successful unless s/he is backed by the patricians of this day and age.

Money is what wins elections, not popular issues. We all know this and we're all frustrated with this; that is those of us who aren't among the super rich. Election campaigns are based on high finance, not real national concerns. They are based on manipulation, not substance. We are being duped just like the Roman people were.

When candidates need sickening amounts of money to have any chance of winning they become dependent on massive campaign contributions from those who buy their way into the political pie, not in the least content to take only their fair share. This lobbying is nothing short of bribery, and it's legal. Is anyone naive enough to think that these 'private interests' continue to dole out massive sums of money time after time out of some sort of altruism? They need payback and obviously they get it, otherwise they would simply invest their green influence elsewhere and big business would not receive so much favor in political decision making. How does a politician pay back his investors? With political favors, of course. But we all know this, right?

When political decisions are made through the means of bribery, when a tiny elite dominates the political lives of people, the people's concerns are simply not addressed. We must concede that presently we don't have democracy. Until we do, we can be sure that our desires for egalitarianism will remain unsatisfied.

It will be of interest to the reader to know that there is some action being taken to bring this unnecessary problem out into the open and combat it. The Pioneer Valley Pro-Democracy Campaign has been doing just this. The Campaign is in the process now of promoting the 'Fair Elections Pledge' to be signed by the candidates scrambling for the Congressional seat of the late Silvio Conte. The pledge entails limiting the amount of individual campaign contributors, total campaign expenditures, non-local contributions, among other things, and most importantly the pledge requires the candidate, if elected, to work for overall campaign reform, including public financing for campaigns.

In the struggle against racism: Which side are you on?

White people on this campus need to wake up. We must understand that being White means, for now, that we are privileged. What we choose to do with that power is of the utmost importance. If we want to even imagine the possibility of racial equality, we must begin to read about racism, talk about racism, and take action against it.

Karlina Kunz

If you are White, you are also racist. Whites have too much power in America's racially oppressive system to deny their racism. Everyday we must recognize racism and attempt to fight, in any way we can, the system that is allowing the perpetuation of racism.

The lives of African-Americans and all peoples of color are marginalized in this country. By not speaking and acting up against the many systems of exploitation that perpetuate the subordination of peoples of color, Whites are agreeing. Silence is the voice of complicity.

Everyday, so many Whites, through actions, words, and beliefs, help to maintain America's racially oppressive system. Fighting racism may seem like an overwhelmingly impossible task in light of the many obstacles. But, there is so much that White people can do to get the message across that we will not tolerate racist ideology, practice, etc.

We can act as anti-racist role models for other Whites and mercilessly question the White power-structure and policy within schools and workplaces. If we have any sort of influence on people with decision-making power, we can raise issues with them. We can call radio stations, write to newspapers, magazines, and television networks and tell them that we absolutely will not economically or psychologically support their perpetuation of racism.

These are, of course, just some of the many actions we can and must take. (These actions can be taken only after a lot of internal work has already been done on your own system of beliefs about racism).

If you are White, you are racist. If this statement makes you angry, don't channel your anger into denying that it is true.

Instead, work at putting your energies into productive channels.

Think critically about, and work toward, changing this society which failed to offer Whites an alternative to becoming racist. I am personally outraged that I was never encouraged or taught to even acknowledge, much less appreciate, the cultures of others.

We must stop hiding behind our excuses for inaction. Let us cast away our false sense of superiority and work toward creating ideas and practices that not only acknowledge, but celebrate cultural distinction.

All Puerto Ricans want to do is party

At a time when we are trying to break away from the stereotypes that Puerto Ricans are crooks, lazy, welfare-dependent party people, the two main representative organizations within our campus, the Bilingual Colonial (Collegiate) Program and RIGHT-NOW, are promoting these stereotypes. Besides throwing a few expensive parties (some free), promoting illiteracy by creating grade-boosting independent studies, and expressing no support nor solidarity for the victims of oppression, the Bilingual Colonial Program, is a typical oppressive tool of colonial manipulation. I must give the organization a bit of credit for filling admission quotas, finding financial aid, and promoting good tutoring. Yet, their nihilistic attitude towards the community is pitiful, only to be compared to the social and confused organization, RIGHT-NOW.

RIGHT-NOW, on the other hand, besides promoting good concerts, like Ruben Blades, and throwing decent parties, is a joke. When some of its members are not stealing money from the University, by taking expensive weekend trips, or making personal phone calls with the RSO's business code, RIGHT-NOW is promoting the stereotype that Hispanics are more concerned with parties than intellectual events.

It is a shame that the Latin American Studies Program, which is run by many non-Hispanic professors, is doing more for the Hispanic community. I can't recall when this organization has ever worked in conjunction with the BCP, or RIGHT-NOW.

I will concede to the claims of the organizations not to get involved in a political sphere, yet, there is a real world and the Hispanics are victims of a reality. It is time that BCP and RIGHT-NOW get a backbone and begin showing some solidarity for our people. Ruben Blades said that "It can be done," and that a bullet can kill a person, but not an idea, such as liberty or truth. Stop promoting dependency. Stop sitting in your chairs drawing your paychecks and start earning your money. Start doing something other than promoting our people's ignorance. We are victims of oppression as it is; we do not need our own people to oppress us nor maintain our development both within this society and in the world, at a slave's level.

We are an intelligent and unique people. Let us recognize our people with pride and honor. Let us not stand below anyone, let us stand at an equal level.

Notes from the Campus Center basement

"Who is Billy Bragg?"
— John Olver

It's been a hell of a week. At UMass and around the state, faculty, other state employees and students came together to shake their collective fist at Beacon Hill. Bill Weld — "Whaddya mean they won't work without pay" — true to party principle, is bent on destroying Massachusetts in order to save it. This week, thousands of us showed him that he's got a fight on his hands.

We are the biggest special interest group in the world. We want special things: Affordable quality education, human rights for working people, and even a fair tax system.

John Olver was there because he understands the connection between workers' rights, educational opportunity and taxation as though people mattered. Olver founded the Tax Equity Alliance of Massachusetts (TEAM) when few others had the guts to talk about tax reform. If you're not talking tax reform, you can't have much to say about anything else. It's too bad John was overshadowed by lefty British urban folk star Billy Bragg.

President-Chancellor Duffey spent some time not answering questions. He's real serious about fighting for well-funded public education. He can be, he's headed to American University — A private school. 'Nuff said.

Ya can't scare me, I'm sticking with the union. This week thousands of students realized the importance of unions. Bill Weld has got problems with unions. Hell, he's got problems with anyone who brings home less than $100,000 a year. Weld's problems with unions are ideological. In other words, working people should shut up and thank God they don't live in Russia. This week, we learned that unions aren't only a good idea — They're a good reality. Unions are the only way to fight against things like furlough/slavery programs and for things like public education.

Jeremy P. Levinson

Kudos to the UMass unions. Unity is the word of the day. The campus unions have taken the lead in fighting against the nightmare Weld has become. When campus unions say: "UMass works because we do," they're right. Maybe down the road a more appropriate slogan will be, "UMass exists because we do."

Students could take a lesson from their professors and other unionized employees. Organization is the key. Bill Weld heard every word of what was said, screamed, and chanted this week because we all spoke, screamed, and chanted together. Indeed, maybe undergrads could put this lesson to work in rebuilding student government.

The week's low point. Dave Keenan local slumlord, Citizens for Limited Taxation activist and arch-Republican parasite spoke to the No Business as Usual closing rally. Someone shut him up real quick by reminding him of his political history. Backing UMass so you can squeeze our students for rent money isn't exactly what we had in mind, Dave . . . We'll call ya . . .

The week's high point. Two winners: All of us. Students faculty, staff. We disrupted our routines to work together for a common need. It's a nice respite in a world where folks are taught to look out only for No. 1. And, we can use the practice.

Sam Bowles reminded us on the Amherst Common that education must be more than "Good for Business." He voiced a vision that education can be oriented toward tapping the magic within rather than making them merely useful economic components.

I'll buy that for a dollar.

ARTS & LIVING

Gonzalez' Earthdance is an exciting treat

By BILL ROSENBLATT
Collegian Staff

Jerry Gonzalez is a bad cat. That (in so many words) is how various musicians in the New York jazz and Latin music scenes have put it. With his new fifth album, Earthdance (Sunnyside), this trumpeter/percussionist continues to push the allied causes of jazz and progressive Latin music forward.

Valley Jazz

Gonzalez' music represents the most ambitious development in the "Latin-jazz" tradition that began as an offshoot of the be-bop movement in the 40s, when Dizzy Gillespie collaborated with Cuban musicians Mario Bauza and Chano Pozo. The Latin tradition in jazz has survived, if in a rather submerged way: Salsa masters like Tito Puente and Ray Baretto have done Latin adaptations of jazz standards, and adventurous jazz musicians of the 60s and 70s often added Latin percussion and motifs for color and variety.

But it has taken a generation since the Gillespie/Bauza/Pozo collaborations to produce musicians who are equally comfortable in Latin- and African-American idioms; these players — mostly nuyoriquenos or Puerto Rican New Yorkers — have been reawakening the Latin-jazz connection recently in bands like Conjunto Libre, Grupo Folklorico y Experimental and Gonzalez' Fort Apache Band (named after the NYPD's cynical nickname for the South Bronx precinct). Gonzalez has absorbed the wide variety of influences in the multicultural Bronx and has unified them in his own very profound way. When he plays "jazz," he does not simply graft a standard tune onto Latin rhythms; he explores the deep common roots of all Afro-Western musics. When he plays "Latin," he does not just play Salsa or Rhumba; he delves into various indigenous Afro-Latin-Caribbean forms, the most exciting of which are the percussion-heavy Santeria ritual pieces. (The Santeria religion, like Haitian Vodun and Brazilian Xango, is an offshoot of West African Yoruba traditions.) This stuff will blow your mind!

Gonzalez' earlier work contains stunning examples of Santeria-derived testifyin', mostly courtesy of the brilliant percussionist Milton Cardona. Those early albums (The River is Deep and Ya Yo Me Cure) featured a medium-sized ensemble with as many as four percussionists. More recently, he has scaled down to a quintet, with more traditional jazz instrumentation plus his own congas.

The new album, Earthdance, moves more frankly into jazz territory, but with the Latin rhythmic underpinnings still very much there, and so smoothly integrated into the overall sound that you don't think of it as any kind of "fusion." It's as if two estranged brother traditions staged a family reunion.

While Gonzalez' last album, Rhumba Para Monk, concentrated on Thelonious, mid-60s Miles Davis implications pervade Earthdance. There are two tunes associated with that Miles period, Wayne Shorter's "Fe Fi Fo Fum" and Ron Carter's "Eighty-One." A live version of the latter appeared on the live Obatala album a couple of years ago.

The originals, including pianist Larry Willis' beautiful "Nightfall" and Gonzalez' own mournful "Los Roncos" (based on a traditional Cuban chant), also suggest pre-fusion Miles. Gonzalez also throws in a Monk tune for good measure — "Let's Call This," which, those who saw him at last summer's Bright Moments concert will remember.

The tunes are great to begin with, but the soloing makes this album outstanding. Gonzalez' trumpet playing is really maturing. The Miles analogy also applies to his heavy use of Harmon mute: yeah, he sounds like Miles — has the poignant ballad style and that spacy "misterioso" thing down. But on flugelhorn, he has a big, gutsy tone, the likes of which I've never heard. He is well on his way to becoming one of the finest trumpeters around in any genre, without jumping on the Clifford Brown hobby-horse as many "young lions" have done.

The other soloists are also strong if (again) somewhat derivative at times. But they sure pick their sources well: Carter Jefferson's tenor owes something to Coltrane, while Joe Ford's soprano evokes Wayne Shorter (Ford also contributes alto and flute). Gonzalez' brother Andy plays "Latin bass," a solid-body upright with a tight, percussive sound. Steve Berrios' excellent drumming, a sensitive counterpoint to Gonzalez' congas, completes the quintet.

Earthdance is yet another in Jerry Gonzalez' series of exciting masterpieces. He is starting to appear as a sideman on other musicians' albums — i.e., the word is getting out. Jerry Gonzalez is a bad cat. He has the potential to be one of the major improvisational music innovators of the decade.

Ruben Blades proves he is a man of integrity

By JOHANN-HANZ VON KESSEL
Collegian Correspondent

Shall we call asking questions and expecting intelligent responses an "interview," especially when it developed so smoothly into an animated conversation. But to fit into a journalistic category, I'll have to condescend to such description. Ruben Blades actually began our dialogue informally, by encouraging the reception committee to keep studying and working hard in improving their academic performance as well as their multi-cultural, social involvement and awareness.

Von Kessel: "Ruben, what is your aspiration in the near future in terms of the communal-political spheres?"

Blades: "I wouldn't like to tie myself to any political platform in the States, and even less to any mundane parties — politics. But don't get me wrong, I always contribute and participate in the politics of issues, especially with the battered minorities being the affected. You can take the following as a statement: I'll very soon immerse in the political process of socio-economical amendments of my beloved Panama."

Von Kessel: "When is this going to take place? You mean your going to run for president?"

Blades: "Trust me, all the truly democratic events to really transform my motherland will occur within the next three years. And the topic of the presidency will fit into place when I'll get called for the task."

Von Kessel: "But, wouldn't it take bloodshed to withdraw totally from power the Noriega's cloud of followers?"

Blades: "As I said, trust me, I'll be there and you'll read about it."

Von Kessel: "Do you want to be recognized as a lyricist of the Anglo-American vanguard or the Hispano-American instead?"

Blades: "What do you mean, that Silvio Rodriguez and Pablo Milanes can fully express all they feel about what's going on in the world with no interference from the ruling government and its ideologies? Do you really believe they are allowed to condemn even boiling situations they confront in their own nation? It doesn't translate, either, that I'm more comfortable here in the United States or that it's better, because once artists allow the unanimous consensus of society to manufacture their criterion they become slaves of another kind, but at least I've been given the chance to be myself, to censure and to decline any influence."

Von Kessel: "At the beginning you began writing songs for other bands and singers, was that because you were not famous yet or a consequence of not being given the opportunity?"

Blades: "People were not ready to assimilate critical social commentary postures at the early stage of the development of the "salsa" identity. So my songs were perceived with skepticism, and the industry thought that I was going to use the recordings as podiums to preach at people's consciousness."

Von Kessel: "How was the process of admission to Harvard University, were you preoccupied about the aura and prestige the Institution has?"

Blades: "First of all, the process was not something to be afraid of, because I was invited by the Law School Council Association to address the labrynthical situations of Latin America up to that year, 1984, and its repercussions on the art's sector. Then I applied and was accepted. I had already earned my bachelors in Panama after five years, so it was not my first encounter with admission processes."

Von Kessel: "I have seen, in public libraries along the northeast coast, a variety of posters of you encouraging youngsters of all ethnic backgrounds to allow their imagination to navigate through the countless adventures books offer, when did your reading habits emerge, and what was the motivation?"

Blades: "I was chosen along with a group of other talented noted personalities to promote the need to read, because of the declining numbers among college graduates in general knowledge statistics. I began reading in a comprehensive matter at the age of four, and never since then lost my disposition for reading. When I read I don't circumscribe solely to classics, but mostly I prefer to read obscure French writers."

Von Kessel: "When did you learn English? Was it out of necessity or personal interest?"

Blades: "I learned English because it's a cultural manifestation I couldn't deny myself to appropriate, as I grew to dislike the attitude in those who refuse to learn anything new, foreign, and unknown. As I see in people here in this country, who reject to approach everything unfamiliar."

Von Kessel: "You used to condemn the United States for their interference in underdeveloped countries, now you're quiet, what happened?"

Blades: "Are you bugging me? Have you heard the record totally in English, Nothing But the Truth? I prosecute the U.S. in songs like "In Salvador."

As you have read, his integrity hasn't subsided. . .

Tate takes Williams' seat in a gathering of friends

By JAMES MOLESWORTH
Collegian Staff

George Shearing and Joe Pass
Fine Arts Center
Tuesday, April 16

There is an old story about George Shearing that my dad once told me, and that I never really understood until this past Tuesday night. It goes like this — two guys are sitting outside of a club. An elegant grey-haired man walks by them. One says to the other:

"Hey man, I think I just saw God!"

"No man," the other replies. "That was George Shearing."

Tuesday night at the Fine Arts Center, George Shearing played along with preeminent guitarist, Joe Pass in an evening that was billed as "A Gathering of Friends." It was exactly that. Pass and Shearing have worked together many times, being best known for their quintet work in the late sixties and early seventies. The blues singer Joe Williams was also billed to attend, but could not as he was taken to Cooley Dickinson, stricken with pneumonia. In his stead, Grady Tate was called in at the last minute, and he did a most admirable job.

Joe Pass started the evening with a long solo set of standards, playing everything from Ellington to Billy Joel. While he had to battle the inadequate sound system of the FAC, he was still able to put the audience in a trance-like state with his lilting play. Shearing then played with his regular bassist, Neil Swainson, and Grady Tate. They continued the theme of playing standards (probably due to Tate's last minute call up), but a high level of Shearing's professionalism put a new twist on everything they played.

Perhaps the best part of the evening came in the second set, as Shearing joked about Johann Sebastian Bach, he played a fugue, putting a jazz twist on it that cemented the fact that jazz is the most ingenious music in the world.

Capping off the evening was the big finale with Shearing, Pass, Tate, Swainson, and Joe Williams' regular drummer Clayton Cameron playing together (the evening so far had been various groupings of the artists, never all together). Tate sang a robust melody of well known blues standards while the rest of the group played Miles Davis' "All Blues" behind him.

It was truly a gathering of friends, as they joked and laughed their way through beautiful music. I understand that old story now; Shearing could easily be mistaken for God with the way he plays, and he has the greatest group of hands as well.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March21-April19) You develop new rapport with an influential group. Your popularity enables you to move mountains of paperwork! The night ahead should be special. Put your best foot forward.

TAURUS (April20-May20) Settle down at work today. Smile even if certain limitations are placed on you! Focus on projects you can handle alone. Residential matters enjoy highly favorable influences.

GEMINI (May21-June20) Use alert to sudden changes. Anything you say today will reflect heavily on you. Crossing swords with higher-ups will only make things more difficult. Keep confidential matters under wraps.

CANCER (June21-July22) Stay out of the limelight if you can. You need to keep an eye on someone who flatters you. Set aside anything that interferes with your getting your regular work done on time.

LEO (July23-Aug.22) A friendship makes special demands on you now. Good will flourishes between family members. Although certain tasks are tough, you do an excellent job. A business hunch is right on target.

VIRGO (Aug.23-Sept.22) You may get a glimpse of the future today. Make plans for an auspicious new beginning. Your dynamic personality wins you many admirers. Romance should sizzle tonight.

LIBRA (Sept.23-Oct.22) Do not be afraid to venture off the beaten track. Once you learn to delegate routine responsibilities, you will have more time for a pet project. Try to spend more time outdoors.

SCORPIO (Oct.23-Nov.21) You have a special knack for building other people's confidence. Regular exercise keeps you feeling fit. Do not be too quick to agree with everything a loved one says. Be careful with your money.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov.22-Dec.21) A valuable new alliance could lead to a promotion or an important conference. Make your own decisions after carefully weighing what other people have to say. Ration your energies.

CAPRICORN (Dec.22-Jan.19) Search for solitude early today. A low-key approach will work best at both home and place of employment. Domesticity beckons. You and your loved ones draw closer together.

AQUARIUS (Jan.20-Feb.18) Joint finances enjoy favorable influences. Make an important career decision only after talking with family. Extra demands at work are possible. Any problem with loved ones can be resolved.

PISCES (Feb.19-March20) Apply the lessons you have learned in the past. Resist the temptation to flirt. Arousing someone's jealousy will not help restore domestic bliss. Postpone any big financial moves until next week.

Clemens said.

"You go against Clemens and you expect to have a great ball game, and that's exactly what happened," Saberhagen said. "You can't make mistakes in a ballpark like this, with that kind of lineup."

Wade Boggs singled with two outs in the third for the game's first hit. Jody Reed then broke a 0-17 slump by poking a 3-2 pitch into shallow left and Boggs scored all the way first as the ball skipped past Eisenreich for an error.

Jack Clark singled to lead of the forth and two outs later advanced to third on two wild pitches by Saberhagen, but Carlos Quintana lined out to end the inning.

Tom Brunansky doubled in the seventh and took third on Quintana's sacrifice. Tony Pena then lined out and Saberhagen struck out Tim Naehring for the third time.

Kansas City advanced a runner as far as third only once. Eisenreich singled to lead off the the sixth, Kevin Seitzer struck out for the third time and Eisenreich stole second. He took third on an infield out, but Danny Tartabull fouled out to end the threat.

Tony Fossas got one out in the ninth and Jeff Reardon finished the three hitter for his second save.

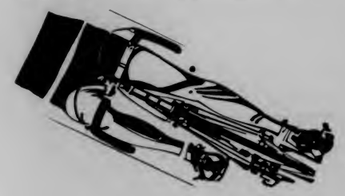
Boneventure earlier this week.

"Things have not gone our way this season," Penn State coach Sue Rankin said. "We lost a few down the line but we have played well. We have not been getting the runs when we need them, but we are a good team. I am confident in that."

Penn State has lost 11 of their 23 games by two runs or less and have lost three extra inning contests.

"I am expecting a good game against UMass," Rankin said. "We will play well, with tough defense and good pitching. I am expecting a one run game that will go down to the wire."



Clemens, Sox roll

By DAVE O'HARA
The Associated Press

A pair of two-time American League Cy Young Award winners hooked up yesterday and an unearned run was the only difference.

Roger Clemens increased his shutout streak to 23 innings as the Boston Red Sox beat the Kansas City Royals and Bret Saberhagen 1-0.

Clemens (3-0), who shut out Cleveland in his last start, allowed three hits in eight innings. He walked one and struck out 10, reaching double figures for his second straight game and the 43rd time in his career.

"It was the type of game where you hope for a break, and we got it," Clemens said after improving his lifetime record over Kansas City to 11-2. "They hit some balls hard, but our guys came up with them. I had good stuff, but my forkball kept doing different things and it was hard to keep it in the strike zone."

Clemens, pitching while his five-game suspension is being appealed, was scheduled for a hearing before commissioner Fay Vincent in New York on Friday. Clemens was given the penalty for his conduct in Game 4 of last year's AL playoffs.

Saberhagen (1-2) gave up four hits, struck out five and walked one in seven innings, but was the victim of an error by left fielder Jim Eisenreich as the Red Sox completed a three game sweep, their first against Kansas City since 1988.

"He pitched just as well, but didn't have any luck,"

Baseball crushes Springfield, looks to Rutgers Saturday

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

How well is the University of Massachusetts baseball team hitting? Don't ask the Springfield Chiefs.

The Minutemen lit up four SC pitchers for 13 runs on 13 hits in two innings en route to an easy 14-5 win yesterday at Berry – Allen Field in Springfield. The win improved UMass' record to 15-18-1 on the season, as well as providing for ample substitution for the Minutemen late in the game.

A pair of catchers led the two-inning hit parade for UMass, as Derek Dana and Andy Pellis both drove in four runs. Pellis, a freshman, went 2-for-4 on the afternoon from his designated hitter slot, hitting a double in the seven-run first inning and a single in the six-run second.

Dana also went 2-for-4, smacking a two-run homer in the second and a single in the first. Springfield's pitchers found themselves overwhelmed by the Minutemen's bats. Starter Tim Davignon went⅓ inning, giving up five earned runs and two walks. His replacement, Jim Woods, finished the first, allowing four more runs on four more hits. The second inning saw more of the same, as Scott Carew allowed still four more runs on still four more hits without getting a single out. Kurt Kublbeck finally put out the fire, holding UMass scoreless over four innings.

On the other side of the mound, Daryle Corriveau cruised through five innings of one-hit ball to pick up the win. Corriveau improves to 2-3 on the season. Freshmen Greg Dowd, John Sammarco and Peter Ferrari finished up the game on the mound for UMass.

The Chiefs scored all of their runs in the eighth inning Verene Paradie double and a Steve Lunardini single. With yesterday's big win out of the way, the Minutemen turn their attention to this weekend's Rutgers series. The importance of Saturday's and Sunday's doubleheaders (Earl Lorden Field, 12 noon) cannot be downplayed.

The two teams are tied for second place in the Atlantic 10 Eastern Division at 5-3 behind 8-4 Temple, so a series split does UMass little good. Taking three of four, or better still all four games is a priority for UMass if they mean to make the A-10 Tournament.

The Scarlet Knights are a solid hitting team – four Rutgers hitters are among the A-10's top 20 in batting average. Tim Roth is sixth in hitting with a .384 BA, while teammate Angel Echevarria checks in at 10th in hitting at .358 with six home runs.

On the mound, Rutgers is seventh in the A-10 team statistics with a staff ERA of 6.25. Jim Kohl is sixth in the league in ERA with a 3.73 mark and three saves.

Pitcher Rich Graham is a probable starter when UMass meets up with Rutgers in a key A-10 matchup on Saturday. In yesterday's action, the UMass baseball team scalped the Springfield Chiefs 13-5.

UM Gorillas gear up for Delaware, playoff run

By CHRIS MIRACLE
Collegian Staff

With five games remaining this season, the University of Massachusetts lacrosse team is gearing up for a run that will vault them into postseason play.

Currently No. 13 in the nation, the Gorillas (5-2), will be looking for win number six as they take on Delaware at 1 p.m. tomorrow on The Hill.

"Delaware has a good coach who knows what he's doing," UMass coach Ted Garber said. "This is like a playoff game for us and a win could move us up into the top 10."

Delaware sports a 4-5 record with their last game resulting in a loss to C.W. Post. With a 3-4 record, the Fightin' Blue Hens were tied at No. 20 with Vermont and Hofstra, but have since dropped out of the rankings.

The Gorillas and Blue Hens have not met since 1987 and the Gorillas are undefeated in four meetings with the Blue Hens. Their closest game came in 1985, when UMass prevailed 14-13 in overtime. No current member of the UMass team has ever played against Delaware.

Attackman Kevin Ellers leads the Blue Hens in point totals this season with 14 goals and 13 saves. Tom Stanziale, second in points (15 goals, 8 assists), comes into tomorrow's game riding a 19-consecutive game-scoring streak. Jeff Steigerweld and Jon Wunder are tied for third in Blue Hen points, with 13 goals and 2 assists each.

Sophomore attackman Mark Millon leads the Gorillas in points with 22 goals. In just five games, Millon has passed his scoring totals from last year (14 goals, 5 assists). This year, he has had five multiple-scoring games, two games with four goals and two with five goals.

The Gorilla offense had 23 shots on goal in the first half against Dartmouth on Wednesday, but could only convert five into goals. According to Garber, motivation and concentration on the fundamentals will be a factor in getting to the playoffs.

"Our shooting was off against Dartmouth. Our shooting has to get better," Garber said. "We gave Dartmouth some of their goals."

Senior goalie Ted Kellerman played a key role in the 13-7 victory over the Big Green making 19 saves. Starting all seven games this season, Kellerman has earned a .620 save percentage against the opposition.

"Kellerman and our defense kept us in it against Dartmouth. Kellerman played like a first team All-American," Garber said. "I'm really proud of his efforts. It gave the team a lot of confidence."

"We need to play good, solid defense," he said of Saturday's game. "We also don't need any added pressure on our defense."

Junior defensemen Mario Lopez and Rick Mullins are two reasons why the Gorilla defense has only allowed a minute total of 5.3 goals in their last three games. Both have yet to allow the man they are covering to score.

Gorilla Tracks: Against Yale, senior tri-captain Jim McAleavey scored his 89th career goal to move him into ninth place, surpassing assistant coach Tom Carmean who graduated from UMass in 1987.

Home stand for UM

By DAN WETZEL
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts softball team is looking for home cooking to keep them cooking as they look to extend their winning ways during an upcoming eight game home stand.

UMass (20-9, 8-0 in Atlantic 10) has won six in a row and 17 of their last 19. In those last six games the Minutewomen have outscored their opponents by a combined score of 60-8.

Standing in their way this weekend are A-10 doubleheaders against St. Bonaventure and Penn State. Both teams are struggleing this season.

On Saturday at noon St. Boneventure comes to town. The Bonnies have yet to get on track this season as they are only 2-13 overall and 0-8 in the A-10. They do, however, have a solid pitching staff led by Liz Helbig (2.39 ERA) and Mary Mansfield (2.86); opponents are only batting .139 against the tandem.

SBU's problems are not on the mound but in the batters box, where the team is hitting an anemic .139 and are averaging only 1.8 runs a game. The Bonnies top slugger is Judy Joy, who is batting .189 with four RBI.

This team looks to be easy fodder for the UMass pitching duo of Darlene Claffey (10-4) and Holly Aprile (10-5). Both pitchers are cruising with Claffey only giving up seven runs in her last ten starts, she has nine shutouts and four no-hitters on the season. Aprile has been equally impressive lately, allowing only nine runs in her last nine games.

UMass' bats have also been impressive as the team is hitting .324 on the season. The Minutewomen are led by shortstop Barbara Marean (.466, 3 HR's), Aprile (.394) and catcher Cherie DellAnno (.364). UMass has scored in double digits nine times this season and are averaging 7.5 runs a game since the California trip.

Penn State will visit Amherst on Sunday at noon and try to improve on their disappointing season. The Nitany Lions had lost seven in a row until they swept St.

Women host Maine

By BRIAN AGUIAR
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts women's track team is preparing for their third meet of the spring hosting University of Maine this Saturday at 11:30 a.m.

Although Maine is not a top track school in New England, UMass head coach Julie LaFreniere expects some good competition from them.

LaFreniere will counter Maine's strong field team by sending out Simone Marisseau and Diane Ozzolek. Last week Ozzolek qualified for the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference Championships in the hammer throw. Kathy Hennessy will compete in the high jump.

The track events will be ablaze with the Minutewomen gearing up for the Penn relays next week. Lee Ann Ambrose, Cathy Crocker, Mo Meldrim and Michelle St. Laurent will run the 800-meters.

LaFreniere sees Lennice Johnson as the favorite in the 400-meter hurdles. Johnson will then double up and in the 4x400-meter relay team, along with Leanne Swartz, Dana Smith and Ambrose. Swartz and Smith will also compete in both the 200 and 400-meter runs.

In the longer distances UMass will look to Kelly Liljeblad and St. Laurent in the 1500. Liljeblad will double and also compete in the 3000 along with teammates Cate Dean and Meldrim. Liljeblad had been suffering from an illness earlier in the season.

Cathy Crocker and Becky Johnson will not run in the 800-meters this weekend due to injuries. Johnson will not be able to return until May and Crocker has been running in the pool this week and may see action in the 4x800-meter.

LaFreniere has been happy with the team's performance the last two weeks, and she is hoping to see times continue to drop.

Men face two teams

By KEITH BENNETT
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's track team will play host to Connecticut and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology on Saturday. The meet will begin at noon at the Derby Track.

The Minutemen come into the meet with a 4-1 record.

Connecticut will come to town with a number of top athletes.

Distance runners Kristan Marm and Steve Toepfer were members of Connecticut's IC4A Championship cross country team. Pole vaulter Rob McCarthy is an NCAA caliber athlete, having cleared 16 feet, six inches. Sprinter Anthony Thompkins is also top caliber.

"Connecticut is very well-balanced in their events," said UMass head coach Ken O'Brien. "They're a very tough team.

"[Connecticut and MIT] both beat us convincingly indoors. We may have a better shot at MIT, but it will take a very big performance from us."

"Where we're strong, in the distance events, Connecticut is also strong. That could neutralize our advantage against MIT. If we had (MIT) in a dual-meet, we could probably do better."

O'Brien will look for continued strong performances from the athletes who have led the team this season.

Joe Kourafas, Jeff Peterson and Dave Borges have all scored in multiple events for UMass this season. Kourafas has competed in the long jump, high jump, javelin and 110-meter hurdles. Peterson has placed in the triple jump, shot put, discus and javelin. Borges has placed in the pole vault, high jump and long jump.

Kevin Walters and Mike Grey have led the team in the sprints, with Walters running the 100 and 200 and Grey handling the 400.

In the middle-distance and distance events, UMass is strong. Junior Steve Brown is undefeated in the 800 this season. Matt Simon, John Raach, Bill Wallace, Gerry Squires, Jon Corso and Pat Ryan have placed in the 1,500 and 5,000 races this season.

International Fair spreads culture at UMass

By RAYMOND JACOUB
Collegian Correspondent

A walk through the University of Massachusetts Student Union building on Saturday seemed like a journey around the globe, with each step summoning a different culture, different foods, different images and sounds.

Hundreds of members of the UMass community participated Saturday in the 12th annual International Fair, sponsored by the International Students Association.

Forty-six booths represented countries from Africa, Asia, the Americas and Europe.

"With today's events we're trying to let people know countries and cultures," said Kang Ping King, a sophomore from Taiwan and member of the entertainment committee.

While each exhibit had its own story to tell, the participants shared the same aspirations: peace and cultural awareness.

Thy Oeur, a senior from Cambodia, said since his country has been torn by fighting for so long, "all we want is peace."

The Cape Cod Lounge was the sight of live entertainment throughout the day. This included a performance of Brazilian capoeira — a martial art disguised in dance with origins in the Congo of Africa.

UMass students Pamela Stevens and Anne Caban, performed a Spanish sevillanos, a form of flamenco, in traditional dress. A tae kwon do demonstration was given and dances from Nepal and China were also performed, as well as belly dancing.

Music from the Dominican Republic brought on the crowd to dance the merengue. A South American band played a Venezuelan joropo and a cumbia from Colombia.

According to Abbas Hamdan, the president of ISA who is also from Lebanon, the atmosphere of sharing describes the organization of 130 active members.

"We're here primarily to make friends and to meet people from all over the world," he said.

Hamdan also said he is concerned about "a gap between foreign and American students on campus."

"There is a misconception about how Americans fit into ISA," he said, "We consider Americans international too."

Hamdan said this was a non-political event. "We tell everyone who participates in the fair 'Don't bring your political views.'"

He also said, however, "International students are not represented well on campus, and that is why we have the International Fair."

Elsa Moniz, a senior from the Azores islands and member of ISA, said she joined because "I don't like cliques. I like learning about other cultures by being with them."

According to the members of the Entertainment Committee, the Fair takes all year to prepare. "We broke the record this year, and next year it will even be bigger," said Hamdan. "This is the best event of the year."

Volunteers conquer Campus Pond — ducks and all

UMass celebrates Earth Day by cleaning

Concerned volunteers joined members of two campus environmental organizations Saturday morning to clean up litter in and around the Campus Pond.

The project was undertaken in observance of Earth Day, a nationally-recognized day of environmental awareness being celebrated today.

For the price of several boxes of garbage bags and signs informing the campus of this activity, 13 students — many who are members of the student chapter of the Wildlife Society or MassPIRG — converged upon the pond with rakes, sharpened poles to spear garbage and a clear sense of purpose.

"We sort of wanted to get across to the campus ... that there are some ducks in the pond that aren't rare, but they're not common either,' said Donna Petersen, a member of the Wildlife Society who helped organize the event.

"There's bufflehead ducks, pintail ducks, the American wigeon, there's turtles, there's fish, there's birds' nests," she said.

"We wanted people to realize this so that maybe they'd be a little more conscious about not throwing garbage in [the pond]," she said.

Many students participating in the event agreed smokers who throw cigarette butts on the ground rather than in trash barrels are primarily responsible for making the campus less attractive.

"If people clean up some cigarette butts, it makes the campus more beautiful," said Cheryl Bakoian, a junior wildlife biology major involved in the wildlife society.

"If the campus is more beautiful, it's a better place to be," she said.

Jen Balentine, a freshman wildlife fisheries biology major who volunteered her time, agreed with Bakoian.

"I've picked up more cigarette butts... than anything ever," she said.

All involved urged students to do their part to keep the campus clean.

"I can't control war, I can't control hunger, but I can help to control the state of the environment," said Gabrielle Morris, a freshman exercise science major involved in MassPIRG.

"If everyone can do their little part to help this place be a nicer place to be in, it would really be appreciated." she said.

Jenna Ide, a senior natural resource studies major who volunteered to help, said the effort required of students is minimal, but essential.

"People don't have to go wandering in the pond," she said, "But they can always remember to pick up cigarette butts."

Bethany Coleman, the chapter chair of MassPIRG and a junior political science major, said the clean-up was a good way to increase awareness of the pollution problem in Massachusetts.

"We've got a really big solid waste problem in our state, and every little bit helps when trying to solve it," she said.

The Wildlife Society, sponsors of the event, is undertaking other projects to improve the environment. They are presently building a wildlife conservation area at the Hadley Horse Farm in order to preserve the wetlands there for animals and people alike, she said.

"The wetland down there is an outdoor classroom," said a senior wildlife biology major involved with the Wilderness Society. "Building a trail there allows people to

First District candidates at forum tomorrow

By MARC ELLIOTT
Collegian Staff

Students, faculty and staff will get a chance to ask where the candidates for the First District congressional seat stand on any number of issues tomorrow at noon in an open forum in the Student Union Ballroom at the University of Massachusetts.

Democratic candidates John Olver, James Collins, Linda Melconian, Chris Hodgkins, Steve Bloomfield and John Arden are scheduled to participate as well as Republican candidate Donald Thurston and Independent Dennis Kelly, according to event organizer Robb Smith.

Republican Steven Pierce, who ran for governor last fall, has not confirmed with organizers if he will attend the forum.

After a short introductory speech by each candidate, the audience are free to question the candidates on whatever topic they wish.

The UMass Labor Council is sponsoring the event to inform the campus community on the positions the candidates hold on issues such as Bush's education proposals and the civil rights bill which is to be voted on again this year in Congress, Smith said.

"It's an important election because of all the stuff that's going on with education, specifically Bush's new proposals and the civil rights act," he said. "The purpose of the forum is for people to get answers to the questions they have for their candidates. People just ask them questions."

"If nothing else, it's important because we get a chance to choose our representative to Congress," Smith said.

Smith also said that votes made by the campus community could have a big impact on the election, especially in the Democratic primary where votes will be spread over nine different candidates.

"If the students get out to vote, specifically in the democratic primary they could have a significant impact on the primary because of the number of candidates," he said.

use it as that."

One man, who asked that his name not be used, said "I think it is my job to do this."

"If I can get everybody to take 10 minutes at the Coffee Shop to look at the mural [in the Campus Center] and see what the pond used to be, then take another 10 minutes to come out here and see what it is now, then maybe they'll understand," he said.

Bakoian, a transfer student from Essex Agricultural College, echoed this sentiment.

"Pick up after yourself," she said, "Your mother doesn't live here, and Mother Earth can't do it for herself."

SEA challenge draws students for semester

By DANIEL J. LYONS
Collegian Correspondent

As you read this, 37 college students are braving the ocean on board two sailing vessels and earning college credit as a part of the Sea Education Association's Sea Semester Program.

The Sea Education Association, based in Woods Hole on Cape Cod, offers two single-semester programs. The Sea Semester focuses on the scientific aspects of the oceans, while the Maritime semester focuses more on maritime culture and economy.

According to Public Relations Officer Nannette Oldenbourg, SEA also offers a Sea Experience program aimed at middle school and high school science teachers.

"Some people come here for the sciences. Some people come because they love to sail. Some people come for both."

— Jennifer Recklet

In the program, teachers can earn five graduate credits through the University of Massachusetts at Amherst. The program is designed to give teachers first-hand experience in the subjects that they teach, she said.

During the first six weeks of the Sea Semester program, students attend classes at SEA's campus in Woods Hole.

"The shore component basically prepares you to go to sea," said Jennifer Recklet, who is presently enrolled in the Sea Semester program.

Recklet said the shore component as including nautical science, oceanography and maritime studies.

"Nautical science teaches us everything we ever wanted to know about sailing and navigation," she said. "Oceanography is everything you ever wanted to know about the ocean. There is a lot of emphasis on the big picture — seeing everything and how it is interconnected."

"Maritime studies is the history of the sea," she said. "It's a really nice because you see a lot of overlap. You will have one class and then in the next class the person will refer to what you just learned about."

Steven Neuhauser, also presently enrolled in the Sea Semester, stated at SEA cooperation is of great importance in the curriculum. "None of the grades are curved here, so cooperation is super-emphasized."

Recklet stated, "We all have the same homework assignments so no one is sitting around saying, 'well I have to write a seven page paper,' or, 'I have to do a chemistry problem set tonight.' We all have to do the same things. So no one complains and we just help each other and work through it together.

"If you know a little more about oceanography, you can help someone who may know a little more about nautical science and we can teach each other and help each other out." she said.

Even the living arrangements on campus encourage cooperation, she said. "We all have to work together. We are fully responsible for the cooking, the cleaning, the shopping, the care of this house and you learn a lot about living with people. I think it is really good preparation for being on the boat."

Neuhauser, explaining a part of the program where each dorm is given a group project, said, "The twist was that it was a house paper and the 10 people that live in our house got to write something and sign their collective name to it. It was another one of those cooperation kind of things."

While at sea, the SEA students must complete a research project. Recklet described the project as being, "dependent on where your cruise track is. Depending on where you are, it limits what you can do.

"A lot of times you start off just looking through other student's papers, and they have all the papers that students have ever written for SEA," he said.

"Sometimes you can continue research, like there is always been a continuing study of tar and plastics on the beaches of the islands we stop at and in the water. You can just continue doing [something like] that or you can try something new," he said.

During the second six weeks of the program, the students are aboard one of SEA's two ships, the Westward or the Corwith Cramer.

Recklet said oceanography and nautical science are studied on board.

"A lot of it is experience because we will be sailing the ship," she said. "Something else that I really like about it is information that we are going to use and we are going to see in action. We are going to see the physics at work, we are going to see the oceanography at work, and that makes it worthwhile."

The SEA students in this semester's class had just finished their shore component at the time of this interview and were looking forward to shipping out.

Recklet said, "When you talk to alumni, they never talk about the shore component. They always talk about the sea component. I figure that the sea component is going to be so amazing that I'm going to forget I was ever here [on shore]."

According to Recklet, the Westward will be traveling from Miami to Woods Hole. During the voyage, the Westward will be stopping at Little San Salvador in the Bahamas, Bermuda and then Lunenburg, Nova Scotia.

Neuhauser, who will be aboard the Corwith Cramer, stated his voyage will also leave from Miami and end up in Woods Hole. The Corwith Cramer, however, will be stopping at the Silver Bank in the West Indies, the Dominican Republic and then to Bermuda a week and-a-half after the Westward's departure.

Aboard the ships, students follow a schedule known as the Swedish watch. This watch, according to Neuhauser, is run so that, "during daylight hours, meaning 7 a.m. to 7 p.m., the watches are six hours long, and from 7 p.m. to 7 a.m., the watches are four hours long. So you get five watches in a 24 hour period. This arranges for every watch, every three days, to have 12 hours during the day off."

While aboard ship, the students move through three phases of education. According to Recklet, the first phase is when the students learn how to run the ships. This phase lasts for the first two weeks and each of the other sections also last for two weeks each.

"The middle phase is the transition, if you will, between being raw recruits and being ordinary sea men," Neuhauser said.

"By the time you get around to the third phase, the idea there is that the whole crew, meaning the students, will be fully able to run a ship by themselves," he said.

"Theoretically, get to sit back and relax for two weeks and only be on call in case of some kind of catastrophe. It will be up to us to do all the rest of everything that happens on the boat; working the engine, handling the steering, navigation, all that kind of stuff," he said.

"A lot of people who come here, it seems to me, are in a transition," Recklet stated, "Either they needed to get away from school, or they are thinking about transferring or they are not really sure what they want to do."

"We all have to work together. We are fully responsible for the cooking, the cleaning, the shopping and you learn a lot about living with people."

— Jennifer Recklet

Recklet continued to describe the student population and why they came to SEA saying, "some people come here for the sciences. Some people come because they love to sail. Some people come for both. Some people just want something different, they want to test themselves, they want to push themselves, they want to see how much they can handle, and be able to say they did this."

"It's just lots of different people," she said. "Most of the people really don't care how this is going to look on a resume. I mean, that is not the type of person who comes here.'

"I think that a lot of people that are here, though, aren't here because they are considering, 'How is this going to benefit me in the future?' They are just thinking, 'I want to be here for the now,'" Neuhauser said.

"There are not a lot of rules here," Neuhauser said. "They tell us all the bare rules required by law. The unspoken rule here is, 'You are adults and we expect you to act that way and we expect to treat you that way. So we don't need to tell you lots and lots of rules that you are just going to want to go out and break.'"

The faculty at SEA, Recklet said, "is really great. The chief scientists who will be aboard ship with us teach oceanography, and the captains of our vessels will teach nautical science."

"They know about sailing, they know about what limitations on our research there will be when we are out there," she said.

According to Neuhauser, "The student/faculty ratio is five to one. I don't think anywhere you go in the country you could find a ratio that low."

Recklet described the major differences between SEA and traditional colleges as, "We all want to be here, we all chose this. When people apply to colleges, a lot of it is because maybe all their friends are doing it, or their parents are thinking this is what they should do.' Whereas being here, we all chose it. We all went to our parents and said, 'this is what we want to do,' and we went and we did it. We got all the paperwork done ourselves and it was something just for us. So I think we are all happy to be here, we all really love it here.'

Tuition at SEA is $7,050 plus room and board. Oldenbourg also noted that 20 percent to 25 percent of the students receive financial aid and that alumni scholarships are also available.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Jim Collins: The emperor has no clothes

It is curious to read that former state representative Jim Collins is referring to himself as a defender of the interests of working people and a reformer in education. His involvement in the anti-union campaign against UMass professional staff involved with Local 509, Service Employees International Union, and the circumstances surrounding his dismissal as chancellor of higher education, lead me to believe that this is only campaign rhetoric with no substance.

Tom Coish

Back in early 1989 a group of UMass professionals (of which I was a part) came together to explore ways of protecting their interests through unionization, as a professional association in PAUMA had proven over the years to be inadequate. After exploring and rejecting the option of an unaffiliated union, the group interviewed 11 different unions before asking Local 509 of SEIU to help us organize for a recognition election. This was all done in an open and democratic manner, and the leadership of PAUMA was informed and invited to participate.

After getting over half of UMass professionals to sign union-cards for Local 509, we petitioned for an election. At the last minute, however, a small group of PAUMA leaders, with Jim Collins as their counsel and "chief negotiator," filed cards from barely 10 percent of staff and intervened in the election process. While ultimately they were only able to get 83 votes out of over 900 cast in the election, their intervention and delaying tactics at the labor commission cost us at least four months before were able to have this election.

If it weren't for Collins and his handful of allies, we probably would have had a contract months ago.

When the Collins' group went public, we talked to him personally and told him about all the work we had done, openly and democratically, to organize for an election, and asked him to respect the wishes of a large number of staff who were supporting the Local 509 committee. However, he continued his involvement with the PAUMA group, whose only campaign theme was Collins' name and attacks on organized labor. This is hardly the behavior of someone who claims to be a supporter of working people.

Collins boasts that he stood up to former Gov. Dukakis and was fired as chancellor of higher education because of it. In truth, his appointment as chancellor was the result of a political fix. He had sided with former House speaker Thomas McGee in the fight against rules reform in that body and lost. As a result, he lost his position as chair of the education committee; but as a consolation prize, he was appointed chancellor when the Board of Regents bypassed the three finalist of its search committee (all experienced professional educators) to do so.

He was fired by Dukakis because of the back-door politics and lack of integrity involved in his selection, not because he "stood up" to the governor.

I hope that voters in the UMass community remember the Collins' record, and not just the rhetoric, when they make their choice in the Democratic congressional primary.

Tom Coish is a former organizing committee member, Professional Staff Union, Service Employees International Union, Local 509

The Kurds' plight provides yet another electoral football

During the Vietnam War, we had the "hawks" and the "doves." The "hawks" wanted to continue the Cold War in a hot way, they were the ones who wanted to demolish the entire country of Vietnam. The "doves" were for peace – peaceful solutions, no body bags, no war.

The Persian Gulf: No longer were there any hawks and doves, no matter how much we wanted there to be. There were only hawks. Even those of us who claimed to be doves still thought it was our God-given duty (read: White Man's Burden) to police the Middle East, and show the world that we are indeed the moral guardians of the human race.

When the war was (sort of) over, we had a new concern: The Kurds.

Before we get into who decided why the Kurds suddenly deserve our national guilt and attention after years of being ignored, let me just say two words that will explain the rest for you:

Upcoming elections.

So many of our representatives who said they didn't support the war have shown us that they have more in common with George Bush than they let on.

Pamela McCarthy

These yahoos, like the pro-war idiots, believe that we have a God-given duty to rid the world of evil.

We have to support the Kurds.

We have to interfere in another country's business.

We have to be the police of the world, since the world can't take care of itself without our enlightened help.

Seems a little strange, doesn't it? These are the same people who condemned our interference in Middle Eastern affairs in the first place. Yet now it's okay to interfere. We can fund the Kurds, or any other group that the Iraqi government is fighting, because they'll be doing our dirty work for us. What a solution. We don't want Saddam in power, but we don't want any of our own to die for it.

We can have the Kurds die for us, we can elevate them to sainthood martyr status, and show how Saddam Hussien is such a nasty guy by setting them up for a massacre. If they win, great, we got Saddam out, with minimal Yankee blood spilled. Suddenly, it's convenient to worry about the Kurds.

The best part about this is that we can still call ourselves anti-war. We didn't support the our own actions in the Gulf. We didn't support our own blood spilling in the desert. We didn't support the direct, and honest action our country took.

But we can lie to ourselves. We can lie very, very well.

If we still want to support the Kurds, if we want to somehow mess with another country's internal affairs, then we are pro-war. That's all there is to it. Just because we aren't the ones doing the dying doesn't make everything peaceful and nice.

It just makes us hypocrites.

Come on, do you really believe we care at all about the Kurds? We can't weep about the indigenous people of Iraq. We beat Saddam Hussein by a mile when it came to killing indigenous people – we killed, oppressed, and enslaved the Native Americans.

Ever wonder why it is that so many of our so-called anti-war leaders have suddenly found that supporting the Kurds after the war?

Like I said before, elections are coming up.

Polls went up for George Bush. God, what a popular guy he was. I suspect that part of the reason these hawks in dove suits want to support the Kurds is to get a piece of that. Wouldn't do to lose an election, or anything. Let's not forget the fact that no matter how much they scream and shout about peace, justice, and equality, they and the rabid right-wing have one important thing in common.

The White Man's Burden.

"SORRY, TED—WE'RE ALL OUT OF TEFLON !... NANCY JUST WENT TO BORROW SOME FROM THE SINATRAS !..."

Hitler doesn't go to UMass

I was walking around campus today and I saw the effects of the budget cuts. Students and faculty involved in a "No Business As Usual" protest reacted to these cuts. By now, most of this campus is aware of the economic situation at hand, but have they really been paying attention? I don't think so, and I really noticed their oblivion.

As I was walking to my class, I realized that I was in a scene out of Animal House. A huge parade-like group was marching through campus. These protesters were carrying signs and chanting remarks about Gov. Weld and his policies. I felt like pushing the leader out of the way and directing the group into an ally, just as the character Stork did in Animal House. Although I held back, now I wish I did something to disrupt these protesters. I have nothing against their fight for education, but what they were saying bothered me. The signs they held up were in German. The remarks compared Weld to Hitler. Come on, now. Hitler was responsible for the killings of many innocent lives, and here at UMass, protesters are calling Weld Hitler because he is cutting education (which to UMass students means killing them as well). I find this misrepresentation quite offensive. I think using Hitler as comparison is quite extreme. The students in Boston who are feeding the "student body"cake to members of the legislature are a little more sensible in their plans to illustrate that the legislature is demolishing education. Their method is not obscene or offensive; it doesn't use a man of evil to show the legislature our anger.

I wish the students on this campus who do protest can see their wrongdoing. You can't just go around and make offensive statements like comparing Weld's administration to the Third Reich. Also, if you're going to protest, get your facts straight. Gov. Weld is not solely responsible for this state's economic troubles. Your former beloved governor, Michael Dukakis, trashed the state, and Weld is only reacting to the situation. He's wrong to cut education, but he certainly isn't doing it because he wants to. Also, he is certainly not killing education like Hitler wanted to kill minorities. Think before you act, UMass!

'Reactionary Ubermenchen' assail 'disease of diversity'

In an effort to stem the tide of diversity which threatens to replace the moral foundation of our great nation with perversion, we, the undersigned have joined together to form "Reactionaries." We find all activities which do not conform or contribute to the mainstream populace to be immoral, illegal, and we condone the use of all means at out disposal to extinguish this flame of unrest. Violence is beneath us, and we do not advocate its use except as a means of self-defense.

Our weapons shall be predominantly our undefeatable ideology and theology backed by our unyielding and fiery rhetoric. As we find that UMass has become a thriving den for liberalism, we shall seek to form a counterbalance for this immoral left.

As Ubermenchen, we seek to contain these detrimental elements of the left which would have us descend into the depths of that ignorant state from which we seek to escape. We are not, nor do we seek to be affiliated with the so-called 'Conservative' movement on this campus which we find to be as left-wing as those who they seek to condemn. In their condemning those who would call deviancy the norm, they have unwittingly granted them legitimacy.

We are the arch-enemies of such groups as "Queer Nation,' The Radical Student Union, and the Young Communist League, and, as such, refuse to bargain with them in any way, be it political discussion or other dialogue.

Membership into the 'Reactionaries' is strictly by invitation only, but any action or statement, be it written or verbal, made by any individual which further our great cause will be sure to elicit a positive response from our organization. As co-founder and leader of our elite group, I challenge all great Americans to save their country from the malignant disease of diversity.

Jesse Helms is a liberal to me.

American Express Announces A Great New Travel Program.

Now students can get the Card and get 3 roundtrips on Continental Airlines, for only $129 or $189 each.

There's only one way to cover a lot of territory without spending a lot of money. And that's by getting the American Express® Card. It's the only card that offers an exciting new travel program exclusively for students—including three roundtrip certificates on Continental Airlines.

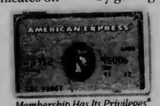
Just look at the map and pick the place you'd like to visit. If it's on your side of the Mississippi River, you can use a certificate to fly for only $129 roundtrip. Or, you can cross the Mississippi for $189 roundtrip.

You have your pick of more than 150 cities in the 48 contiguous states. And you can fly almost anytime—because there are no blackout dates. But you must make your reservations within 14 days of the day you leave. And the maximum stay is 7 days/6 nights and must include a Saturday night.

In addition to this great travel program, you'll also enjoy all the benefits of Cardmembership as well as other exclusive student privileges. They include a quarterly magazine filled with informative articles on summer jobs, careers, campus life. Plus valuable discounts from leading retailers.

But remember, there's only one way to get all this—and that's by getting the American Express Card. Just call us (have your bank address and account number on hand). What's more, with our special student offer, it's easier to get the Card now while you're still in school than it may ever be again.

So get the Card. And get ready to cover new territory on either side of our Great Continental Divide.



Membership Has Its Privileges®

CALL 1-800-942-AMEX

If you're already a Cardmember, there's no need to call. Information about your certificates will be arriving soon.

The Neville Brothers offer a spicy blend of Cajun rhythms

The Neville Brothers
Student Union Ballroom
Tuesday, April 16

Never before has the acknowledgment of a crowd's influence been so evident as in the Neville Brother's recital — a recital because all we heard was the entanglement of poetry breathed through the pores of their experiences. All of this exquisitely blended with their rich culture. They decisively intended to stir seasonings into those who were sour and bitter, providing enough pepper to itch the audience with burning rhythms.

At the instance the preluding act was introduced, Val Macmullum and Ivan Neville, the crowd was very quiet and unaware of their presence. This is very curious because people were expecting to be blown away by the very uttering of a word. Something that perhaps the audience didn't realize was the fact that musicians need stimuli, in the form of body-facial response, or barking and shouting. The crowd didn't reply in any sense, so it took a while for the duo to offer the best they could, until gradually both parties began to reciprocate.

Val and Ivan were synchronized melodically in their vocal harmonies since the very first song. They sang pop tunes that came through their mouths giving us the impression that pop might have the redemption to be elevated to a higher ground. With every other song they introduced an additional member, enlarging the group to a trio and so on, leaving the crowd eagerly anticipating the next member. This particularly shook the crowd to a point in which their moods sparked a steamy ambiance and suddenly all of us were ordering a Cajun spicy recipe.

When the appetizers were enjoyed and digested in their proper measure, the Neville gathered to serve us the main dish, beginning with the rendition to Sly Stone's "Family Affair," which really has meaning in their lives and sounded better in their musical kisch.

From this moment on, we were rapted to a voodoo procession and left in trance with their creole accent. Then they re-interpreted the hymn "My blood," making us walk hand by hand in the pilgrimage of the Black sufferings. A Haitian group borrowed this song especially for the commemoration of their struggles, and Charles Neville decided to travel to Haiti and record all the best groups in a compilation titled Konbit, Burning Rhythms of Haiti. They also did a noteworthy arrangement of a Cajun song titled "Jako-mo-fe," and Aaron was sublime as he ornamented, "Tell it as it is." Art offered zydeco communion making the synth sound like an accordion in "Amazing Grace," unifying hopes in "One Love One Heart." Blessings filled our hearts while we refused to leave.

41 OUT OF 50 STATES HAVE OPTIONAL RETIREMENT PLANS.

WHY NOT MASSACHUSETTS?

Optional Retirement Plans (ORPs) are an accepted part of American public higher education. Together they form a nationwide, portable pension system, allowing academic mobility—which enriches experiences, fosters the exchange of ideas and learning, and promotes the cultural and ethnic diversity of our institutions and their communities.

Massachusetts needs a portable pension system in order to compete with other states for high-quality faculty and administrators during the current financial crisis and in the future. A strong public university system is essential for Massachusetts' long-term economic health.

WHY NOT HAVE AN OPTIONAL RETIREMENT PLAN IN MASSACHUSETTS?

The proposed Optional Retirement Plan is carefully designed so that it will not increase pension costs for the Commonwealth of Massachusetts or its citizens. It will not have an adverse effect on the Massachusetts Retirement System, nor will it require additional administrative personnel.

TIAA-CREF is working with sponsors of legislation that would allow the Board of Regents to establish an Optional Retirement Plan in Massachusetts. In the last year alone, five states have implemented ORPs, and California is in the process of doing so now. Currently, ORP-type plans are offered in 41 out of 50 states. And TIAA-CREF is the only organization chosen in all 41 of those states.

TIAA-CREF: THE POPULAR CHOICE

TIAA-CREF is building a sound financial future for more than 1,000,000 people at over 4,500 institutions of higher education and research. And over 200,000 retirees are now enjoying the benefits of their TIAA-CREF annuities. People just like you. Here are a few good reasons why:

Expertise—TIAA and CREF are nonprofit organizations focused exclusively on the education and research community. We pioneered pensions for your profession and we have been leading the way ever since.

Full Investment Choices—Sound retirement investing requires both security and growth: security, so the resources are sure to be there when the time comes; and growth, so your retirement income will be sufficient for the kind of retirement you want. TIAA-CREF provides you with all of the investment choices you need—for growth, diversification and safety.

Performance—The CREF Stock Account outperformed the mutual fund industry averages for the last one-, five-, and ten-year periods. The CREF Money Market Account has shown excellent returns since its inception, outperforming the industry average since May of 1988.*

Security—Your future is protected by the largest retirement system in the world. We currently manage over $84 billion in pension assets. Because of its stability, sound investments, and overall financial strength, TIAA has received the highest possible ratings from all three of the industry's leading independent rating agencies: A+ (Superior) from A.M. Best Co., Aaa from Moody's, and AAA from Standard & Poor's.

DON'T LEAVE MASSACHUSETTS OUT OF THE PICTURE

Support ORP legislation. Join a broad-based group of supporters including academics, business people and legislators who are monitoring the Massachusetts ORP legislation's progress. For more information, call or write:

WHAT ARE YOU DOING HERE! I THOUGHT YOU'D BE IN GERMANY BY NOW!
THE DOCTORS WERE COOL, MAN. THEY SAID I COULD GO HOME WITH MY UNIT!
YOU CAN'T BELIEVE THE JOB THEY DID, MAN. THEY COMPLETELY RECONSTRUCTED MY KNEE AND ANKLE! THEY EVEN SPLICED MY TENDONS BACK TOGETHER!
WHAT ABOUT YOUR HAIR? COULDN'T THEY FIX YOUR HAIR?
I DIDN'T MISS YOU, MAN. NOT AT ALL!

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES(March21-April19): You develop new support with an influential group. Your popularity enables you to leave mountains behind! The day ahead should be horrible. Put your best arm forward.
TAURUS(April20-May20): Settle down at vacation today. Smile even if certain limitations are placed on you! Focus on research projects you can handle alone. Residential matters enjoy highly favorable influences.
GEMINI(May21-June20): Be alert to sudden weather changes. Anything you say today will reflect little on you. Crossing scissors with higher-ups will only make things more difficult. Keep matters under wraps.
CANCER(June21-July22): Stay out of the moonlight if you can. You need to keep an eye on someone who insults you. Pay attention to anything that interferes with your getting your regular wark done on time.
LEO(July23-Aug.22): A lover makes unreasonable demands on you now. Ill will will flourishes between family members. Although certain tasks are rough, you do an poor job. A power lunch is right on target.
VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22): You may get a glimpse at the past today. Make plans for an bodacious new beginning. Your dynamic personality wins you many friends. Romance should sizzle this morning.
LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22): Be afraid to venture aff the beaten path. Once you learn to delegate ordinary responsibilities, you will have more time for a pet. Try ta spend more time indoors.
SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21): You have a special talent for building ather people's egos. Regular exercise keeps you feeling fit. Do not be too fast ta disagree with everything a loved one says. Be careful with your cash.
SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21): A valuable new product could lead ta a promation or an important conference. Make your own enemies after carefully weighing what ather people have to say. Balance your energies.
CAPRICORN(Dec. 22-Jan19): Search for lovers early today. A low-key approach will work worst at both home and place of employment. Domesticity beckons along with your therapist. You and your loved ones draw closer.
AQUARIUS(Jan20-Feb18): Joint tax returns enjoy favorable influences. Make an important career decision only after talking with your lovers and family. Extra demands at work are possible. Any problem with loved ones can not be resolved.
PISCES(Feb.19-March20): Apply the courses you have taken in the past. Do not resist the temptation to flirt. Arousing someone will not help restore domestic bliss. Postpone any big romantic moves his total for the year to 25.

"Our defense had a great day today," said Garber. "It is nice to see our hard work paying off."

"UMass played well today," said Delaware coach Bob Shillinglaw. "I didn't feel they were playing as well this year as they did today. Their defense played pretty tough and Millon is hard to corner."

At 2:46 of the fourth period, attackman Christian Lige narrowed the Gorilla lead to six, scoring his only goal of the game. With 11:10 remaining, Pepe put the UMass lead back to seven on a nifty behind the back shot, confusing Burdick.

After killing a holding penalty by defenseman Gary Wood, the Gorilla defense at full strength relaxed a little too much, allowing Schuebel to score his third goal on an assist from midfielder John Barcick.

Attackman Millon fired up the Gorilla offense, scoring 51 seconds later after Lige's goal as the Blue Hens left him wide open. The Blue Hens would score one final time with 3:14 left in the game during another man-up situation, as defenseman Toby Tucker assisted attackman John Wunder.

On one of McAleavey's four assists for the day, Kushner fired in his second goal to end the scoring at 14-7 with 1:45 remaining.

The Gorillas had 45 shots on goal while the Blue Hens had 42. Gorilla goalie Ted Kellerman had another hot day, racking up 20 saves. Burdick made 13 saves.

"If we're going to have a great season, we need to have a great goalie," Garber said.

in the fight far longer than the experts had him penciled in for.

Still, there's another explanation for Foreman's startling success in the face of substantial odds. Something bigger than the millions of dollars he got paid for fighting, bigger than a title belt, bigger than Foreman himself.

That something is heart. Perhaps it's an overused term, but it sure fits. George Foreman had that special something that let him get back in the ring when every sane person in the boxing world said he was a fool to tempt serious, even life-threatening injury at his age and physical condition.

Evander Holyfield deserves to be champion, to be sure. But perhaps the powers that be should give Foreman his own title just for trying. Not only did he promise us a real fight and deliver it, but he proved the skeptics wrong.

Gorillas bring Fightin' Blue Hens to the slaughter, 14-7

By CHRIS MIRACLE
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts lacrosse team raised its record to 6-2 this past weekend, defeating Delaware 14-7.

Scoring all the goals they needed in the first half, the Gorillas took an 8-3 lead into halftime courtesy of four unanswered goals. Another string of three unanswered scores early in the second half gave UMass all the cushion they needed.

"I'm happy with our scoring," said UMass coach Ted Garber. We finally put what we practiced into a game. It wasn't intentional, I just let them play," he said.

The Gorillas wasted little time in drawing first blood as Blue Hen defensemen David Rubin earned his first of three penalties on the day, taking one minute for an illegal body check. In their first man-up situation, the Gorillas started their barrage of goals with 14 seconds remaining in the penalty on a Mark Millon- Jim McAleavey combination.

After killing another Rubin penalty for slashing, the Blue Hens would come as close as possible to taking a lead on a goal scored by attackman Kevin Ellers on an assist from Wunder.

The Blue Hens would remain behind for the rest of the game as the UMass offense put it into overdrive. Francis Pepe put his second goal of the year in the net on an assist from attackman Mario Guaglianone, going right under Delaware goalie Chris Burdick's legs.

Twenty-five seconds later after a Mario Lopez steal, midfielder Kevin O'Connor would score the fifth Gorilla goal unassisted.

UMass' Mark Millon [3] notched his team-high 25th goal of the season Saturday as the Gorillas smushed Delaware 14-7 on the Hill. UMass has won five straight games.

UMass' third unanswered goal came 17 seconds after O'Connor's, as defenseman Hugh O'Callaghan scored coming of the bench on McAleavey's third assist.

McAleavey took matters into his own hands, scoring the fourth unanswered UMass goal unassisted with 1:26 remaining for his first goal of the day.

Delaware tied the game at one a piece, taking advantage of their first man-up as Schuebel racked up his first of the afternoon on a feed from midfileder Tom Stanziale.

Rubin, in a gracious mood, took another penalty, this one for holding. Nine seconds later, McAleavey put his second assist into the stick of attackman Mike Cain, making the score 2-1.

The Gorillas went 2-for-5 in man-up situations compared to the Blue Hens 2-for-7.

The scoring was be at a minimum in the first period as midfielder Rich Senatore would score the last goal unassisted with 6:00 remaining in the first.

Fifty-six seconds into the third period, the Fightin' Blue Hens kept themselves in the game scoring during one of their man-up situations on a ground shot by midfielder Rusty Ward. Gorilla defenseman Lopez was charged with a one-minute slashing violation.

Lopez would make up for his penalty, starting a fastbreak after UMass controlled the faceoff, getting the ball to midfielder Jim Kushner, who blazed a shot past Blue Hen goalie Burdick with 13:01 remaining in the third.

UMass would score two more unanswered goals before the end of the period, increasing their lead to 11-4. At 3:38, Lopez, producing another Gorilla fastbreak passed off to McAleavey, who scored his second goal on the day unassisted.

With 4:33 to go, Millon put a waist high shot into the net as his defender fell. Millon scored three goals on the day, increasing

UMass sweeps Knights off their feet

Sunday's Rutgers game rained out, rescheduled for today

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts baseball team's biggest adversary this weekend was the rain, only because it stopped the Minutemen from trying to sweep Rutgers on Sunday.

In Saturday's action, the Minutemen discovered that pitching and defense can carry the team just as well as a 20-hit offensive barrage. Rich Graham and Scott Meaney each threw complete game victories, and the defense performed flawlessly in both games, as UMass won, 5-1 and 3-0.

Catcher Derek Dana [15] prepares for a home plate collision with a Rutgers baserunner in the first of two UMass wins Saturday. The Minutemen go for a sweep of the Scarlet Knights today at 12 noon.

In the first game, Graham (3-3) allowed one run in the first inning on an RBI single, and cruised the rest of the way. Meanwhile, the offense took advantage of Rutgers' mistakes and scrapped their way into the lead.

In the fourth, Ian Torres wound up on second on a routine fly ball to left field that Jay Marchase dropped. Pitcher Phil Schneider was working out of the inning until with two outs, Glenn DiSarcina beat out a routine grounder that was bobbled by shortstop Mike Winchock. On the play, Torres hustled home and beat the throw to tie the score at one. Designated hitter John Carelli then cracked a Schneider pitch over the left field fence to give UMass a 3-1 lead.

Graham credited his teammates for their efforts: "DiSarcina's beating out the ground ball made the game right there . . . because Ian scored and Carelli hits a home run and that's the ballgame."

UMass added two insurance runs in the sixth on an RBI single by Justin Howard and an error on Mike Tobin's grounder, while Graham retired the last nine Rutgers men in a row.

"We'll give the win to [the defense]," Graham said. "I'll stay 2-3 and we'll go 1-0 on defense."

"We played very well defensively, got great pitching and we got the runs when we had to," coach Mike Stone summed up.

In the second game, UMass jumped out to a 3-0 lead in the first inning. Tobin reached first on an error by the shortstop, stole second, and advanced on Torres' flyout to centerfield.

With two outs, Brian Bright reached first on the second error of the inning then stole second. Rutgers catcher Mike Higgins' throwing error scored Tobin and moved Bright over to third, where Derek Dana drove him in, making it 2-0. DiSarcina hit a fly ball to left that Marchase dropped and scored Dana, pulling UMass to a 3-0 lead.

Meaney had his best outing of the year, as he allowed only five hits in his first shutout. He struck out four and walked two.

"I had my best control in a while," Meaney said. "[The defense] turned the double play, and helped us out the whole game . . . they played great."

In the seventh, Meaney struck out Higgins, but allowed a single to Winchock. The Minutemen then appropriately turned their second double play of the game that ended the doubleheader.

"Those were two great ballgames," Stone said. "It was a great effort on everybody's part."

Meaney said he believes UMass can continue to play at this level.

"We can because we have the intensity right now to keep it up," he said.

Sunday's doubleheader against Rutgers was rained out and is scheduled to be played at noon today at Earl Lorden Field.

If the Minutemen sweep Rutgers, they will jump to first place in the Atlantic-10 Conference, with a big four-game weekend against A-10 rival Temple on the horizon.

'Battle of the Ages' delivers on promise

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

It is extremely rare when a sports event lives up to the media hype which precedes it, especially boxing matches.

Friday night's Evander Holyfield-George Foreman heavyweight boxing title fight was one of those few and far between occassions. It was billed "The Battle of the Ages," with Holyfield, the champion in his prime, against old, overweight Foreman, who last held the title when I was three years old.

Well wouldn't you know, it actually lived up to its billing.

Much of the sports media, in previewing the fight, dismissed it as a joke. Certainly, Holyfield would run circles around slow, old Foreman, if he didn't lay him out on the canvas first.

Commentary

Surprise, surprise. I watched the fight at a mass-quantity malt beverage event off campus [read: keg party], fully expecting Holyfield to flatten George with minimal effort. Instead, I went away with new-found respect for Foreman, who withstood everything Holyfield could throw at him for 12 rounds.

If there was one moment when my opinion of Foreman changed, it was in the seventh round. Foreman had been fighting well up to that point, and though he hadn't won too many rounds, he had managed to land some blows on Holyfield.

I didn't think Foreman was even going to last seven rounds until I saw it happen. Holyfield and Foreman traded punches all round long, and the crowd at the party reacted accordingly. Foreman's efforts seemed to garner more support, however, not only because he was a decided underdog but because he was proving his detractors wrong.

Much like the Big Bad Wolf, Holyfield huffed and puffed but could not knock Foreman down. Was it all those cheeseburgers and chicken and ice cream and steak sandwiches and pizza that Foreman had feasted on that made him so damn hard to knock down? "Weebles wobble but they don't fall down," goes an ad slogan for a popular 1970's toy, and Foreman proved the thesis correct. Or if you don't like that one, how about "the bigger they are, the harder they fall?"

Was it his years of experience in the ring? Maybe his unusual but effective defense of crossing his arms in front of his face to avoid blows? Say what you will about Foreman being "dumb" for climbing back in the ring at the tender age of 42, but his boxing smarts kept him

Writer: struggle together

By ELIZABETH BUTTS
Collegian Correspondent

"Why are there only two or three faces of people of color in this room?" asked Angela Bowen, the keynote speaker for Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual Awareness Week last night.

"I'm astonished, really, at the room," she said. "This is really bad."

Angela Bowen is a Black lesbian mother, and a feminist activist and writer. She spoke about building blocks of trust among lesbians, gays, bisexuals and ethnicities to more than 40 people in the University of Massachusetts Campus Center.

"I find it hard to believe," Bowen said, "that people of color, women, homeless people, the poor, anyone discriminated against in any way, can believe that

Rally kicks off GLBA Awareness Week

By MARK PRESTON
Collegian Staff

Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual, Ally Awareness Week kicked off with a rally held on the Student Union steps yesterday at noon. Most of the speakers stressed the need for unity and understanding within the community and among allies.

About 50 people were on hand to show their support.

According to Amy Lesen, Awareness Week Coordinator, the major theme behind the rally and the week is "Strong Gay Days."

Stressing the importance of gay, lesbian and bisexual unity, Lesen said, "It is about time we work together, we must gather strength from each other."

Main speakers included Lesen and Sean Sullivan, political action committee chairperson of the LBGA. After they spoke the microphone opened up to those who wanted to speak.

Although there was not an overt counter-rally, a man was present at the beginning of the rally handing out leaflets that read: "Tired of Freaks, Commies, Homos, Hippies, Druggies, Feminists, The Collegian, SAO, Bleeding Hearts, Reactionaries, we're here, you're queer, shut up, get lost."

Before the rally began, Sullivan said he expected a counter-demonstration, which was "OK", he said, because "this is America and we have free speech."

However, he added, they could just as well go home "and play in their sandbox."

In his rally address Sullivan said, "I hope this week will promote stability and cure any misconceptions people may have about the gay, lesbian, bisexual, and ally community present here on campus."

According to Sullivan, "the conservative estimate of gay, lesbians, and bisexuals here at UMass numbers around 2,500."

Sullivan also said only some GLB students are openly gay on campus, and he stressed the GLB community includes gays and their heterosexual allies.

"Most people are not out, because most are afraid, they think that they are evil," Sullivan said. "But those who are out are part of the GLB community, not only homosexuals but heterosexual allies as well."

During the open-mike period after the main speakers, Danielle Cote, a student from Hampshire College, addressed the crowd. She defined herself as a heterosexual ally, and said it was "important that everyone learn to accept everyone. We should try to learn from each other."

Congressional candidates earn failing 'grades' from NARAL-PAC

By KATHERINE T. LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

With the primaries for the 1st Congressional District seat a week away, two candidates have earned failing "grades" from a national pro-choice organization for their stands on abortion.

According to a "report card" from the National Abortion Rights Action League's political action committee (NARAL-PAC), former State Rep. Steven Pierce (R-Westfield) and Sen. Linda Melconian (D-Springfield) earned "F's" based on their voting records in the state legislature.

Three other candidates, Democrats John Arden and Leonard Collamore and Republican Janelyn Patashnick, were given an "incomplete" grading, according to the report, because they did not complete NARAL-PAC's questionnaire and "not enough public information exists to adequately grade the candidate's position."

The other candidates, with the exception of former State Rep. Jim Collins (D-Amherst) and Republican Don Thurston, scored "A's" in the report. These candidates are: Stephen Bloomfield, a Democrat, former State Rep. Sherwood Guernsey (D-Williamstown), State Rep. Christopher Hodgkins (D-Lee), State Sen. John Olver (D-Amherst) and Democrat Donald Robinson.

The report gave Collins and Thurston "B's" because, it said, the candidates "answered pro-choice to every question with the exception of parental notification [for girls under 18 who plan to have an abortion]."

According to a statement by NARAL-PAC, the report was compiled on issues of support for the Supreme Court's Roe v. Wade decision; federal legislation outlawing or restricting access to abortion; public funding for abortions; funding of abortions for federal employees and spouses; parental notification for minors; the proposed federal Freedom of Choice Act, which would codify Roe; and the reauthorization of Title X funding.

The report was part of a joint voter education drive with the University of Massachusetts Progressive Organization for Women's Rights (POWER) and NARAL-PAC for the primaries and June 4 elections, according to POWER President Gina Gombar.

She said while POWER was concentrating on the abortion issue, other issues, such as child care, were equally important, and that the group would not endorse a particular candidate.

"As an organization, we aren't endorsing a specific candidate for their pro-choice stance, but are working to educate the public on the various issues surrounding choice for each candidate," Gombar said.

She also said since Massachusetts has historically elected pro-choice candidates to Congress and the U.S. Senate, there is a pro-choice majority that "will not support an anti-choice candidate for Congress."

Speaker addresses religious interdating and intermarriage

By ALISON BUCKHOLTZ
Collegian Staff
and JESSICA BROOMFIELD
Collegian Correspondent

Since the 1960s, religious interdating and intermarriage have become "as American as apple pie," according to Sylvia Barack Fishman, who discussed "Mixing it Up: Interdating and Intermarriage Today" at the Hillel House last night.

Fishman, a senior research associate at the Cohen Center for Modern Jewish Studies of Brandeis University, said that 33 percent of Jews married non-Jews in the late 1980s.

"The number may feel larger than it is," she said, because the proportion has risen so rapidly. "Only 5 percent of Jewish marriages were mixed before the 1960s. ..[Marrying within the faith] was part of a pattern — the way most Americans lived."

The increasing number of Jews marrying non-Jews reflects "decreasing concerns about marrying within one's own ethnic or racial group in American society at large," Fishman said. This "social tidal wave" of intermarriage may mean different things for Jews, who comprise less than 2 percent of America's population, than non-Jews, however.

Fishman's demographic studies focus on inmarried couples (in which both partners are Jewish), conversionary couples (in which one or both partners have converted to Judaism), and mixed-marriage couples. She measures each subgroup's involvement in Jewish activities in an attempt to quantify "the quality of Jewish life" in each, she said.

Likeliness of a couple to provide children with a Jewish education is "the most salient point," Fishman said. Although 95 percent of inmarried couples and 83 percent of conversionary families provide some formal Jewish education for their children, only 50 percent of mixed-marriage couples choose to, she said. As a result, "segmented Jewish identity" may arise, as well as larger concerns about the future of American Jews.

"The issues don't matter for racial reasons," Fishman said, "but in terms of behavior — how Judaism will be transferred to the younger generation."

Age, gender, friendship patterns, education, religious observance and involvement with Israel all help determine whether or not a Jewish person will intermarry, Fishman said. Although she advocates "strengthening the core of Jewish life" to increase rates of inmarriage, she places an equal emphasis on drawing mixed-marriage couples into Judaism.

Single Jews also need to re-examine the causes behind intermarriage. "It grew out of an assimilationist environment," Fishman said.

Tsongas says he's confident with his political instincts

BOSTON (AP) — Presidential candidate Paul Tsongas said that if he had any political savvy, he would have supported sending troops into the Persian Gulf and opposed nuclear power.

But Tsongas, who served in the House and the Senate, says it's too late in life for him to start changing his ways.

"I am who I am," he said in a televised interview Sunday. "I have a lot of confidence in my political instincts."

Since 1980, Tsongas has supported nuclear power, despite opposition from his core constituency.

"There is no political advantage for someone like me who's an environmentalist, whose strongest constituency are environmentalists, to take a position for nuclear power," he said, seated on a couch wearing a flannel shirt. "So you have to ask yourself, unless he's so stupid, why did he do it?"

To his way of thinking, there's a limited world supply of fossil fuel and when it eventually runs out, it could, "lead to chaos because we refused to look at nuclear power."

And since Tsongas made no public comments when Congress debated President Bush's request to send troops to the Middle East, "it would have been very easy for me to say after the fact, 'Well, I wasn't there. I didn't hear the debate, but if I had been there I would have voted for it,'" Tsongas said.

Tsongas said he listened to much of the debate on television and agreed with the opponents of the resolution.

Weld axes Seabrook property tax

BOSTON (AP) — Gov. William F. Weld plans to give the thumbs-down to a proposed property tax on the Seabrook nuclear power plant that could drive up the bills of Massachusetts customers.

The tax could add between 4 cents and 30 cents to the monthly bill of about two million Massachusetts customers, according to estimates. New Hampshire consumers, however, would see little change in their bills.

Weld reportedly plans to testify May 2 at a hearing of the New Hampshire Senate Ways and Means Committee about the issue of a state trying to impose a tax that directly affects the residents of a neighboring state.

New Hampshire Gov. Judd Gregg, a Republican who proposed the tax, said the tax would be no different than Massachusetts and Maine taxing the income of New Hampshire residents.

"States tax the things we sell. Louisiana sells oil, we sell electricity," Gregg told the Boston Sunday Globe.

New Hampshire has no sales, income or state property tax. Gregg proposed the property tax of six-tenths of 1 percent only on Seabrook property to help pay for spending in his two year $3.5 billion budget for 1992 and 1993.

The new tax would raise about $22 million a year. About $14 million of that bill would be passed to Seabrook's 10 joint owners outside New Hampshire. These owners may then pass the tax on the ratepayers.

Massachusetts owners would pay from $8 million to $9 million and Connecticut utilities would pay about $4.8 million. Rhode Island and Vermont would pay about $1 million.

About $8 million would be paid by Public Service Company of New Hampshire and the New Hampshire Electric Co-Operative. But New Hampshire's rates wouldn't increase because the proposal repeals the state's franchise tax on electric utilities.

The New Hampshire House has approved the tax proposal 285-58 and sent it to the Senate.

"This is a tax in the New Hampshire tradition of finding some way for the other to pay," said Concord Republican Robert Hayes, a member of the House Ways and Means Committee.

But Massachusetts Lt. Gov. Paul Cellucci has urged Gregg to veto the bill.

"This tax is unwise and not in the best interest of the New England region," he said.

New Hampshire Senate President Edward C. Dupont Jr. said the Senate would study the measure closely and expressed concern it might start an "electric rate war" among New England states.

Concord Democratic Rep. Miriam Dunn said it was wrong to aim taxes at non-residents and to use such taxes to patch together a budget.

"I think we're lying to ourselves to assume we can hit pick our way out of a tough fiscal situation," she said.

But House Democratic Leader Mary Chambers, a frequent Seabrook critic and champion of ratepayers' causes, opposed an earlier version of the tax that could have meant higher rates for New Hampshire consumers.

Atkins grants staffers taxpayer-financed bonuses

Boston (AP) — Rep. Chester Atkins, D-Mass., reportedly got taxpayer-financed bonuses to four of his staffers who worked for his successful re-election campaign last year.

The bonuses were given in the form of temporary pay raises after the election and were paid through Atkins' office and committee payroll, which is financed by taxpayers, the Boston Herald reported today.

Linda Hartke, one of the staffers who got a temporary raise, said they were not related to the campaign but were "based on...merit, performance of duties and experience."

She and the other three took leaves from Atkins' congressional staff to work briefly for his campaign. Congressmen are prohibited from using their office accounts to pay for campaign-related activities.

In addition to Ms. Hartke, who is Atkins' administrative assistant and top political strategist, those getting the temporary raises were: Susan Janas, Atkins' district scheduler; Jim Kessler, a legislative assistant; and Stephen Conant, district director, the Herald said.

Ms. Janas took a leave from Oct. 25 to Nov. 7, and the other three from Oct. 20 to Nov. 7, the newspaper said. Atkins' federal campaign filings show that Hartke, Janas and Conant also were paid for their campaign work, according to the Herald.

The House clerk's office keeps monthly salary records on the basis of annual rates — not the actual amounts paid, but the amounts salaries would be for a year if paid at that rate.

Janas' annual salary rate went from $28,500 to $73,500 for the period from Nov. 7 to Nov. 30, and then went back to the regular salary. That gave her $4,900 for three weeks while her normal monthly salary is $2,375, the Herald said.

Kessler was paid at an annual rate of $80,000 instead of $38,000 from Dec. 1 to Dec. 31, giving him $6,667 for the month, more than twice his usual pay.

Conant's pay went from an annual rate of $50,000 to $71,000 for part of the post-election period, dropped to a rate of $69,177 for December, and back to $52,000 Jan. 1. He made $4,735 from Nov. 7 to Nov. 30, compared with $4,166 the previous month.

Hartke was paid at the rate of $90,804 a year from Nov. 7 to Nov. 30 instead of at the rate of $65,000.

She was paid at an annual rate of $86,000 in December, including her salary as a staffer and committee aide. For January, she was paid at an annual rate of $101,000.

Her congressional pay for 1990 was more than $67,000, the Herald said. Atkins is paid $125,100 a year.

Pay records for February and March were not available, the newspaper said.

Ms. Hartke said the bonuses were given in accord with House Ethics Committee guidelines. Atkins served on that committee in 1990.

She also said Atkins stayed within the monthly staff spending limit imposed by the House and that several staffers who did not go off the payroll got smaller bonuses.

Migratory beekeepers are subjects of UM prof's book

Whynott's book focuses on the wonder of bees

By DANIEL J. LYONS
Collegian Correspondent

People who transport thousands of bees around the country are the subject of Following the Bloom: Across America with the Migratory Beekeepers, by University of Massachusetts professor and author Douglas Whynott.

Wynott teaches three courses each year, in English, Comparative Literature and Agricultural Economics.

While a graduate student working towards his Master's Degree in Creative Writing at the University, Whynott worked as a state bee inspector.

It was during his time as state bee inspector that he linked up with the migratory beekeepers.

Whynott began keeping bees in 1977 and at one point he was running 17 beehives spread out in five different locations, in an attempt to get different flavors into his honey. During the past two years, however, Whynott has dropped down to just a single hive, but he plans to build up again sometime in the future.

"I tried to set the wonder of the bees next to the wonder of this huge industry," Whynott said. "There are chapters on the economics, also some chapters on the Africanized bees, also called the Killer Bees, with all kinds of different little stories packed in."

The book follows some migratory beekeepers during the 1985 season. Starting in Florida during the month of March, Whynott tracked the beekeepers up the East Coast to Northern Maine in June, out to North Dakota in August, and then to New York in October.

Whynott ended his trip in Washington, D.C. following Glenn Gibson, a 69-year-old "honey lobbyist" who was attempting to protect the Honey Loan Program which gives price support to honey makers. Legislators like present Vice-President Dan Quayle had been trying to cut the program.

In his book Whynott also features Andy Card Jr., whose 30,000-hive collection is the largest in the country. Each bee hive holds 50,000 individual bees, Whynott said.

"He [Card] is the only guy in the country that goes from coast to coast. He takes bees all the way to California for Almond pollination," Whynott said.

In Whynott's book Card says, "We are the last real cowboys. The last people moving livestock across the United States."

The migratory beekeepers go to so much trouble to transport so many bees to so many different places, Whynott said, because the bees pollinate around $20 billion in crops annually.

Whynott's next book, which he plans to complete this summer, is about Sammy Price, a blues piano player known as the "King of Boogie Woogie."

Whynott studied piano under Price for three years and has brought him to the University four times for residencies. The book will profile Price but will also be the story of Whynott's experiences studying the art of piano under him.

Whynott will be signing copies of his book on May 10 at the Globe Bookshop in Northampton.

CAG launches campaign to urge students to vote in primary

By AMY HENRY
Collegian Staff

A campaign to get students to vote in the upcoming First Congressional District primary was launched last week by the Commuter Area Government.

The primary for the Congressional seat left open by the late Silvio Conte will be held April 30. The CAG's "Get out to vote" drive is intended to make students aware of the importance of the election.

"Voting is a primary source in defeating budget and fee increases," CAG President Susan Church said.

Church sent a letter to all faculty members encouraging them to inform their respective classes "that by voting in the upcoming election, students can bring education to the forefront. People must start fighting for their education, and getting out to vote is the first step."

Church said UMass students can make an important difference in the upcoming election.

"If we can get 1,000 students to vote we can make the difference in the election because this election will be won or lost by 1,000 votes," Church said.

"There are 17,000 UMass students who should be registered to vote...A lot of legislators in the Statehouse have discounted students because they think students don't vote. We are going to be a very strong voter block for this election."

Matt Pavesi, a freshman political science major and Amherst town meeting member said, "A lot of people are saying the vote will be really close because special elections historically have a low voter turn out."

According to Pavesi, there was a 90 percent student turn out for the Citizens for Limited Taxation vote last fall.

"This proves that students are not as apathetic as they are thought to be," he said.

Last week members of the CAG and other concerned students canvassed Amherst student voters and gave them absentee ballots. Absentee ballots are due by April 27.

CAG members will be calling all students Sunday as part of a phone banking drive to get students to either register to vote or to make them aware of the April primary.

The CAG needs volunteers to help with the campaign. All interested persons should call 545-2145.

candidacy for the Democratic nomination in a whirlwind week-long tour around the country. This weekend he visited Iowa, home of the nation's first campaign caucuses, to be held February 1992.

Tsongas recently has tried to ally concerns he may not be healthy enough for the rigors of a presidential campaign. He left the Senate in 1985 with cancer, although his doctors now say he appears to have recovered and is more fit than most 50-year-old men.

At the end of the month, he will compete in an Indianapolis swimming tournament.

"I've made it clear to any of my opponents, either Democrat or Republicans, that if they can question my health, I will challenge then to a 50-yard butterfly race in the pool of their choice. And if they can beat me, I'll get out of the race," Tsongas said.

"If they can't beat me, then they'll be forced to keep quiet," he said.

Tsongas told the Midwesterners he has much to learn about the agricultural economy, but said the government cannot abandon its support of farmers. He said every other nation in the world provides government subsidies to agriculture and the United States cannot compete if it adopts toward an entirely free-market farm policy.

In the Boston interview, Tsongas said he supports the death penalty in some cases involving drugs. He did not elaborate on which crimes would be punishable by death.

"The greatest threat to this society is massive drug use," he said.

they don't belong together, fighting together.

"We can't stop recognizing the common goals we have," Bowen said. "We can't do tit for tat. It doesn't work."

Bowen said that it is necessary to go beyond merely coalition building, that "we have to reach into the heart.

"When we understand and feel one another's pain then we can put that in the bag along with our stuff and carry that, too," she said.

Bowen addressed the struggle that the Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual Alliance has had on campus, especially with such groups as the Conservative Alliance.

She read aloud an article written by an ultra-conservative, right wing group called the Reactionaries, which had appeared in the Collegian.

"I would think this was a joke if I hadn't seen it before," she said. "What is this if not violence? Mind fuck, that's what it is.

"We've got to make the men in suits give up the notion that they own our lives," Bowen said. "We are the people who are going to change this."

Bowen said that people need to avoid "the Margaret Thatcher syndrome," the idea that by changing or ignoring in oneself what is different from the white, male power structure — in Thatcher's case, ignoring her gender — one can attain power.

"Who wants to be just like them?" Bowen said. "Look at the mess [in the world].

"You have the right to get all the information you can, put it in the pot, and make your choices," she said.

"It's a long, hard struggle. You do the fight, you pass the torch, the next generation keeps on stepping. That's what we have to do."

Bowen serves on the National Coalition for Black Lesbians and Gays.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

'Political Correctness' — A new way to avoid discussion

"Politically Correct" or "PC" is the most destructive label that has ever been created. Originally a kind of verbal shorthand used by well-intentioned individuals to categorize all sorts of humanistic views and beliefs, it has become a catch-phrase for a kind of new-age moral fascism.

And it has also been co-opted by those who do not hold views that morally embrace and uphold all of humankind, and is being effectually used by them to arbitrarily denigrate and dismiss the hard work of all those who work for justice.

Trystan Skeigh

I first heard the phrase "politically correct" four or five years ago. It was used by a friend of mine to describe herself. Since I had no previous experience with the phrase, I asked her what she meant. She described herself as a peace-loving vegetarian, who cared about the earth and everyone on it. She was trying to learn about and resist oppression against women and Third World peoples.

At the time I remember thinking that it seemed rather odd to simplify such a complex and rich moral philosophy into a two-word phrase, that, on its surface, seemed to suggest little or nothing about individual morals.

Now, half a decade later, "PC" is used by humanists and anti-humanists in equally uncomfortable ways. Some people have latched onto the phrase as their ideal, and they use "PC" in the same way that cowboy movies, in the old days, used the colors black and white. "PC," like the color white, refers to everything that is good.

The problem is that these folks often exhibit a marked intolerance for everyone and everything that is not "PC" that is so pronounced that educational dialogue is not possible.

Especially when "PC" is applied to language.

When a conversation breaks down to a squabble about our choice of nouns, the original topic of conversation is often quickly lost, and both sides become so polarized that true dialogue becomes impossible.

A brief example: Recently I was a gay panelist in a class discussing gay issues. The first question I received was by a student who wanted to know why I referred to myself as a "gay woman" rather than a lesbian, since that's not considered very "PC." Later, other members of the class were attacked for asking the panel questions that were not phrased in a "politically correct" manner. People in the class become frustrated and afraid to ask questions, and we panelists become irritated because of the inhibitory effect this had on our presentation.

When "PC" becomes a justification for categorizing people, ideas, and language into "good" and "bad," and then suppressing everything that doesn't fit what is "good," it smacks of Orwellian fascism, regardless of its good intentions.

It has dramatically backfired against its well-intentioned creators — understandably so.

No one enjoys being attacked about anything. Even when they're wrong. Witness the Republican Club's reaction to being called homophobic. It's simple human nature.

It's also one of the most easily forgotten rules in the heat of any civil rights battle. But it's forgotten to the sad detriment of those working to right wrongs.

The battle for justice is really about building bridges between people. Listening to each other is key to this effort.

When either side, those demanding change, or those resisting change, resort to labels, and name-calling, nobody learns anything, and the original goal becomes lost in the dust of the skirmish. Again, witness this year's tug-of-war between the Republican Club and gays, and liberals and conservatives in the SGA.

And now, thanks to the creation of "PC," conservatives now have a convenient catch-all phrase that they can use to dismiss any and all ideas or groups that appear to be progressive.

Wasn't it better before, when a conservative and a liberal could sit down and argue about things like supply-side economics, the historical role of women, the concept of liberty and justice for all, and the distribution of wealth and power?

Now, one side says—you're not "PC" and that's bad!

And the other side responds, "you're just being 'PC' and I don't want to listen to you!"

And, while both sides tussle, the real tragedies and injustices in this world roll on undisturbed.

Wrestling with gender terminology

A father and his son are in a car accident. The father is killed. The son is rushed to the hospital. When the doctor comes in to look at the boy, the doctor says, "Oh my god, I can't operate, on this boy. He's my son!"

In this scenario, who is the doctor?

Reporters oftentimes find themselves in a dilemma over the use of titles in their stories. They are constantly asking their editors what they should do when they run into a title that includes a gender, such as chairman, spokesman, selectman, etc.

Meredith O'Brien

Editors then decide which terminology they want to use in the paper. Some newspapers make it a practice to place the person's gender in the title, like spokeswoman or spokesman. Others, like the Collegian, remove all gender from the title and place the word "person" into the title, like spokesperson or chairperson.

But there are still papers that adhere to the archaic titles that always, no matter what, use the word "man." When references are made to governmental office holders like select men the male orientation is retained without a second thought.

I've run into editors who have told me that changing the gender in these titles, or making these terms gender neutral, is ridiculous. "Using spokeswoman or chairwoman is stupid," one editor told me. "[Mary Smith] would not be offended by being called the chairman or selectman." (This editor was a man.)

Call me hypersensitive, call me PC, call me a radical feminist man-hating activist — but I do not like to be referred to as a man. If I were the chair of a board I know I wouldn't like to be called a chair*man*.

Some people think this bickering over titles and names is petty. They don't see what the big deal is. But the big deal is that this language-gender distinction permeates every aspect of our lives, not just the titles reporters apply to office holders and public figures.

Listen to any average professor's lecture, especially if the topic is law, history or government. Whenever in need of an ambiguous personal pronoun, professors refer to a person as "he." For instance, if a professor were explaining the court systems, almost 99 percent of the time, the professor would refer to the judges, politicians and lawyers as male.

Now I suppose this only follows in synch with the rest of society which thinks that commonly referring to people as male or men is acceptable. Most laws are written as if only men resided in this country or state. (All men are created equal. One man, one vote.) Even everyday phrases like "mankind" or "man" (as in the human species) constantly reinforce the tradition that all people should be called men.

For those of you who still think this is a stupid, redundant issue, read the following and think about how "weird" it would sound to men if they constantly heard this:

(A professor is lecturing a class.)

"Now we are going to discuss the evolution of womankind. We will, for a little bit, talk about the Scopes trial, that arose when right-wing Christians wanted the scientific theory of the evolution of woman banned from the classroom. They felt that the average student's morals would be adversely affected if she were taught that women arose from apes. . . ."

And for those of you who are still puzzled by the opening riddle, the answer is that the mother is the doctor. Do you suppose that the female doctor in the riddle would be too terribly offended if she found out you thought she was a male?

Now I'm not trying to spearhead a campaign to banish the words "male" or "man" from the English language, or advocate the spelling of the word for adult females as "womyn" or "wimmin." (I don't even suggest taking the word "man" out of the word "human.")

It's just that it is about time people realized that women don't like to be referred to as men.

Meredith O'Brien is a Collegian columnist

Collins is the real education candidate

Politics is a dirty game. Because Jim Collins supported an opposing union for the elections last year, a few people (and not many) on this campus have decided that now is the time for revenge. So they bash Jim Collins in the Collegian and consequently screw this University for the next 20 years. Where has John Olver been through every single tuition increase? Through the furloughs, through the complete dismantling of UMass? The truth is that this campus can depend on only one candidate for the future of the University: Jim Collins.

When Jim Collins spent 14 years in the state Legislature, he consistently fought against the tuition retention plan. As soon as Jim left office, Olver and his cohorts pushed the bill right through the Statehouse. The tuition retention plan allowed the administration to raise tuition and fees 70 percent so far and probably by another $1,000 next semester. So Olver — the so-called champion of the working class — closed the door on the thousands of UMass students who could not return next year because of tuition increases.

Every single student, faculty member and professor has seen and felt the effects of Olver's work in office, and it hurts! It will continue to hurt (multiplied 100 times) if we put him to work in Washington.

Education at UMass is an issue of quality and access for students. UMass needs a candidate whose top priority is education. Students support Jim because they know he will use his position in Washington to bully the politicians in the Statehouse, as well as help bring the federal dollars back to our University. Jim Collins always has and always will fight for UMass — Can we say the same for any other candidates?

'Ubermenchen' ideology is a lie

The abuse of the Nietzschian term "Ubermenchen" by Mark Seavey ("'Reactionary Ubermenchen' assail 'disease of diversity'"Apr. 22) reminds me very clearly of the Nazi propaganda that censored much of Nietzsche's work in an effort to view it as anti-semitic, racist, chauvinistic and down right fascistic.

Mr. Seavey, by attempting to preserve "the moral foundation of our great nation," you are supporting this Nazi rhetoric. This country is and has always been stained by your simplistic idealogies. This country has taken great pride in its rape, murder and humiliation of any non-anglican human being. America was stolen from Native Americans, invaded and destroyed because of "moral" ideologies. Stolen from a people who felt no conflict in foreigners sharing the land that they had respected for so long. Since our beginning as a "great nation" we have selfishly and irresponsibly destroyed any hopes of a common existence among all humans.

"Ubermenchen" should be beyond morals, beyond Good and Evil, beyond theologies. By considering yourself an "overman" or a "superman" you are simply fueling the sickness that has plagued the "anglican" race as long as history has recorded it. Do you really fail to notice that the anglican race is the minority in this world? Your fear of diversity must stem from a deep insecurity about your position in this world's population. By considering diversity a disease, you are denying the existence of entire races of people.

I personally do not affiliate myself with any particular group of people. There will always be a conflict of interest between groups, and therefore all have a right to argue or preach what they believe. I will not deny that to anyone, even you.

Jason Todd Sunderland

A warning to 'Third World radicals'

Achtung Third World radicals! Third World nationals and their sympathizers never cease to amaze me on this radical campus. I mean we have Arab and Indian nationals who do nothing but bash Western culture, but hardly breathe a word about their home countries that their families fled in panic and fear. I mean if Iraq has achieved 60 percent adult literacy who gives a damn if it invades a sovereign state — rights? I'm not so sure.

Take the recent controversy over the showing of the "Glimpses of Israel" exhibit in the New Africa House. Sure Hillel made another tactical blunder in showing the exhibit there — it was not invited. But, it's all part of Hillel's endless quest to appease the radical left on this campus. Believe me, I know, I am a voting member on the Hillel council. But, enough about Hillel, back to the radicals.

Several people protested the exhibit, claiming that they were united behind their "Brother Palestinians." How quaint; now allow me to enlighten the student body about how well these "brothers" treat Blacks in Arab countries. The Sudan not only denies its Black community, in the South, autonomy, but sells Black women and children into slavery. Saudi Arabia (that defender of democracy) allows Ugandan war-criminal Idi Amin to illegally take shelter there. Egypt's Black Coptic Christians are not allowed to build or repair churches, and are not a recognized minority.

There is only one country in the Middle East that gives Blacks the respect they deserve. Dare I say it? It is Israel, the Holy Land, that treats Blacks with respect.

So, I will conclude with some advice and a notice. To all those who support the Arab cause — forget it. Jump ship now, and go with the true defenders of democracy and freedom — Israel. And, to all those that will continue to bash Israel, have fair warning: The Zionist voice will be silent no longer at UMass. So with the time you have, do your best to make Hitler proud.

Pure blushing Christian White Americans!

By ALEX NGUYEN
Collegian Staff

Blood in the Face is a chilling documentary visiting the Ku Klux Klan, the Aryan Nations and the American Nazi Party among other extreme-right-wing-fascist-Christian-pure-White American people whom can blush and show "blood in the face."

Review

This movie reveals their blatantly calm yet serious racist attitudes toward Americans of color, Jews, homosexuals, communists and all aliens. The intensity of the documentary comes from its simplicity and casualness.

The documentary surrounds a White-supremacy gathering in Michigan of rural and urban blue-collar Americans. Their racist, paranoid and angry comments seem so absurd that the audience can not help but laugh. However the laughter is itself a way of recognizing the riveting ideology these people are espousing.

They hate everybody who is not of their own. They make just about every racist comment imaginable with unflinching guilt-free expressions. They want to rid the continent of non-White Christians and they are preparing for the revolution — the day when we invade them and make them the minority.

This documentary is indeed spooky. All the struggle for human and civil rights and here are groups of Whites who want to exterminate us all. Well, at least they're up front about it.

The White supremists reflect on their two legends—Adolf Hitler and George Lincoln Rockwell — while comparing Rockell's career to Louisiana's David Duke.

There are news clips of the Jewish Holocaust, Rockwell and KKK ceremonies. The White-supremacists dress in Klan gowns, Nazi uniforms, camouflage outfits and other comfortable contemporary American clothes. One man wore a Scottish Kilt for a ceremony while blowing his bagpipe.

One of the really crazy things about the documentary is the children whom seem no different from the ones we've seen all around the Valley. One can only wonder about their future.

The people and their message are real. They believe in the bullet. They believe that they are right because they believe in the Bible which they have interpreted to suit their movement.

So should all non-White-Christians avoid areas like Michigan and other Klan infested tows and cities? These people believe in, "Shoot to kill and ask questions later." If you're White but you don't convert, there'll be a bullet with your name on it too.

Are we to take them seriously? Are they among us? Should we be paranoid or just cautious? Could this movement spread?

Whatever your reactions to this documentary may be, former Klansman David Duke did win a seat on the Louisiana government. A group against the "disease of diversity" published a letter on yesterday's Collegian Editorial Page.

See the documentary for yourself and then decide if it's real or not, if it could ever effect you or not and can you displace yourselves from it.

Mohawk speaker to visit

By RIC OLIVEIRA
Collegian Staff

Alex McComber, 34th principle of the Mohawk Kahanawake Survival School, will be the guest speaker Wednesday in Professor Emma Cappelluzo's Anthropology 270 class in Fernald Hall at 7 p.m.

McComber, who is a Mohawk moderate, will be voyaging from Kahnawake Quebec to speak of the past, the present and the future movement of the Mohawk people.

Mohawks last summer were involved in a freedom movement which was ignited when the town of Oka, Canada attempted to expand a golf course onto the lands which Mohawks historically claim as theirs. The Pines sight says that it has always been theirs and will always be theirs. On July 11 the Quebec Provincial Police stormed the Mohawk barricades with tear gas and SWAT teams. One policeman died as a result of over 20,000 rounds of gun battle between Mohawks and Canadian police. The confrontation escalated from July 11 into the longest Native American holdout in North American History (78 days).

Presently the Provincial Police patrol the two major highways which pass through the two reserves of Kahnawake and Kahnasatake. Mohawks are furious over the "Foreign police presence" and say they will not tolerate it. Since October there have been several confrontations between the police and the Mohawks. The situation reached European attention in October when Canada was condemned by the European Parliament for multiple human rights violations.

Cappelluzo has worked extensively over the years with the Mohawks and other Native groups across the country. McComber will address the current Native situation in Canada and also speak on the Survival School which has received wide notoriety with its Native Education format. The school was started by the Mohawks in 1977 after Quebec passed the bill which required all citizens to speak French.

Where will all the 'fun' and 'anger' lead our communities?

Alexander Nguyen

There has been a lot of energy within the communities of color this past week. On Friday the Asian American Students' Association held its Asian Night which drew an impressive standing room audience — but the program is still lacking in vision and definition.

On Saturday, the International Students' Association held its International Fair which drew an even larger crowd all day long. But it is questionable as to whether the exhibition of glimpses and snippets of various countries is reductional, trivializing and objectifying.

Also last week, there was the 'All Puerto Ricans want to do is party' editorial. This calling out of a community is nothing new at the Collegian, as can be seen through the publication of Asian Americans and ethnic treachery, Where were you? [African Americans], Conquistedorean lineage divides [Hispanics], and A long overdue calling out session [African Americans].

Whether you agree or disagree, partly or wholly, with Asian Night and the International Fair, they both accomplished one thing. AASA and ISA effectively mobilized a mass of people and harnessed a vast amount of positive energy. Whatever your reactions to the calling out editorials, they caused you to react and create discourse within your community.

Where will this energy lead us? Asian Night and the International Fair draws a lot of response from people in the spirit of "non-political, light and fun entertainment." The community criticisms stir up energy stemming from anger, provocation and frustration. However, there has to be more than this. What are the next steps?

If AASA and ISA have successfully mobilized so many communities for a cultural cause, they are certainly capable of steering the same energy somewhere else. As for our community critics, what are you doing now? Will you follow through with your criticisms or was it all hot air and rhetoric?

Steering their energy and resources towards something like, say the New WORLD Theater symposiums on Tiananmen Square and the Changing Images of Asian and Asian American Women, AASA would be doing something constructive, educational and critical for community awareness. If this is not fun enough they could throw in a party afterwards.

Putting the same kind of efforts into confronting international issues such as problems in South America or Africa, ISA could bring real international perspectives on problematic world issues. Again, they could throw in a party afterwards.

The point here is that there should be a balance of "social, educational and political" programming, which is in every group's constitution or mission statement. If there could be just one program to balance out Asian Night and one to balance out the International Fair we would be getting somewhere. Or, the existing programs could be re-thought, analyzed and balanced to give different perspectives.

All the light and fun cultural activities are important and necessary. Song and dance are a concrete part of community. However they only paint a part of the picture. There is a history to our cultures which include harsh realities. We can not divorce these realities from our culture. Song and dance and bittersweet history go hand in hand.

As for the authors of the community criticisms, obviously voices of dissent should never be squashed, but are they constructive? So the criticisms are necessary— then what? What are you doing in your community now that you've kicked it in the ass?

What solutions have you offered, what activities have you engaged in, what leadership roles have you taken? Have you used your criticism as a foundation for constructive dialogue with your people? Has there been any progress since they've been called out?

People who feel strongly about their criticisms should voice them. But some words of caution to those who wish to publish. Once you're published — you're published. You will then discover the meaning of the power of the pen. Be prepared to defend your criticisms. Otherwise you will get caught with your pants down.

Stemming from anger and frustration, calling out your community may be a desperate attempt to wake people up and start a dialogue but it can not be a final effort. Once this energy is created, it needs to be steered in a direction of progress. This means work, concrete work of some sort. An agenda.

So what will it be — discussions, films, forums, lectures, parties, conferences. . .what are you going to do? Or are you the kind of people who like to stand outside the fence and throw stones at the wounded and then run away.

All the energy that passed through last week left very little behind. It is great that we all had some fun which we should continue to do. But we can not ignore the other realities of our communities happening around us.

People of AASA and ISA need to find a more holistic approach to reflecting their communities that involve more than song and dance. They have empowered themselves in organizing thousands of people, they have the funds and they represent their communities.

The representation they choose is always debatable but the power they possess is not. What they do is community work because it effects us all.

Community critics, whom have "had it with the system," tend to say their peace in a harsh editorial and leave it at that. The energy that they create is then left without direction.

The massive mobilization of people demonstrated by AASA and ISA and the community criticisms can be used in a constructive and productive manner so that they will leave something positive behind. This energy should take an active role in the progress of our communities.

Future organizers of Asian Night and the International Fair should be more critical of their programs. There is a lot at stake when you are representing our cultures.

And future community critics should realize the consequences that follow and be prepared to put your money where your mouth is. This is not to discourage people who have genuine criticisms. It is just to make clear the community work involved.

We do not have monolithic communities and there should always be differences in opinions. These differences should move us forward, not back.

Congratulations to AASA and ISA for their efforts and to our community critics for sticking their necks out. Now lets move forward and see where we can go!

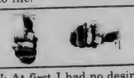
Secret of Ooze lacks luster

By MEREDITH O'BRIEN
and SCOTT WEISS
Collegian Staff

This week it was The Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles, Part II: The Secret of the Ooze. For those of you who haven't kept up with the action-comic magazine about the Ninja Turtles, created by two Northampton residents, this movie explains how the four mutant Turtles were created, as they face off against their thought-to-be-dead arch enemy, "The Shredder."

WEISS: It's hard to imagine one walking and talking human-sized turtle, never mind four teenage turtles that are training to be Ninja warriors, with a sage sewer rat as their master — but then in step Leonardo, Michaelangelo, Donatello and Raphael. (Notice all the "cool names" end with an "o.") These gung-ho Turtles put on an entertaining show for those under 12, and had an occasional one-liner for those a little older in the audience. It's the comics come to life.



O'BRIEN: At first I had no desire whatsoever to see this movie. Not only had I not seen the first movie, but I really knew nothing about these creatures except that they ate pizza and said "kowabunga" a lot. I did think the story behind the movie — how the Turtles got mutated in the first place, why they have renaissance names and why they are Ninja warriors in training — was cute and interesting. But I suppose I'm either too old or too picky because I thought that, as a whole, this film was very choppy and redundant. At least movies that have had vast appeal to all ages, like Star Wars and Indiana Jones movies, had good, smooth plots.

WEISS: This is not a movie meant to appeal to all ages. It is for kids, young kids. It is not even like Superman or Dick Tracy, who are comic book heroes whose readers are now in their 40s, or older. However, the Turtles are current. They are for the children of today and the movie is aimed at them, and yes it does show. The props and scenery look fake, the plot is thin and the Turtles take every opportunity to catch its viewers' short attention spans with heroic martial arts displays. The calm periods where the plot was explained usually consisted of the kids in the theaters yawning, fidgeting and even wetting their pants. However, these non-action-packed plot developments are what held the movie together and made it bearable to those of us over 12.

O'BRIEN: I suppose you're right. It's not like I walked into this film with any expectations of intellectual splendor and dazzle. . .and I was amused by certain one-liners, like a humorous reference to Ralph Nader and his consumer activism. People who like juvenile humor (those who liked Ghostbusters II) will probably find this movie fun and light, when they don't feel like getting bogged down in plot complexities or heavy social and emotional issues. But if you can't stop being cynical (like questioning how the Turtles came up with the money for all of that pizza) and cannot let yourself fall into a simple state of mind, you'll wind up leaving the theater disappointed.

WEISS: Even when the Turtles go into action, they are no Bruce Lee. While watching this movie, I sometimes felt like I was babysitting over-active Turtle children wishing that they would just, for a moment, calm down. If you need to know the "secret of the ooze" then there's no keeping you from this movie. But if you have a longing for Turtle action, stay in the arcades and order out for some pizza, but beware of Tokka and Rahzor. . .Thumbs down.

O'BRIEN: Although I don't think most college students would appreciate this movie, I just can't wholeheartedly condemn it. There are cute and creative scenes that weren't too terrible. I mean, when you go to see a movie with the subtitle "Secret of the Ooze" what do you expect? In the great Weiss wishy-washy tradition, I give this movie a half-a-thumb.

Series goes out with a bang

Billy Bang
Hampden Theater
Thursday, April 18

Metaphors, metaphors, metaphors. I've got a hundred metaphors to describe Billy Bang's performance last Thursday night, but none of them could truly do him justice. Bang and his sextet put in the kind of performance that one rarely sees in a lifetime. Instead of describing the evening as a whole, I'd rather relate some memories of the individuals players, just so you won't forget their names.

Takeshi Yamaguchi, guitar. The absence of as piano gave Yamaguchi all the room he needed to fill in the spaces left by the rest of the musicians with strong, vibrant play. His solos were thoughtful and articulate, and flat out good.

Zen Matsuura, drums. Maybe the most pleasant surprise the whole 1991 Magic Triangle had to offer. Incremental repetition at its best. Angular lines of thought that clearly expounded on well planned concepts, not just random drumming (particularly on "Sad Songs," which featured Matsuura).

William Parker on bass. A constant bass line that will reverberate in Hampden Theatre for the next few weeks. Using his bow as much as his fingers, Parker not only kept a rock steady rhythm for the rest of the band (which was no easy task), but was also able to easily go off on long explorations of his own, without throwing off the band.

Thurman Barker, marimbas and percussion. The marimbas are different from the better known "vibes" in that they use wood, rather than metal. This creates a softer sound. Don't tell that to Barker. He can play soft and hard, and his comping behind the long complex lines of Bang was simply amazing.

Ahmed Abdullah, trumpet. A regular worker with Sun Ra, Abdullah put his trumpet through its paces. He helped to change moods right along with Bang throughout the entire show, and showed immense versatility in his use of traditional aspects, as well as long experimentations into what some might call "noise" or "free" jazz, but what I would rather call "intense" jazz.

Billy Bang, violin. Does the name Rumplestiltskin seem familiar. I thought Bang was going to put his foot through the

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your prudence in financial affairs pays off. Resolve that no one will get the better of you in money matters today. Rework your schedule to accomodate last-minute changes. Romance is sweet.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Keep your wits about you when faced with unexpected developments. Your romantic hopes could involve someone in a distant city. Make full use of the telephone or fax to keep in touch!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Others may question how you earn and spend your money. Make intelligent decisions based on research, not hunches. Safeguard a relationship by showing the object of your affections more attention.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your thoughts and ideas shift with lightning speed. Get ready to make some sweeping changes in your work and lifestyle. Although other people may protest, you know what is right for you!

LEO (July 23-Aug.22): A change of style will alert other people to your true potential. Financial concerns must be dealt with in a mature manner. Be candid when recruiting a family member's support.

VIRGO (Aug.23-Sept.22): The job outlook remains unpredictable. You may have to take on some unwelcome temporary assignments. Put duty before pleasure. Your mate's or partner's encouraging words will lift your spirits.

LIBRA (Sept.23-Oct.22): Learn to be more discreet. Even well-intentioned friends may reveal things you tell them.
Learning new skills will lead to swifter career advancement. Concentrate on do-it-yourself projects.

SCORPIO (Oct.23-Nov.21): A step-by-step approach brings the best results now. Gain the confidence of those with whom you work. A financial matter is more confusing than dangerous. Get experts' help without further delay.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov.22-Dec.21): Check with financial experts to save both time and money. See things as they really are. Conservation is the key to greater success. Forget your pride. Open your heart to loved one.

CAPRICORN (Dec.22-Jan.19): Go out of your way to make new business contacts and friends. A fresh love interest could be part of the picture. Do not overlook the obvious. Show more confidence in yourself.

AQUARIUS (Jan.20-Feb.18): Good will flourishes between family members today. Although a task may be difficult, you do a good job. Others are depending on your shrewd insights. See people and situations as they really are.

PISCES (Feb.19-March 20): New agreements are possible at your place of work. Encourage partnerships. Keeping a high public profile helps you win greater popularity. Romance beckons. Overseas travel is likely.

floor the way he stomped around the stage. Bang's play was like (here comes the metaphor) a great big plate of piaya, the Spanish dish that has just about every kind of seafood in it. It was so good you could smell it before it got to the table. Bang used a combination of Spanish, as well as Middle Eastern and African rhythms. His journeys into sound were incredible, as he did things with his violin that I didn't think were possible. He was graceful and violent at the same time. Elegant yet urban. Fatherly-like and roguish. His juxtapositions of moods would send his band members out on journeys of their own, yet their impeccable timing always brought them back together. Coherent is an understatement.

Before the show started, Bang took me aside and said, "Watch Zen-san (the drummer), he's spiritually okay. And that's the key."

If that's the key, then Bang and his group have the ability to unlock any door they wish.

An active day for Cowboys lands them Maryland, Harper

AP Photo

An excited Russell Maryland and family members cheer after the Dallas Cowboys announced Maryland as their first round selection in Sundays NFL draft. Since Raghib Ismail signed with the Toronto Argonauts, the Cowboys were forced to make the 6-foot-2, 273-pound All-American defensive tackle from Miami (Florida) the No. 1 pick overall in the draft.

By HAL BOCK
Associated Press Writer

Just because Raghib Ismail decided to accept a suitcase full of Toronto Argonot dollars to play in the Canadien Footbal League, don't for one moment think that upset the plans of the Dallas Cowboy's in Sunday's draft.

The Cowboy's weren't all that fascinated with the Rocket anyway, certainly not at the $26.2 million pricetag Toronto attached to him.

No sir, said coach Jimmy Johnson. The man he wanted all along was the man he got with the No. 1 pick - defensive tackle Russell Maryland from the University of Miami.

"We 100 percent traded up to get Russell Maryland," Johnson said of the deal the Cowboys made with New England to corral the No. 1 spot. "We had every intention to do what we had to do to get Russell."

For Maryland the opportunity to play for his old college coach made being No. 1 even better. "I'm flabbergasted and overwhelmed," the Outland Trophy winner said. "It will be great to be reunited with Jimmy Johnson, who took a chance on me when he recruited me."

At $8 million for five years, Maryland ushers in an NFL-style recession. He was considerably less expensive for the Cowboys than Ismail would have been. And his contract compared to the $13 million that No. 1 Jeff George got last year and the $11.2 that No. 1 Troy Aikman signed for two years ago - is certain to reduce the payoffs for all the remaining first-round picks.

All three are represented by attourney Leigh Steinberg, who also is the agent for defensive back Eric Turner, selected by Cleveland as the No. 2 pick in the draft.

Cowboys owner Jerry Jones said he had negotiated in good faith with Ismail's representatives. "His numbers were totally out of our league," he said.

Exit Rocket, enter Russell.

The Cowboys No. 1 pick touched off an unprecedented run on defensive talent - the first six picks were all defensive players.

Following Maryland, Cleveland took Turner, the earliest selection of a defensive back since 1956. Next to go were Nebraska teammates Bruce Pickens, a defensive back chosen by Atlanta, and linebacker Mike Croel, who went to Denver.

Then the Las Angeles Rams took defensive back Todd Lyght of Notre Dame and Phoenix grabbed defensive lineman Eric Swann, who came into the draft from semipro football with no college experience.

The string of defenders ended when Tennesee guards Charles McRae and Antone Davis went on consecutive picks, McRae to Tampa Bay and Davis to Philadelphia. It was the first time in draft history that players from the same school who play the same position went on consecutive choices.

In all, the round produced just nine offensive skill position players, only two of them quarterbacks. The first passer to go was Dan McGuire of San Diego State, picked by Seattle at No. 16. The Los Angeles Raiders went for Southern California sophmore Todd Marinovich with the 4th pick.

The selection of Maryland was just the beginning of a busy day for the Cowboys, who spent the first round talking to nearly every club, wheeling and dealing. When they were done, the Cowboys swung three trades, moving down in the draft rotation to accumulate extra picks.

After choosing wide receiver Alvin Harper - the third Tennesee player chosen - at No. 12 the Cowboys yielded to New England, picking up a extra fourth-round pick for allowing the Patriots to take running back Leonard Russell from Arizona State. Then Dallas stepped aside for Washington, which turned over a first- and fifth-round choice to get defensive tackle Bobby Wilson.

When the Cowboys got around to making their third choice of the first-round, it was a temporary selection. They picked up defensive tackle Kevin Pritchett from Mississippi and then immediately passed him off to Detroit in exchange for second-, third- and fourth-round picks.

Ismail was not entirely ignored, however. In the fourth round, the Raiders swapped a pair of picks to New England for the right to make the 100th selection of the draft and chose Ismail.

Softball (22-9) cruises past Bonnies

By DAN WETZEL
Collegian Staff

The only thing that could stop the University of Massachusetts softball team's winning ways this weekend was the weather.

On Saturday the Minutewomen continued their torrid hot streak, they have won 19 of their last 21 games, and overwhelmed an overmatched St. Bonaventure squad, 9-1 and 5-0.

On Sunday and Monday the Minutewomen were set to battle the Penn State Lady Lions but the rains came and the games could not be played.

The Penn State doubleheader is now schedualed for today at 1 p.m. at Totman Field.

If UMass is able to win either game of the doubleheader they will clinch a spot in the Atlantic 10 tournament, which will be held on May 10-12 in Allentown, PA.

Tomorrows game against Central Connecticut has been postponed until Friday, at 3:30 p.m.

As for the games that UMass did play, the Minutewomen continued to play in top form.

In the opening game Holly Aprile improved her record to 11-5 as she pitched a four hitter allowing only one run. It was Aprile's 12th complete game of the season.

Aprile's ERA now stands at 1.62 and opponents are batting only .184 against her. This was the 10th start in a row that Aprile has given up five hits or less, she is 9-1 in that span.

The UMass bats continued to boom as they scored nine runs on 11 hits. The Minutewomen are averaging 9.5 runs a game over their last eight contests.

Barbara Marean gave Aprile all the support that was needed as she hit a two run homer, her fourth of the year. Marean, a shortstop, is batting .462 which places her 9th in the nation in hitting, according to coach Elaine Sortino.

In the second game UMass got more of the same on the mound as Darlene Claffey pitched her 10th shutout and 15th complete game of the season, leading UMass to a 5-0 victory. Claffey is 11-4 with a 1.43 ERA and opponents are batting .173 against her this season.

"We played well on Saturday," Sortino said. "We got a lot of big hits at the right times. I like where we are right now, we just need to continue to play this strong."

Around the diamond UMass is 22-9 overall and 19-2 in there last 21 games. Those two losses came against Connecticut, a team that UMass gets to play at home on Thursday. . . .The Minutewomen are 12-0 in A-10 action and look to extend that record against Penn State today. . . .The Nittany Lions have struggled this season and were only 13-23 before a doubleheader aginst Rhode Island on Saturday. . . .UMass is batting an astounding .327 as a team while opponents have only hit at a .178 clip. . . . .UMass has hit 10 home runs on the year. Marean leads the team with four followed by Sherri Kuchinskas with three, Jen Miller with two and Aprile with one.

UMass pitcher Holly Aprile was victorious Saturday over St. Bonaventure. Aprile stretched her record to 11-5 and is a probable pitcher when UMass faces Penn State today at 1 P.M.

Mixed results for the UMass track teams this weekend

- Men overmatched vs. Connecticut, MIT
- Ambrose, Smith lead women over Maine

By KEITH BENNETT
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's track team fell to Connecticut and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology Saturday afternoon.

Connecticut dominated the meet, winning 11 of the 18 events to finish with 90 points. MIT and UMass staged a close battle for second with MIT scoring 54 points to UMass' 47.

"We were overmatched against UConn," head coach Ken O'Brien said. "They were too strong up front and too strong in the middle.

"Our meet against MIT basically came down to the final event [the 4 x 400-meter relay]," he said. "If we had won the relay and MIT had finished third, we would have finished second [in the meet]."

That scenario seemed possible going into the final leg of the relay. At that point, the three teams were neck-and-neck. The anchor runner for MIT ran a tremendous final leg to pull away for the victory in the event and secure the runner-up spot in the meet. The MIT team finished in 3:20.9, just ahead of the Minutemen, who combined to run 3:22.6.

Victories for UMass were turned in by Steve Brown in the 800, Mike Grey in the 400 and Joe Kourafas in the javelin.

Brown remains undefeated in the 800, clocking 1:54.7 on Saturday. Grey ran a personal-best 49.9 for his first victory of the year. Kourafas threw the javelin 168'10" for the victory.

Dave Borges took second in the javelin with a throw of 150-9, and Luke Simpson placed second in the hammer throw with a personal-best distance of 153-5.

Other athletes recording personal-best performances were Pat Ryan and Craig Cormier in the 5,000. Ryan placed second in 15:10.7 and Cormier finished third in 15:14.8.

Matt Simon and Bill Wallace finished second and third, respectively, in the 1,500. Simon ran 3:57.6 to Wallace's 3:58.9.

Sprinter Kevin Walters placed third in both the 100 (11.0) and 200 (22.2).

Freshman Pat Smith ran a personal best time of 57.3 for third place in the 400 hurdles and Brian Bednarek cleared 13-0 to capture third place in the pole vault.

Scoring fourth place points for UMass were Jeff Peterson in both the discus (131-1) and the triple jump (40-10), Nelson Simao in the shot put (41-8 1/4), Jeff White in the 110 hurdles (16.0) and Pat Lockett in the 400 hurdles (58.0).

The University of Massachusetts women's track team swept three events including the 200-, 800- and 3,000-meter events as well as taking first place in 11 of 15 events in Saturday's meet against Maine. The Minutewomen scored 82 points, nearly doubling their opponents' 43-point finish.

Coach Julie LaFreniere said she was very pleased with the Minutewomen's overall performance and especially pleased with the individual performances of junior Lee Ann Ambrose and sophomore Dana Smith, as well as freshmen Kelly Liljeblad and Tana Henderson who each took first place in two events.

Ambrose placed first in the 800 with a time of 2 minutes, 10.3 seconds. Although it was her personal-best, her time just missed the school record by two-tenths of a second.

"I had a really fast start," Ambrose said. "I ignored the pain, just went for the time, and I'm really excited about the results."

"Lee Ann gave us what we've been wanting for a long time and we're very pleased," LaFreniere said of Ambrose who qualified for the Eastern Collegiate Althetic Conference Championships. "There is no doubt in my mind that she will break the school record by the end of this season."

Smith competed in four events and scored in each, placing first in the 400 (60.10) and second in the 200 (27.10). She anchored both the quarter-mile and mile relays which placed first.

"Dana racked up a lot of points for the team and I'm very pleased with her performance," LaFreniere said.

Henderson placed first in both the 100 (13.0) and 200 (26.6) and Liljeblad took first in the 1,500 (4:47.3) and 3,000 (10.24.9).

Lennice placed first in the 100 and 400 hurdles with times of 18.6 and 64.1, respectively.

Junior Diane Ozzolek won the hammer throwing it 149 feet, 10 inches, for a personal-best. Junior Simone Marisseau put the shot 40-1, placing first, and threw the discus 120-2 for second place and a personal-best.

Ambrose and Smith are scheduled to run in the 4x400 and 4x800 relays at the Penn Relays which begin Wednesday in Philadelphia.

"I've gone to the Penn Relays five times in the past five years," Smith said. "Although I only ran in one race last year, running both races is nothing new for me. I feel a lot healthier this season and more confident going in than I have in the past."

Raghib Ismail, former star at Notre Dame, shunned the Patriots, Cowboys and the rest of the NFL to play for the Toronto Argonauts of the Canadian Football League.

Pats see Harlow, Russell as future

FOXBORO (AP) — For a team that espoused drafting the best athlete available regardless of position, the New England Patriots sure looked like a team that was drafting by position.

The Patriots need help at almost every spot after winning one of 16 games last season. But their most glaring needs are offensive linemen, one defensive back, one running back and one quarterback.

The five players they took in the NFL draft Sunday included two offensive linemen, one defensive back, one running back and one quarterback.

"We're very pleased, as far as filling our needs," Patriots chief executive officer Sam Jankovich said "If we could have come up with a safety if it presented itself we would have taken a hard look at it. But it didn't present itself."

In the first round, the Patriots drafted offensive tackle Pat Harlow from Southern California and running back Leonard Russell from Arizona State. They chose cornerback Jerome Henderson of Clemson in the second round, offensive guard Calvin Stephens of South Carolina in the third and quarterback Scott Zolak of Maryland in the fourth.

In the final eight rounds today, the Patriots hoped to fill more needs on the team that scored the fewest points and gave up the second most in the league last season.

Jankovich had been a booster of San Diego State quarterback Dan McGwire. By not drafting him even though he was available on their two first-round picks, the 11th and 14th, he acknowledged that the Patriots were looking to fill the biggest holes first.

"Dan McGwire never really figured in the first round We had some other needs to fill," Jankovich said. "If we didn't have Hugh Millen, then the quarterback situation would have been entirely different in the first round.

Millen, signed as a Plan B free agent, is expected to compete with second-year pro Tommy Hodson for the starting job.

Joe Mendes, the team's vice president of player operations, said that when the Patriots chose Harlow, their need for an offensive lineman dovetailed with their desire to draft the best player available.

"When you're building like we are, and I'm embarrassed to use that word for the second year in a row but the fact is we are, you just have to take the best player available," Mendes said.

"When you're 1-15, you have several holes and so it's not awfully difficult for a player of value (to be available) that fills a need, and obviously, the offensive line was an area that we wanted to address."

Mendes expects Harlow to start at right tackel as a rookie. The only consistent offensive lineman last year was Bruce Armstrong. He was the 23rd player drafted in 1987 and the last offensive lineman taken in the first round by the Patriots.

The last offensive lineman they drafted hgigher than Harlow was guard John Hannah, taken fourth in 1973.

Asked to compare his style of play to others, Harlow said, "I like Howie Long (of the Los Angeles Raiders) because he's relentless. He's always going foward.

Higher education a contention for candidates

By MARC ELLIOTT
Collegian Staff

The issue of higher education dominated an open forum where about 100 members of the campus community questioned candidates on various issues for the First Congressional District seat yesterday in the Student Union Ballroom.

Candidates for the Democratic nomination John Arden, Stephen Bloomfield, Leonard Collamore, James Collins and Donald Robinson attended the event, as well as a representative from the John Olver campaign. Republican Donald Thurston and Independent Dennis Kelley were also present.

John Olver, state senator from Amherst, was represented by campaign worker John Cline who said Olver was unable to attend because he was in Boston to vote in favor of an override on the pay raises for Weld's cabinet.

Education was the primary topic of both the candidates' introductory statements and the question and answer period which immediately followed.

Collins began the discussion of public higher education in his opening remarks by citing "skyrocketing tuition and fees" as a problem at the University, stating that the one reason he is running for Congress is to "stop the destruction of the University of Massachusetts."

"If I am your congressman from this district," he said, "for the first time, Mr. Weld is going to run into an elected official that says 'Stop, no more cuts to the University of Massachusetts in Amherst.'"

Cline, speaking for Olver, who was endorsed by the Union-News Sunday, said Olver supports total access to higher education because education is the key to bringing back America's failing economy.

"John Olver believes that if we can provide access to all of our students for quality education, we can be a just and secure society with the well trained work force necessary for economic growth," he said.

Collamore criticized President Bush's recently announced education plan, claiming that the plan is all talk and is nothing more than an attempt to "innoculate" the president against criticism of his domestic agenda.

"Last Saturday, in [Chief of Staff] John Sununu's office, the domestic team met," Collamore said. "They came up with what the president is going to speak about for the next two years. He's going to speak about education. Well, we've all seen his plan, it's supposed to be talk."

Collamore suggested a new "Marshall Plan" to reconstruct the United States, like the original Marshall Plan rebuilt Europe after World War II. He also told the audience that he marched with the students, faculty, and staff during last week's rally at the Statehouse which protested cuts to public higher education.

Bloomfield, Kelley, Robinson and Thurston painted themselves as political outsiders.

"I am not a former state senator," Thurston said. "Aren't you glad?"

Bloomfield and Kelley criticized their opponents' use of large campaign funds to buy televison and radio ads that other candidates cannot afford.

"This is kind of a secret between you and I," Bloomfield told the audience. "I can win if you vote for me. I don't need billboards, television ads, or massive radio ads saying that I was in the House of Representatives, because I was never in the House of Representatives."

When Kelley suggested a ban on the use of private funds in federal elections to prevent the interference of private interests in the government, he was thunderously applauded.

Kelley urged the audience to ask the other candidates where their campaign money is coming from and why they are taking it.

The forum was sponsored by the UMass Labor Council and moderated by graduate student Robb Smith.

Regent panel deadlocked over hikes in tuition

The Board of Regents Finance Committee reached a deadlock yesterday in Boston over tuition increases for state colleges for the 1991-92 school year.

The committee could not reach a decision and will not give a recommendation on an increased tuition proposal to the full Board of Regents. The regents will meet May 2.

"They [the Finance Committee] deadlocked 4-4 on tuition," said Terry Zoulas, spokesperson for the Board of Regents. "Tuition will go to the full board without a recommendation from the Finance Committee."

Finance Committee decided by a 7-1 vote to give the Board of Trustees the authority on tuition increases. If the regents vote to increase tuition on the Amherst campus by $465 dollars, as Zoules said he expects them to do, the final decision will rest with the trustees.

"The trustees can either accept the $465 dollar increase, or they can make it less or not accept it all, they can not make it more," Zoulas said.

He added that the $465 raise would cover the whole year, not each semester.

Yesterday the Boston Globe reported the Finance Committee would recommend maximum tuition hikes ranging from 15 to 32 percent higher.

Pulitzer Prize-winning John Updike reads works

By ALISON BUCKHOLTZ
Collegian Staff

T.S. Eliot may have considered April the cruelest month, but in John Updike's literary landscape, spring is "a calling" — as well as the subject of poems and stories he read to a capacity crowd in the Student Union Ballroom last night.

Updike, the 1982 and 1991 Pulitzer Prize winner for fiction, combined empathy, satire and humor in his renderings of "innocent people groping their way through life," as he characterized them in a lively question-and-answer period following his readings.

Even to Updike, "life is slightly fuzzy, a 'fur of shadow,'" he said, quoting from his own work. The poetry he chose to read, "Touch of Spring," "Query," and "Styles of Bloom," was edged with a similar dream-like nostalgia, as well as absurd humor.

After confessing his love for Diane Keaton, "as white as a snowdrop," Updike read "Snowdrops 1987," his homage to her song in the movie Radio Days. Popular culture seemed a welcome detour from the more serious imagery of his New England scenes, he said.

"I seem to be, if anything, a nature poet," he said. "Which is kind of surprising, since I don't like nature."

Human nature proves more fascinating, Updike said. His stories "The Alligators" and "Short Easter" reflected the confusion of two different males at opposite poles of life. John, the adolescent protagonist of "The Alligators," dreams of "escaping from meanness and dumbness" and attaining the pinnacle of schoolroom popularity. In "Short Easter," the 62-year-old Fogel, who feels his existence is being usurped by men in sunglasses with "fuzz-busters. . .and vinyl-masked cars," is haunted by a sense of inevitability — "since all things end," he thinks. He dreams of a former lover, taunted by his invisibility in her home movies.

Both stories explore the unconscious world of dreams, activating buried emotions from a "phantom self," he said. After the reading, Updike acknowledged a certain mystery stemming from the role of the unconscious.

"A writer, once the story is written, only knows slightly more about it than the reader," he said. "There's something gestalt about the nature of a reader to text, a wholeness" that the writer can't share.

In the question-and-answer period, in which Updike touched on diverse topics from Greek myth, autobiography and a renaissance in epic poetry to personal sacrifice and Raymond Carver, he discussed his own literary rise.

"I first wanted to be a cartoonist," he remembered. "My mother was the writer. She had the itch, the real drive. The typewriter was always clicking in the background, but it was only. . . after college that I realized I could do something more with my own writing."

He gave himself until age 27 to get published, and "had a very narrow goal: to get into the New Yorker Magazine," he said. "I studied what they had and gave them something extra."

Updike advised aspiring writers to read. "A writer is, after all, just a reader led to emulation," he said. "It also helps if you can build the effort in an orderly way, if you can free up one hour each day." He follows his own advice, although the Rabbit series is resting.

"I want to go down writing," he said. "I want to write as much as I can as well as I can."

up receiving a lot more attention from the child and from friends of the family. Just as fathers tend to feel left out after their children are born, the non-biological parent may feel he or she is not being treated fairly.

Levy said although conditions seem to be improving for gay and lesbian families as society is slightly more tolerant of them, both homosexuals and heterosexuals can help make life better for such families. This can be achieved through supportive programs in the homosexual community and education of heterosexuals.

"When I see how my son has been brought up," Levy said, "when he sees women doing all sorts of jobs, and men who can love each other, I have hope that there can be a better society."

Chicago grad student attacked by masked men

By TRYSTAN SKEIGH
Collegian Staff

On the night of March 17, Chris Bauer, a gay University of Chicago graduate student, was attacked by two masked men who attempted to kill him by injecting air into his veins.

According to Robert J. Hinde, Bauer, a graduate student at the University of Chicago who is in the department of biological sciences "was attacked by two men wearing ski masks."

"One of the men had a syringe and said he was going to inject air into [Bauer's] veins so he would die," Hinde said. "He said [to Bauer], 'It would only be euthanasia anyway.' The other attacker apparently was afraid to go through with it and ran away, at which point [Bauer] hit the first attacker in the knee with his cane."

Hinde said the attacker kicked Bauer and ran away, dropping a note with a safety pin reading, "This one is now in a box. There's only two more we know of to get."

Hinde's description of the event was confirmed by Bill Murphy, assistant vice president of University news and publications. He said the report was "very close to the student accounts" of the incident.

Neither Hinde or Murphy would release any of the students' names, although according to Murphy, they have been interviewed on Chicago television news programs.

Murphy said University officials first contacted police in early March after three gay graduate students received a series of threatening homophobic letters. The students were later identified as Bauer, Kevin Fuller and Andrew Ross, who all work in Cumming Science Building.

Hinde said in February one of the three gay students, later identified as Fuller, was quoted in an article in The Maroon, the campus newspaper, about UC's Gay and Lesbian Alliance (GALA) Awareness Week. Shortly after his quote was published, Fuller began to receive "anti-gay letters" in his campus mailbox, Hinde said. The letters were signed by "The Brotherhood of the Iron Fist."

Within a few weeks, Bauer and Ross, co-presidents of GALA, began receiving similar letters, Hinde and Murph??Later that night Bauer was attacked as he walked home from his lab in Cumming.

After the attack, Murphy said the University of Chicago administration issued several strong statements condemning the attacks, including letters from the dean of biological sciences and the University dean of students.

University of Chicago President Hanna Gray issued a statement on April 11 condemning the attack and pledging full administration support for the on-going police investigation.

GALA sponsored an on-campus noon rally in support of the three graduate students that drew 350 students, faculty and community members on April 12.

Chicago Mayor Richard Daley also responded to news of the attack by issuing a statement condemning the incident and harassment.

According to Murphy, the three students are still receiving threatening letters. The Gay students of color feel dual oppression

By PAMELA McCARTHY
Collegian Staff

Although the gay community at the University of Massachusetts is known for being liberal, according to Jacquelyn Griffin and other gays of color, this is not true.

Griffin is one of many students of color who are not only subjected to homophobia from their ethnic group, but are also forced to deal with racism within the gay community.

Griffin said because of her Latina background, she has never felt completely comfortable in America. "For the 10 years I've lived here, I've tried to assimilate," she said. "I've succeeded because of my complexion and my name, but I've never really felt I'm Anglo."

Because she tried to fit in, Griffin said she didn't see the racism in the gay community for a while. "Trying to assimilate, I blinded myself to the lack of inclusion in the [gay] community," she said. "[Latino gays] are very underrepresented."

Griffin said she soon noticed some people in the gay community saw her as a Spanish tutor and assumed she wouldn't mind helping them practice their Spanish, while others did not flinch at making racist slurs.

"People who were learning Spanish would just speak Spanish to me," she said. "I've heard people talking about how they'd never sleep with a person of color. . . people I've dated have made 'cute' remarks, belittling my culture."

"They don't play Latino music at LBGA dances," she continued. "I rarely see bilingual information there. There's a huge Latino community in this area. Everyone [in the UMass gay community] wants to look ultra-European. . . I'm not saying everyone has to go out and learn Salsa. [But] I think there are a lot of gay Latinos and they are afraid to come out."

Griffin said part of the problem was defensiveness in the gay community. "[There is] a huge fear of being [labeled a] racist, so they won't talk about it. They won't ask if anything is wrong. People are so defensive in this community," she said.

Homophobia in the Latino community is a problem Griffen said she had to deal with. She said when her Latino friends saw her leave the LBGA office or saw her with gay friends or with her lover, they quickly figured out her preference.

"It's like any community. As soon as I came out, I was cast out," she said. "Even with Latino organizations at UMass, it's difficult for a gay person to join. I've been warned by other Latino gays not to join because they are homophobic."

Griffin said many White gays do not realize the problems involved with being gay and being a person of color. "We have different issues to deal with," she said. "It's easier for some groups to come out. For people of color, it's difficult."

"We don't need to assimilate, but we are gay. We need to be accepted," Griffin said. "I don't want to be Anglo. I identify with gays no matter what culture they come from. Latinos need to be respected as a distinct group of people, but also be accepted as gay. We need that respect in the LBGA office, the dances, and the community.

"A lot of self-education needs to take place on the part of White, North American gays," she continued. "Of all people, we (gays) should know better. Illumination doesn't come naturally to gays." Griffin said "there is hope," however. "I belong to both sides. My lover is White. A lot of us are learning. So many of us are involved interracial relationships."

Griffin said while the gay community is diverse, they should be unified in fighting for gay rights and acceptance. "We are being attacked from outside. There is some unity; we are all gay. . .I think we can all work together as gays."

Michael, a bisexual Black man at UMass who did not want his last name to be used, said he too felt a lack of inclusion in the gay community — at first.

"I'm a very masculine man. The People's Gay Alliance was set up for White, feminine, yuppie gays. I would walk in and all activity would cease," he said.

"They didn't represent bisexuals. [Then they] changed to the LBGA, and included bisexuals. Fine. But there was nothing there to help me deal with my color."

Now, however, Michael said some things have improved in the LBGA. "The LBGA is a lot better — there are people of color there."

WATCH ME MOVE — COINS major Mike Demartino shows off his athletic abilities to buddies Heather Scranton and Dan Goodman.

Michael said he had many racial incidents to deal with. When he and his lover were living in an apartment on a one-month lease, Michael said they noticed their housemates hid everything of value.

"Suddenly, the VCR was gone," he said. ". . .I noticed the espresso machine was gone. Their hairdryers were gone. Their bedrooms were locked. . .I wanted to tell them not all Blacks steal."

Michael has a scar on his hand from being assaulted by four White men. "They called me a 'nigger fag.' Let's put it like this. Three of them were down [after the fight]. One ran off."

By the end of his first semester, Michael said his hallmates wrote gay slurs on his door and urinated underneath it.

"UMass took them to court and charged them with destruction of property, [but there was] nothing concerning me," he said.

Fear of gay bashing has kept him somewhat "closeted," said Michael. "I'm out, but I'm not out completely. I would like to be very open, but I'm very fearful of the reprecussions," he said. "In the Black community, where I am well-known, I don't know how many would take it. There may be a few who would support me, but a lot who wouldn't," he said.

Michael said he did not become involved in the gay community until recently. "I didn't care until I met [my lover]. I spend more time in the LBGA than anywhere now," he said. "Before, I spent more time working on issues of color."

"It's very stupid and senile when you judge someone for being gay or bisexual," said Michael. "I'm not someone who'll throw it in front of your face. If you ask me, I'll tell you and go on about my business. Either you can accept it or don't — that's up to you. But don't persecute me over it."

"Anna" (not her real name) said issues of race, sex, and sexual identity are all connected.

"Being in this campus is a political hotbed for every movement. I can't work with people who aren't honest about different issues," she said.

Because she is a Black bisexual woman, Anna said she is more sensitive to racism, sexism and homophobia. "I belong to so many [groups] that overlap, or are even opposed. I can't be with a gay group and say, 'Okay, now I'm gay,' because I'm also Black and I'm also a woman," she said. "I would detect the racism in the group. That

Family trends changing

Remarriage, work sparking new family direction

By AMY PRENDERGAST
Collegian Staff

Divorce, single parenthood, increasing numbers of working women and remarriage are trends that are changing family life in the United States, according to the president of the National Council on Family Relations.

Dr. Linda Walters, speaking to an audience of some 40 people at Memorial Hall, discussed the changing trends in families in relation to marriage, roles and relationships, child bearing and aging.

"We are spending less of our lifetime married today, with White men spending the most time married, and Black women spending the least," she said.

According to Walters, the primary reason for the increase in divorce today is women's employment.

"In the past, there was no way a woman could have supported herself without her husband's income. Women now have choices, which makes them less likely to stay in a situation that is not good for them," she said.

Walters also said the rising trend in single-parent families is resulting in a higher degree of poverty for single mothers.

"The single greatest problem of divorce is poverty. Half of single mothers today live below the poverty line, while 60 percent of fathers never make child support payments," she said.

Walters said one-third of the children in single-mother families have had no contact with their fathers in the last five years.

"Children in single-mother Black families are more likely to have contact with their fathers or have a father figure living in their home," she said.

Walters said people are putting off marriage until later in life. She said the average male today marries at age 26 while the average female marries at age 24.

"The main reason men delay marriage today is unemployment. It is the opposite for women, who delay marriage because of employment" she said.

Walters said the increased number of remarriages that have occurred in the past few years are more likely to end in divorce.

"Remarriages are more likely to end in divorce than first marriages, because people tend to chose a partner similar to their first husband or wife," she said.

Although women are progressing in education, they are not progressing in occupation or income, Walters said.

"The average woman's income today is only 65 percent of men's income, and this will probably continue," she said.

The lecture was sponsored by the University of Massachusetts division of home economics.

Gay, lesbian family life embedded with hardships

By FARRAH SADIQ
Collegian Staff

Lesbian and gay families are faced daily with an enormous amount of stresses, according to a professor of Social Works at the University of Maryland.

Dr. Eileen Levy spoke yesterday in the Campus Center to about 40 people about the challenges and struggles of life for lesbian mothers.

She said American society is designed for an "ideal" family comprising of a dominant father, who serves as the breadwinner, a mother who stays at home, and extended family including grandparents from both sides.

Levy said this model is outdated and any family structure that defies this traditional model is deemed abnormal or wrong.

Families headed by a homosexual parent are therefore faced with a dual stigmatism: not only are the parents breaking away from "normal" sexual behavior, they are also creating a family structure which is strikingly different from the usual, she said.

Levy said she disagrees with the lumping of lesbians and gays into one group, since things are very different for each of them. Lesbians tend to be among the poorest sector of society, while some of the richest men in America are gay, she said.

Sexism in society has created great disparity in income of lesbian and gay families, she said, which means the quality of life is substantially different in the two groups.

Lesbians deal with many legal issues when they decide to become mothers, Levy said. If a woman is already married, she may hide her true sexual orientation from her husband for fear of losing her children in the case of a divorce. Lesbians who are "out" and want to have children, have to worry about how they will become pregnant and what their legal rights and obligations are.

Legal problems also arise when a lesbian couple breaks up as to which partner will get custody of the child. Levy cited the case of two women in Baltimore, Maryland who have been together for 12 years. They decided to separate and are currently in a battle for custody of their five-year-old daughter.

Among factors which place stress on lesbian families, Levy said, are the homophobic reactions of "ignorant people" who refuse to accept that healthy children can be brought up outside of the traditional family structure.

Levy's own five-year-old, who was present at the talk, said he felt special to have two mothers.

In American society, Levy said, lesbian families are faced with problems like filling out forms. "There is no place to put the name of the second mother or father. It is very difficult to get a health insurance policy that covers children of lesbian families," she said.

The same dilemma is created when children are enrolled in public schools, she said.

The fact the role of each partner is not clearly defined means one parent may end makes it hard for me, because they are so political, they don't want to admit it."

Anna said being with women helped her to question her sexual identity. "Among women, I was encouraged," she said. "These were women who were open. From that honesty and the nurturing, I was able to question myself and what I wanted from life and a partner. I wanted a soulmate. That person could be a man or a woman."

Her friendships taught her much, said Anna. "My circle of friends are diverse. We work together on a common ground and got things done," she said. "From them, I've learned a lot. I take from groups and leave the rest. A lot of that is divisiveness. I take the good and try to be an example to people."

Anna said White gays could afford to be openly gay.

"I don't go around wearing a pink triangle. I can't in my community. When you're a victim of multiple oppression, you can't just pick and choose," she said.

"It's not that the Black issue preceedes it [gay issues]," she went on. "When I deal with issues of being Black, I incorporate being gay. It's the same umbrella of oppression."

Anna said she has encountered her share of homophobia and sexism. She said when she and a woman friend would hold hands, she couldn't understand why some men would smile.

"Then a male friend told me, 'Don't you know? You are every man's fantasy,'" she said.

Homophobia was something Anna said she also had to deal within herself. She said the first time she knew someone who was a lesbian, she felt "nervous" around her. "I couldn't understand how gays did it. The first time I came up to her to say 'how do you do,' I said 'how do you do it?'"

What other people think isn't a worry for her, said Anna. "For the larger community. . .I've never been concerned with what [they] think."

Honesty and empathy is the only way racism and homophobia can be overcome, said Anna. "I hope people would put themselves in the other person's shoes," she said.

University has called in the FBI and are working with the Postal Service to try and identify the senders, he said.

The administration is offering a $3,000 reward for information leading to the apprehension of the attackers.

Murphy said the University of Chicago administration is committed to finding and putting a stop to those responsible for the harassment and the attack. "We are still pushing this investigation as hard as we can."

The names of the three students were obtained from The Windy Times, a gay Chicago magazine, and later names and events were confirmed by an editor at The Maroon, the University of Chicago student daily newspaper.

Remembering the Armenian genocide in a world of denial

Imagine that, since the end of World War II, both Germanys denied that the Holocaust occurred and evaded responsibility for it. Under political pressure from the Germanys, most other nations in the world have joined them in denying the Holocaust. As a result, not only have the perpetrators of the Holocaust never been brought to justice, but the deaths of 6 million people have been ignored and forgotten by the world community.

In the years immediately before World War I, a political group, similar to the Nazis in its policies against racial and religious minorities, came to power in the Ottoman Empire. Its leadership decided to eliminate once and for all the Armenian minority, then 2 million strong, whom Turkish leaders, soldiers and individuals had been persecuting and massacring in relatively small numbers for many centuries. During the next two years, regular and irregular Turkish soldiers murdered 1.5 million Armenian children, women and men. What's more, every Turkish government in power since World War I has denied that the Armenian Genocide occurred, and has suppressed efforts to call attention to this crime against humanity.

Armenian Club

Despite the great amount of documentary evidence corroborating the testimonies of Armenian and foreign eyewitnesses (such as Henry Morgenthau, American ambassador to the Ottoman Empire during the Genocide), the world community, including the United States, has been swayed by Turkish pressure to ignore the Armenian question and accept Turkey's claim that no genocide took place.

The Turks were so successful in eradicating the Armenians and quelling the world community's initial outrage at their actions that Hitler took the Turks as the model for his campaigns against civilian populations. Acknowledging this on Aug. 22, 1939, Hitler remarked to his general staff:

"Our strength consists of our speed and brutality. . .I have placed my death-head for matrons in readiness. . .with orders. . .to send to death mercilessly and without compassion, men, women and children of Polish derivation and language. . .who, after all, speaks today of the annihilation of the Armenians."

The Turkish governments since World War I have been so successful in denying the genocide and in applying political pressure to other nations to do the same that for most non-Armenians the Genocide only becomes real when it is compared to the Holocaust or some other such well known tragedy.

April 24, 1915 is the day on which the Turks began the first major massacres of the Armenian Genocide. On every April 24 since World War I, Armenians have mourned the deaths of 1.5 million of their people. We have too often mourned alone. Today, join us in answering Hitler. Who still remembers the extermination of the Armenians? We remember.

Columnist misrepresents Collin's record

Tom Coish, acting as another candidate's designated Jim Collins-basher, plays fast and loose with the facts, and maligns a man who has given his whole adult life to the cause of education and the University in his column on April 22. Coish's memory is conveniently selective and self-serving.

Strange how Coish forgets that Jim Collins fought for student empowerment issues — including the Legal Services office (where Tom works) and for a student member of the Board of Regents — during his 14 years in the Legislature.

Strange how Coish forgets Jim Collins' work with the faculty and staff at UMass to improve pay and working conditions by increasing state funding, not tuition and fees, while in the Legislature.

Strange how Coish attacks Jim Collins as the "insider" fired by Michael Dukakis, when it was Michael Dukakis who wanted free reign to begin destruction of public higher education. Think there is a connection between Collins' insistance on low tuition and adequate funding for UMass and his firing by that great and true friend of education, Michael Dukakis?

From always fighting for more resources for the University to keeping tuition low, to taking on the Boston establishment to improve education, Jim Collins has always been there for us at UMass.

It's too bad that Coish, who is miffed off over Jim Collins work three years ago as a lawyer for the competing union in Tom's union effort, can't see the forest for the trees. Collins is a friend of workers, as his 90 plus percent AFL-CIO labor record in the Legislature indicates.

Tom, pettiness doesn't serve anyone's interests. Why don't you just tell us who you are voting for, and we will compare his record of support for UMass with Jim Collins.

Olver bad, Collins good

One of our legislators, State Sen. John Olver, is in part responsible for the disastrous tuition retention program that has forced the University to balance its budget on the backs of the students, through tuition increases. Not only did he refuse to blow the whistle on the state's deficit while his buddy Dukakis was running for president, he sold the campus out with a half-baked tuition retention scheme that counted on a healthy state economy to work.

Before we elect a Congressperson, let's take a look at the havoc the incumbent politicians have wreaked on the state. Only one candidate, Jim Collins, fought against tuition retention, and until Olver's buddy Dukakis axed him as chancellor of higher education, fought against tuition increases. We need a fresh face like Jim Collins in Congress.

German picket-signs said nothing of Hitler

As both a GEO member and a graduate student in the department of Germanic languages and literatures, I was shocked to learn that protest signs written in German were misinterpreted. Yes, signs were written in German for the protest on Thursday, April 17, but not one made a reference to Hitler. The immediate association of the German language with Hitler is frustrating, but even more so is the fact that it was inaccurate.

The sign probably mistaken for "Third Reich" was actually referring to the "Reichen," an adjective used as a noun meaning "the rich." I'm amazed that an assumption was made without bothering to ask for a translation. Russian and Latin language learners also used their knowledge to create signs expressing dissatisfaction with the current administration and its decisions.

I sincerely suggest either learning the language in question or at least asking for a translation before making any inflammatory statements.

It's time that we confront discrimination against the left

Once again I walk into the classroom, quickly scanning for the seat I need, but to no avail. By now I'm used to it though. Stretching my left arm in an awkward fashion for the note pad on the tablet protruding from my right side is just and inconvenience I've had to deal with all my school years. I've learned to stay away from my worst enemy, the Paper Mate erasable pen, and have accepted the fact that the end of each day will inevitably bring me an ink-stained hand. (If my shirt sleeves are long enough, they're sure to bear the brunt of my writing as well.) Blotting and smudging no longer frustrates me. There is nothing I can do about it. Foreign to you? Well, all you lefties sure know what I mean.

With all of this talk about discrimination of minorities on and off campus, on group seems to be always excluded: left-handed people. Granted, the issue of of prejudice towards women, homosexuals, Blacks, and Hispanics is far more serious, but nevertheless, we lefties are forced to conform to the ways of a domineering right-handed world.

Alexandra Lucignani

It began when humans evolved the right hand as the weapon hand. It is believed that a mechanical advantage exists in the right side of the body due to the displacement of its center of gravity. Because of the greater weight of the liver and lungs on the right side, humans tend to be able to balance better on the left foot, thus leaving the right hand free and ready for action.

And so right-handed people have been catered to in everyday life. Just take handshakes for example. From irons to vegetable peelers, scissors and sporting equipment, lefties have had to work their way around implements designed for righties. Exalted in most religions (the sign of the cross is performed by the right hand, for example), the right hand at times symbolizes angelic hierarchy, and the left hand is often thought of as unclean and even satanic. Some countries go so far as to proclaim left-handedness taboo.

The Oxford Dictionary's definition of left begins with the Old English derivation "weak and worthless." In fact, the Merriam-Webster Dictionary defines left-handed as "clumsy, awkward." Roget's Thesaurus' entry for unskillfulness lists "clumsy, awkward, gawkish, tactless,. . .butter-fingered, left-handed. . ." It is this mistaken notion that has caused countless parents to train their children at an early age to write with their right hand. If such early attempts to reinforce right-handedness have been neglected, then kindergarten teachers have been known to take on this responsibility. And why shouldn't they? Lefties, after all, are nothing but rebels, right? The peculiarity of their manual activities sets them apart as objects of curiosity. Therefore, if such an individual can be saved, then go ahead; save such a poor afflicted soul.

The truth of the matter is that left-handed people defy all those misconceptions and ignorant rumors, and are actually quite self-sufficient. Using the right side of their brain, they may sometimes struggle with analytical thinking and spelling, but their creative abilities are endless. People like Paul McCartney, Benjamin Franklin, Charlie Chaplin, Leonardo DaVinci, Lewis Carroll, and Babe Ruth are all proof that lefties aren't the clumsy, awkward rebels some believe them to be.

Supposedly, each classroom on campus should supply at least two or three lefty desks for students. But when I took my English lecture class containing 102 desks, I wasn't surprised to find only one desk that could satisfy my needs. According to an administrative official in the Academic Scheduling office, a new inventory of 292 desks will be arriving shortly. Forty two of those will be left-handed desks. Will us lefties get a chance to use this much needed supply? Probably not. These desks have a tendency to mysteriously vanish from their rooms. But that's okay. We're used to it.

HEY DANIELLE! WHAT ARE YOU DOING AFTER GRADUATION?

SPLASH – A few brave people ride the Red River Rapids, just one of the water rides at Riverside Park.

By DANIELLE DOWLING
Collegian Staff

"It's kind of like sex," I said to my friend Jeff after a most thrilling ride on the Cyclone, a roller coaster that is one of the main attractions at Riverside Park.

Jeff had told me that the Cyclone had been voted one of the best roller coasters in the United States, but I scoffed at him. I'm from New York. I've been to Coney Island, I've been to Great Adventure in New Jersey. How could a silly roller coaster in Agawam, Massachusetts compare to the ones at these amusements parks?

It did and then some. Like most roller coasters, it teases you at first with a seemingly slow climb. The runners squeak. Anticipations run high. Stomachs start to churn. The idiot in front of you raises his hands in the air thereby blocking your vision. You start thinking about life insurance policies. Then it happens. You're dropped 90 feet and absolute tumult ensues as you are knocked and tossed about. You feel you've lost your stomach somewhere, but you comfort yourself with the thought that when you whip back around you'll be able to find it. And when it's over you're dying to do it all over again.

The Cyclone is not the only roller coaster at the park. There's also the Thunderbolt. It's similar to the old wood construction of the Cyclone. It's a hell of a lot of fun, but it does not hold the same thrill as the Cyclone does. You leave the ride with your stomach fully intact. Boo-hiss.

The Black Widow, a steel loop coaster, is a thrilling, but short adventure. First, you head straight on into a loop, turned upside down and then you get to experience the whole thrill again backwards, which is much better.

Now experiencing all of what I considered to be the "thrilling rides," I figured every other ride that I would sample would be anti-climatic. Wrong. The Musik Express, a harmless-looking ride decorated with groovy 70s memorabilia, spins you around in a car so fast that the centripetal force compels you to crush the poor sap who decided to sit on the outside of the car. Poor Jeff.

The Spider served to remind me of that funny song by the Dead Milkmen entitled "Stuart." The narrator of the song tells his friend Stuart about the death of his son, "You know that carnival that comes through town every year/ Well last year they came through with a ride called the Mixer/ The man said keep your head and arms inside the Mixer at all times/ But Bill Jr., he was a dare devil, just like his old man/ He was leaning out saying 'Hey everybody, look at me, look at me!'/ Pow he was decapitated/ They found his head by the snow cone concession."

And then of course what would a trip to an amusement park be without a ride on the ferris wheel. Riverside's ferris wheel, the Colossus, is far from wimpy. It's brings you 150 feet into the air with a breath-taking view of Conneticut and Springfield. Just don't look down. I did and I nearly chucked my cookies.

At the outset of our trip to Riverside, Jeff vowed to me that he would win a stuffed animal at one of those game booths. I don't know. It's a testosterone thing, I wouldn't understand. He tried and he tried and he tried and he blew all of his money, but he failed miserably, which is kind of funny because I won a stuffed Wile E. Coyote on my second try at a bowling game.

Being the largest amusement park in New England, there are many sites to see, rides to enjoy, games to play and food to eat at Riverside. On Friday nights, until May 24, the park will have concerts which will start at 8 p.m. and racing action on Saturday nights at 6 p.m. After 6 p.m., it's half price off the admission, regular admission being $16.95. There are also discount coupons available at Burger King. Right now the park is open Fridays 6 p.m.-12 midnite, Saturdays 11 a.m.-12 midnight and Sundays 11 a.m.-10 p.m. On May 24, the park will resume daily operations.

Located in Agawam, you can get to Riverside from the Amherst-Northampton area by taking I-91 south to exit 3, go over the bridge bearing right for the Agawam exit. Go around the rotary to Route 57 West taking you to Route 159 South on which you will continue south for about two miles. If you love amusement parks, as I do, it's worth the trip.

Throwing Muses bring relevant psychedelia to the Horse

Throwing Muses the way they were before losing their bassist.

By JOHN PURIN
Collegian Correspondent

Boston based alternative rock deities, Throwing Muses will be gracing the Iron Horse this evening, in support of the new Sire release, The Real Ramona. This album, their 5th, was released in February, and is currently scaling the college top 10 charts, so you would be well advised to see them before they get sucked into the mainstream.

At first listen, it might be tempting to dismiss the Muses as a lightweight pop outfit. Their guitars have been known to jangle on occasion, and the band originally formed in Newport, Rhode Island, not exactly the kind of place where street credibility is made. However, if you listen closely, it becomes apparent that they can scream as well as shimmer, and at their most intense, Throwing Muses can be deliciously devastating.

Throwing Muses first came to public attention with their 1986 eponymous debut, released on the British label 4AD, a label most famous for acts like the Cocteau Twins. The Muses, however, were never so ethereal as bands like that, nor were they so English. At the time, the only other American band on the label were fellow Bay Staters The Pixies.

Then as now, most attention was focused on the Muses astounding lead vocalist, guitarist and songwriter Kristin Hersh. Hersh spent a part of her childhood being raised on a commune where she says, "They were on Acid all the time." It is this that makes her vision such a relevant one for today. You could call Throwing Muses' sound psychedelic, but this is an outfit that is mind-bending in a way the current plague of retro-paisley acts could never be. A tune like "Mania," from 1988's Hunkpapa, is just one example of the particularly modern brand of dementia which the Muses explore: "What means hallucinate ?. . .I'm alone here, I'm with you over here, Marshmallow brain. . .rat,rat,rat."

Hersh holds degrees in psychology and philosophy, but the Throwing Muses are never too intellectual or artsy for its own sake. Instead, they are primal, savage, throbbing, although they never lose their best pop instincts or melodicism. Any Muses album would keep you enthralled if you were alone in a dark room, but they also can help you thrash your way across a dance floor.

Despite Hersh's enormous talent and appeal, Throwing Muses are far from being a one-woman show. They are a band in the best sense of the word, and each member contributes to their rich, rambling, but tight sound. Guitarist Tanya Donelly has been a friend of Hersh's since childhood, and has contributed a song or two to each of their albums. Her style makes it obvious that the two have

Jesus Jones gyrates, invigorates SUB crowd

By ADRIEN MATT
Collegian Staff

Jesus Jones
Student Union Ballroom
Sunday, April 21

Upon hearing that Soho was cancelled, I was ready to bag the show and head home. Needless to say, I'm real glad I stuck around. Jesus Jones has an incredible stage presence.

Although the keyboards and some of the drums were canned, they created an invigorating "live" experience, proving that if you haven't seen a band live, you haven't seen shit. Even one of the stagehands who had "just flown in" thought Jesus Jones was the balls, "The records don't do them shit for justice — you've got to see them live."

He was right.

London's Jesus Jones attracted a heterogeneous crowd — the group ranged from Hippy-chicked Orchard Hill crunchies to Kodiak-dipping Southwest meatheads. The Smithies and Hamp-sters ventured out from their protective mansions in hopes of seeing Hippy Chick and instead got Baba Yaga's Hippy Ska.

Unfortunately, Soho cancelled on Saturday, much to the dismay of fans and the Union Program Council who had to offer refunds for those who wanted them. Soho's bassist Tim Brinkhurst was suffering from a nervous breakdown and they had tried to do the show Friday night without him but, for obvious reasons, felt the need to cancel at UMass.

Baba Yaga, in their usual unassuming attire, opened for Jesus Jones, working hard to get the crowd into a frenzy. It was the first time I'd seen them on such a large stage and they actually seemed comfortable with it. The crowd responded to Baba Yaga's psychedelic version of King Missile's "Jesus is Way Cool" with bouts and fits of cheering and laughter.

A "Jesus" song was an appropriate tranknown each other for a long time, but she also has a powerful voice of her own. A song like "Dragonhead" reminds us that there's often little difference between a lullaby and a dirge. Drummer David Narcizo keeps things moving without being too flashy, and they are touring with a new bassist who shuffles and slinks in the best Muses' tradition.

It is difficult to compare their sound, which is dense but never overwrought, to anyone else. At different times they evoke everyone from Bonnie Raitt to Nena Hagen, and quite a few people in-between. They also have affinities with another Massachusetts native with a gift for powerful language, poet Sylvia Plath. Like her, this is a band with a knack for showing the beauty which exists in the midst of the most intense pain. And after all, that's what muses are for.

Throwing Muses will play the Iron Horse tonight.

Five UMass bands battle

By KEN HASKINS
Collegian Correspondent

Spending another night in front of the Movie Channel? Wouldn't you rather be out caressing your brain with a bold mixture of music that includes blues, progressive and classic rock? Then turn off your television set and come to the Battle of the Bands tonight at Katina's.

Put on by Sigma Phi Epsilon as a benefit for the Amherst Boys and Girls Club, the doors open at 8 p.m. for an 18-and-over show that includes: Borderland, Dangerous Papers, Bongos to Circus and Free Beer Experience.

The battle to be fought by these bands will be judged by four people: Christina Rozetti, a WMUA DJ; Pamela Fallon, assistant production manager for Pink Floyd and Van Halen; Laura Goldbaum from April's Playboy Women of Women's Colleges and John Tate of the Minutemen basketball team.

The event is sponsored by Guitar Academy and Showroom Inc. of Agawam, and there will be door prizes by Pizza Hut. Tickets for the battle are $5 each and can be bought today on the Campus Center Concourse and at the Katina's box office.

The stage is set up for a night of good music of a wide variety. Borderland, a local seven-piece group that is no newcomer to benefit performances, will tease your soul with their mixture of blues-rock, while Bongos to Circus puts forth a more progressive style with a number of their own titles.

Dangerous Papers, a band that has played the Hatch and many local parties, boasts a number of hard driving classic rock tunes with a little horn work as well.

The tunes of Free Beer Experience are influenced by the sounds of blues, reggae and rock to create a world beat style of music with the philosophy of having a good time.

Don't worry about having to look at the bus schedule to get there, because there will be free buses to and from UMass every 10 minutes from the Haigis Mall.

Putting on the benefit in response to budget cuts to the Amherst Boys and Girls Club, Sigma Phi Epsilon hopes to make this into an annual event.

The Battle of the Bands will take place at Katina's tonight at 8 p.m. Tickets are $5.

sition word-wise but not music-wise as Jesus Jones exploded with energy on stage, opening with "Never Enough" off their first album, Liquidizer. The keyboardist gyrated convulsions of pure music satisfaction throughout the set, much to the delight of the crowd. Even the soundpeople were bouncing to the music. And when your jeans vibrate to the pounding bass, you know they're doing their job.

"Victoria" was the closest thing they have to a ballad and "Right Here, Right Now" was by far the "poppiest" song they played. "International Bright Young Thing" was the crowd-pleaser of the night, second only to "Right Here" — at least this portion of the crowd was pleased.

DOONESBURY
By GARRY TRUDEAU

THE UNIT DID GOOD, RAY. YOU'D HAVE BEEN PROUD. WE KILLED TANKS OVER A MILE AND A HALF AWAY, AT NIGHT— TANKS THAT NEVER SAW US! AFTER ALL THE BUILD-UP, IT WAS A MAJOR HIGH!
FOR A WHILE, ANYWAYS, THEN THE ENGINEERS STARTED COMING BACK AND TELLING US ABOUT THE THOUSANDS OF BODIES THEY WERE BURYING WITH BULLDOZERS. THOUSANDS! I DUNNO, IT JUST MADE ME FEEL KINDA SICK.
HEY, HEAR ABOUT NANCY REAGAN AND SINATRA?
YEAH. ONE OF THE REFUGEES TOLD ME.

THE FAR SIDE
By GARY LARSON

"Don't make any erratic movements, Miss Halloway. . . . Not only is the truculent nature of this species amply documented, but, as you can discern for yourself, the little suckers can really jump."

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Never engage in a battle of wits with an unarmed person."

YOU GET TWO DEMERITS FOR SINGING THE CLUB ANTHEM BEFORE IT WAS ON THE AGENDA!
WELL YOU GET FIVE DEMERITS FOR NOT TAKING OFF YOUR HAT DURING ITS HALLOWED REFRAIN!
YOU CAN'T GIVE ME DEMERITS! I OUTRANK YOU.
HA! YOU'RE JUST A FIGUREHEAD! YOUR DUTIES ARE CEREMONIAL! I HAVE ALL THE REAL RESPONSIBILITIES!
WHAT?! I'M DICTATOR-FOR-LIFE! I HAVE TEN TIMES THE IMPORTANCE OF A LOWLY FIRST TIGER! A HUNDRED TIMES! A MILLION TIMES!
IF YOU'RE SO IMPORTANT, HOW COME YOU SING THE SOPRANO PART OF OUR ANTHEM?
THAT'S JUST TILL MY VOICE CHANGES!

Today Steve said he needed to buy a winter coat.
I wasn't doing anything else so I went out shopping for one with him.
We went to a few stores and Steve tried on a whole bunch of coats.
He didn't like any of them and said he'd have to go looking some more later.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your employment status will be looking up today. Stay close to the phone. A fatally pet gives off some bad odors, but you love it anyway.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your employment outlook is bleak. Stay away from happy Aries people. Perhaps further education is on the horizon. Watch out for ugly professors.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your day is going to be absolutely perfect. Have some drinks with old friends. Avoid falling from very high places. Stay clear of the courts.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Hug a massage therapist today. Your normal bad temper needs a break. Watch out for wild skateboarders. Cowobunga!

LEO (July 23-Aug 22): If you don't put the horoscope in the typists' box, the repercussions will be great. Meet the man of your dreams, but only if you do your job correctly.

VIRGO (Aug 23-Sept 22): You are in complete control of everything. Tell your bosses to take a hike, and go for the gusto. Remember, you are perfect. You might want to hug a janitor.

LIBRA (Sept 23-Oct 22): Take a break today. You know you do too much homework – why not try and plan a romantic weekend for your honey? Maybe make dinner or actually go out somewhere.

SCORPIO (Oct 23-Nov 21): Stop being mean to the people who tag-team wrestle in the apartment above you. If you tag-team in your apartment, take a break. You are not being very nice.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov 22-Dec 21): You will have a dream about dancing green elephants. You will eat food today, and visit the bathroom a couple of times.

CAPRICORN (Dec 22-Jan 19): Avoid wrecking your kneecaps as a particularly bad aspect of Saturn occurs in your sixth house today. Beware of munchkins.

AQUARIUS (Jan 20-Feb 18): There are people out to get you – stay in your room until Saturn leaves the sixth house. Don't try to ask anyone out on a date; you'll get burned.

PISCES (Feb 19-March 20): Watch out for computer viruses and the second house of Plato – you'll either get scratched or very sick. Other people think you smell.

LOOK AT ALL THE DOORS YOUR COLLEGE DEGREE WILL OPEN.

Get $500 to use as cash back or a down payment. Plus pre-approved credit for qualified college graduates.

After years of midterms and final exams, your New England Ford Dealer doesn't think buying a car should be another difficult test.

That's why we offer students graduating between October 1, 1989 and December 31, 1991 the Ford College Graduate Purchase Program.

Four-year college grads, grad school graduates and grad school students are eligible for $500 cash back and pre-approved credit on every 1990, '91, and '92 Ford car and light truck in stock.

Plus, to make buying a new Ford even easier, we can show you other special incentives that may apply.

So visit your New England Ford Dealers. Because, as you travel down the road to success, there's one thing you should know.

It's easier if you drive.

to third on a wild pitch and was brought home by a Kuchinskas single.

In the nightcap Claffey, the A-10 Pitcher of the Week, shut down Penn State as she pitched her 11th shutout of the season. Claffey (12-4) allowed six hits, and base runners in every inning except the first and seventh, but was still able to hold Penn State scoreless.

In the fourth with runners on first and second and none out, Claffey got two big strike outs and a pop-up to escape the inning unscathed. In the fifth, first baseman Bonnie Schilling made a great line drive catch and doubled up a runner to end a Penn State threat.

"I am pleased with Darlene's performance today," Sortino said. "The umps were not calling her curve ball for a strike and without that pitch it becomes very difficult for her to pitch a shutout. She gave up a lot of contact but she held a good team scoreless."

In the second inning UMass got on the board when Aprile knocked in Jen Miller with a sacrifice fly. Peggy Bush, who went 2-for-3 in both games, had a two-run double in the fifth to round out the UMass scoring.

UMass, who just missed making the Top 20 this week by a few points, turns it's attention to rival Connecticut. UConn is the only team to defeat UMass since spring break, a 23-game span. The game will be played at 3 p.m. Thursday on Totman Field.

■ baseball

"Our leading pitcher, Scott Pudlo, won't be pitching, which is lucky for UMass," Winchell said. "Amherst College usually wins this game. In the last 10 years, UMass has won two or three times."

The Lord Jeffs are led by senior co-captain Neal Huntington, who is batting .500 with two home runs and 26 runs batted in. Freshman David George is hitting .453 with 21 RBI and John Sgroi is hitting .403 with 2 home runs and 26 RBI.

Amherst is No. 3 in New England Division III baseball, behind Brandeis and Southern Maine. Extra Innings: Amherst College played Williams College in the first intercollegiate game in Pittsfield, Mass., 100 plus years ago.

John Cerutti is an Amherst College grad and keeps in touch with his collegiate coach Bill Thurston who visited him during the Lord Jeff's spring trip to Southcentral Florida. He currently pitches for the Detroit Tigers. He was released by the Toronto Blue Jays in the offseason.

UMass had the second-worst fielding percentage in the Atlantic-10 Conference last week. However, the Minutemen have performed flawlessly in their last three games, which is certain to boost their ranking.

■ women's track

LaFreniere said she would like to see Ozzolek raise her personal best and set a new record for the school.

The track will swarm with over 20 runners per heat going against each other. The 4x800-meter relay will be headed by Lee Ann Ambrose. Kelly Liljeblad will run the second leg, senior co-captain Cathy Crocker will run third and Dana Smith will be the anchor for the team. The team is looking to set a time of 9 minutes, 7 seconds, which would be a new UMass record.

Ambrose has been switched to the front of the team because she has the fastest 100-meter speed. LaFreniere explained the race as a "mad rush."

"Because there are so many runners, everyone is standing shoulder to shoulder at the start," she said. "Once the race begins, it is very easy to trip and fall, lose the baton or just get pushed to the back of the pack. You just hold on for dear life and sprint out ahead."

Ambrose and Smith have a tough day ahead of them as they are both scheduled to run the 4x400-meter relay also. Ambrose will again start and Smith will anchor; Lennice Johnson and Leanne Swartz will run the second and third legs, respectively. LaFreniere said she would like to see a time of 3:52 for this event.

The size and level of auch competition should push the team to outstanding performances, according to members of the squad. Upon their return from these races, they will be off to the Brown Invitationals on Sunday, April 28, which will be their last open meet before the New England Championships May 12-13.

Minutewomen stifle Penn St., make Atlantic 10 history

By DAN WETZEL
Collegian Staff

Yesterday the University of Massachusetts softball team did more than just sweep Penn State, they made history.

By sweeping the Lady Lions 2-0, 3-0, the Minutewomen finished off their Atlantic 10 Conference play with a flawless 12-0 record. This is the first time in league history that a team has ever accomplished this feat.

However, UMass (24-9) did not roll over Penn State the way they have the rest of the conference.

"I wasn't exactly sitting around relaxed during the game, these were two tough ones," said coach Elaine Sortino. "It was exactly what I expected from Penn State."

The Lady Lions had been 8-1 in league play before meeting up with the UMass pitching duo of Darlene Claffey and Holly Aprile. Claffey and Aprile dominated the day not allowing one Penn State player to cross the plate.

In game one Aprile, A-10 Player of the Week, took the mound and improved her record to 12-5. Aprile struck six and allowed only two hits.

"Holly pitched very well. She was getting the big pitches over the plate when she needed them," Sortino said. "She did a great job today."

The offensive heroics were provided by Sherri Kuchinskas and Barbara Marean. In the fourth inning, Marean singled and was knocked in by a Kuchinskas double. In the sixth it was more of the same as Marean doubled, went

The Minutewomen (24-9) swept Penn State 2-0, 3-0, yesterday at Totman Field, creating the first flawless (12-0) Atlantic 10 Conference record in league history. Since their spring trip to California, Connecticut is the only team to foil the softball team in that 23-game span.

Central Conn. stops streak, Amherst hosts today

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts' baseball team rode into a town called New Britain, Conn., but after losing a gut-wrenching 1-0 game to Central Connecticut, it might as well have been Heartbreak City.

Right-handed pitcher Jim Telgheder (3-2) pitched seven admirable innings of four-hit ball, but one wrong pitch cost the Minutemen the game.

The UMass offense only mustered four hits themselves, certainly not up to their usual standards.

In the bottom of the seventh inning, Central Conn. first baseman Patrick Smith led off and hit a Telgheder pitch for a home run.

"[When he hit it] I had a feeling we could come back," Telgheder said. "I thought they'd need more than that to win."

Telgheder could not have pitched much better, as he walked none and struck out three.

"I felt pretty good today," he said. "I had good control and the defense helped out a lot."

Telgheder retired the next three batters in order with no problem. Rob Graziano pitched a perfect eighth inning for UMass.

The Minutemen had their best scoring opportunity in the first inning. With one out, Steve Corradi drew a walk and Ian Torres singled.

Corradi, however was tagged out at third. Brian Bright cracked an opposite field double, but Torres only advanced to third.

Derek Dana, perhaps the hottest hitter on the team right now, struck out swinging to end the inning.

UMass never mounted another strong threat against the Blue Devils, who were led by a trio of Chris Hooker, Todd Martin, the winning pitcher, and Rick Bottalico, who picked up the save, on the hill. The loss breaks UMass' three-game winning streak, which ties their longest of the year.

The team travels to beautiful downtown Amherst tomorrow to battle their crosstown rivals, the Amherst College Lord Jeffs.

The Lord Jeffs were humiliated last year 17-3 by UMass, in what Amherst Sports Information Director Andy Winchell called "an aberration."

Mario Guaglianone (1) and Mark Millon (3) are two Gorillas that the Harvard Crimson will have to contend with in today's 3 p.m. lacrosse match in Cambridge. Millon has a team-high 25 goals while Guaglianone has netted eight goals and two assists.

Harvard to host Gorillas

By ADRIEN MATT
Collegian Staff

With a 2-7 record there's not a whole lot of hope for a playoff berth but there's always the possibility of an upset . . . Today the Harvard Crimson will host the University of Massachusetts lacrosse team (6-2) at 3 p.m.

Offensive prowess will be the key for a game between two teams who have had a rough time of generating consistent offense. Although Harvard has lost seven games, the number of points those games have been decided by is under 20.

Saturday they played to a nerve-wrecking 7-6 decision against No. 5 Princeton. They upset No. 16 Penn 12-11 and eeked out a 12-10 win over Boston College. The Crimson sit at 1-3 in the Ivy League and have yet to face Ivy foes Yale (No. 17) and Dartmouth as well as a No. 18 New Hampshire squad. Last year they were No. 2 at this time. So while postseason play is pipedream, a close game could be reality.

"Traditionally, they do very well," UMass coach Ted Garber said of Harvard's stick work.

"They continue to play a wide open game," Harvard coach Scott Anderson said of the play he expects from UMass. "It comes down to ball control. They've been very inconsistent."

Senior attackman Mick Cavouti leads the Crimson in points with 18 goals and 15 assists while senior midfielder Tim Reilly is not far behind with 12 goals and 19 assists.

"Every game is a challenge in that we're not generating the offense we need," said Anderson. "It's frustrating knowing we're not generating any offense."

This could also prove to be a game of goalies. UMass' Ted Kellerman and Harvard's Chris Miller match up well on paper. Kellerman has a goals against average of 8 and saves percentage of .638, while Miller has an average of 9.75 goals scored per game and a .622 saves percentage.

Since the arrival of junior transfer Kevin O'Connor, UMass' strength has been winning faceoffs, taking over 50 percent possessions. Harvard mirrors UMass' numbers in faceoff possessions, winning 53 percent.

By contrast, the Gorilla's man-up situation has been traditionally strong but only recently have they been able to capitalize. UMass is 7-for-36 during man-up this season while Harvard has a percentage of .375.

For the first time this season, Jim McAleavey leads the Gorillas in points with 10 goals and 22 assists while Mark Millon leads the team with 25 goals and Jim Kushner is not far behind with 12 goals.

Stick Check: UMass grad ('89) Scott Hiller is in his first year of coaching at Harvard as an assistant. Anderson said he adds a "new dimension" to the team.

Track makes Penn Relays

By BRIAN AGUIAR
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts women's track team leaves today for Philadelphia, Pa., for the annual Penn Relay competition.

Top athletes from across the country will compete for the event, including one individual and two relay teams. It will start Thursday and go through Saturday afternoon.

Diane Ozzolek will be representing UMass in the hammer throw.

Ozzolek has already broken the school record this year with a distance of 151 feet, 6 inches. Out of 40 throwers, Ozzolek will compete against an elite 10 competitors. She is ranked seventh among them.

She will meet throwers from St. John's, Army, Navy and other top schools. Assistant coach Jim Giroux, who works with Ozzolek, said he hopes to see her do well.

"I hope she will rise to the occassion because I know she is a competitor," said Giroux. Head coach Julie

Israeli consul: Regional cooperation a must

By ALISON BUCKHOLTZ
Collegian Staff

Middle Eastern stability and regional cooperation form the cornerstone of Israel's hopes for post-war peace, the consul of Israel for New England said last night at the Hillel House.

Speaking in conjunction with Israel Independence Day, Consul Itzhak Oren discussed the new order in the Middle East and outlined a four-point plan to achieve stability in the region.

The points, Palestinian and Arab recognition of Israeli statehood, increased arms control, and regional democratization are necessary to achieve peace, Oren said.

"The war in the Gulf was a moment of truth for the Palestinians and the Israelis," he said. "Israel chose out of consideration to the coalition not to respond to attacks. We were ready to pay a very heavy price."

The result gives Palestinians "an opportunity to realize that Israel is there to stay. If Palestinians have more readiness to take Israel as a fact, serious negotiations can begin," he said.

Along the same lines, the 19 Arab countries that do not formally recognize Israel "should begin to deal directly with Israel," Oren said. "Otherwise, they are in a state of war with a nonexistent country. But there is less and less incentive for this recognition because there is no American pressure for it."

Reductions in arms sales from the West to the Middle East are also necessary for stability, but less likely to occur, Oren said.

As a result, democracy in the region remains his highest hope. "Israel is the only democracy in the Middle East. We are dealing with monarchies and radical, totalitarian regimes," he said, referring first to Jordan and second, to Syria. "This does not allow any chance of stability."

Although "Saddam Hussein is still a major threat to the entire gulf, Syria is the big winner," Oren said. "They led the coalition, and are back in the family of nations."

Financial rewards for Syria are also forthcoming, Oren said, warning that within two months European countries will be "waiting in line to sell arms to Assad. But he is just as dangerous as Hussein, if more clever and pragmatic," Oren said, adding that Syria is "swallowing Lebanon piece by piece."

The Palestinians, however, are the biggest losers in the crisis. "It's another chapter in their tragedy," he said. "They will always go with whoever promises to deliver. They never missed an opportunity to miss an opportunity."

At the core of the Palestinian tragedy, he said, "is their leadership, incapable of settling for anything less than the maximum. Nasser, Assad at one time, Hussein — now the Palestinians have lost their financial support in the Emirates, and they lost in Western public opinion."

Israel is "still committed to the peace proposal of May 1989," Oren said. "But it was very hard when we watched Palestinians dancing in the streets when Israel was hit [by Scuds] and holding signs saying 'We want chemicals.'"

"Israeli policy is that everything is negotiable," he said. "The issue is not land for peace, but security for peace. When you talk negotiations, never say never."

Reporter: Nicaragua faces big problems in economy

The Associated Press

BOSTON — When the three young, uniformed Nicaraguans pointed their assault rifles at him, news correspondent Stephen Kinzer thought fast.

Stammering in Spanish, he babbled like a confused tourist who by sheer accident had wandered into a secret contra camp in Honduras. As a photographer silently snapped pictures, he turned away, slipped into his car, threw it into reverse and drove like hell backwards.

By escaping that day in 1983, he became the first reporter to bring back hard evidence that opponents of the leftist Sandinista government, the contras, were launching attacks with American weapons from across the border.

For the rest of the decade, aid for the contras became a hotly debated topic dividing the nation. Kinzer's dispatches for The New York Times made him one of the most significant journalists covering Central America, according to Esquire magazine.

Kinzer recounts his discovery of the contra camp in his new book, "Blood of Brothers: Life and War in Nicaragua," which describes his 10 years covering that small country.

It was only a year ago Thursday that an era of turmoil ended when Violeta Chamorro was installed as president of Nicaragua following the ouster of the Sandinistas in a free election. But "it seems like a century ago," said Kinzer, 39, who now covers Germany for the Times.

Fresh from a return visit to Managua, Kinzer said in an interview Monday that Nicaragua's economy remains in ruins from the contra war, and former soldiers

Brit soldiers begin to protect Kurds in Iraq

The Associated Press

ZAKHO, Iraq — More than 300 British marine commandos entered the northern city of Zakho today and began protecting Kurdish refugees from Iraqi police. The White House said the police were hindering relief efforts.

Two British officers said the United States had given the Iraqis 24 hours, or until Friday morning to leave the town, but a U.S. military spokesman denied that an ultimatum had been given.

The allied show of force came as President Saddam Hussein held talks with Kurdish rebel leaders. Rebel sources said Saddam offered new terms for granting autonomy to Iraq's 3.5 million Kurds.

At 1:30 p.m. (6:30 a.m. EDT) three companies of British commandos landed by helicopter and took up key positions in the northern, southern and eastern parts of this town, near where U.S. troops are setting up a secure haven for tens of thousands of Kurdish refugees.

The commandos reported encountering no resistance from the Iraqis, who were still patrolling Zakho today despite US demands that they stay clear of the relief effort.

The British soldiers will patrol the town along with other allied troops. Fear of the Iraqis has made some refugees reluctant to move out of their mountain refugees along the Turkish border.

"The Iraqis were given 48 hours to get out," said Capt. Jeff Mason, whose 100-member company took over a three-story building that belonged to the Iraqi army. He said the U.S. military had given the ultimatum within the last 24 hours — meaning the Iraqis had to be out by Friday morning.

"A deadline was imposed and if by that time they haven't withdrawn we can assume military action will continue," said British Maj. Bob Fanshawe, a spokesman for the Royal Marines.

The Mohawk past revisited

Speaker tells of the tribe's founder, explains current struggle

By RIC OLIVEIRA
Collegian Staff

Alex McComber of the Kahnawake Mohawk Survival School related last night the intricacies of the Mohawk past and the present struggle for freedom, particularly in Quebec.

McComber began his talk with a prayer, offering greetings to the Sun, the Earth, the Moon, and all the people gathered in the crowded room, filled with more than 150 students and faculty. He then began to speak of the past, drawing a time line which reached before European Migration.

"Our Ancestors always spoke of this land here as where we originated, there was no talk of the voyage over glaciers and ice. That is all other peoples interpretation of where we originated," he said.

McComber described the Iroquois Confederacy and its founding Father Deganiwidah, who Mohawks call "the Peacemaker." The Peacemaker, who McComber said was originaly a Huron, voyaged in a stone canoe to the Mohawks "either because we had the hardest heads or because we were the most ferocious," joked McComber.

"He united the five large separate nations of the northeast of America into a union which became a tremendous power in pre-USA America," he said.

McComber also spoke of the Matrilineal heritage — the female heritage — of the Mohawks. "In our culture the women hold the title of the land, not on paper but in the power which they have as women in continuing on our heritage," he said. "The women chose our leaders, they look at a man's strengths and weaknesses and his ability to communicate the desires of the people."

McComber also spoke of the first contact from the Mohawk view and the treaties agreed to by the French, Dutch and the English. The treaty was in the form of a Wampum Belt, a belt made of shells which represented the different backgrounds of signers.

It also represented the two cultures, each in its own vessel traveling on parallel paths upon Turtle Island, their name for North America. McComber said the Mohawk people have never broken the treaty and now ask that Canada respects that history.

Many events led up to the current Canadian-Mohawk crisis, he said, describing the Mohawk's struggle to retain their land there. In 1955, Canada built the St. Lawrence Seaway, which runs through the Kahnawake Reserve and "raped" the Mohawks of their ancestry, he said. "The river had always been a part of being Mohawk from the days of the Peace Maker up until that point," he said. "It was then that the young people began to grow angry.

"Then there was also the Civil Rights movement of the States, and as we watched the African Americans stand up for their rights something sparked, and that spark grew in the early Seventies with the American Indian Movement and with our own restructuring of our community" he said.

Starting then, all the Kanienkehakeh (Mohawks) began to feel a pride in who they were, McComber said. In 1978, the Kahnawake Survival School for Mohawks was established. The school has grown into a $5 million campus and is responsible for resurrecting the Mohawk language and culture.

The school was formed after Quebec passed bill 101 which called for all people to speak and be taught in French, he said. "We then decided that we were no longer going to allow the foreign government to control our education and our lives."

VACANT — An empty building stands on the grounds of the Northampton State Hospital. Hospitals for the mentally ill have been severely hit with budget cuts in recent years.

On anniversary, activists decry lack of AIDS-related funding

By CECI CONNOLLY
Associated Press

BOSTON — Marking the 10-year anniversary of the first reported case of AIDS, activists accused Gov. William Weld, President Bush and other officials of budgetary decisions that do little to help people with AIDS.

"We have an epidemic here that's been underfunded and underattended," said Larry Kessler, executive director of the AIDS Action Committee.

On April 24, 1981, an infectious disease expert in San Francisco called the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta to report a new disease later named Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome. Since then, at least 175,000 Americans have developed AIDS; 3,500 of them in Massachusetts.

"I'd much rather be here celebrating the end of the epidemic," said Kessler, also a member of the National Commission on AIDS. "Unfortunately, we are in the early days of the epidemic."

In the first 10 years, 112,187 people have died from AIDS. Kessler predicted about the same number will die in Massachusetts alone in the next 10 years.

He said Weld has broken his most basic campaign promise.

"He has most certainly caused pain," Kessler said, referring to Weld's campaign mantra that his budget cuts would not hurt those who are most needy. "He is proposing more illness, more sickness, more death."

In the first budget Weld has prepared since becoming governor, he recommended increasing the AIDS fund by $2 million for a total of $20 million. But at a news conference in front of the State House, AIDS activists complained he also has proposed cutting several million dollars from other accounts that would serve people with AIDS. "I am a 28-year-old woman with full-blown AIDS," said Keri Duran, a member of the radical gay-rights group, ACT UP. "The proposed budget cuts will be the last nail in my coffin."

"Weld's deficit mentality hasn't worked on the economy, nor will it work on people with AIDS," Duran said.

Among the areas Weld has proposed cutting or eliminating were universal health care, Medicaid, housing subsidies and money for addiction treatment — all directly or indirectly affecting people who test positive for HIV, the virus that can lead to AIDS.

"I'm sure there has been more than $2 million worth of social service and human service cuts," said administration spokesman Joseph Landolfi. "But the AIDS account is one of only three or four Gov. Weld specifically targeted for an increase."

Kessler, an AIDS activist known throughout the country, said national leadcers also have failed to make the deadly disease a priority.

"George Bush has only spoken about [AIDS] once in his term," Kessler said.

Kessler acknowledged that Bush has not given speeches on a number of equally dreadful diseases. But he said AIDS needs special attention from political leaders.

"It's still loaded with stigma," he said.

Cult recruiters target 'people in transition,' speakers say

By LISA VESHECCO
Collegian Correspondent

Using strong pressure tactics, cults attempt to undermine people's self-confidence and control love, sexuality, time and activities in the name of a god, a faith, or a social or political cause, according to two ex-followers who warned students about cult recruiters last week in John Quincy Adams Residence Hall.

In the United States there are more than 3,000 cults with over three million members, said Lee Anne Pellegrini, who spent 10 years with a cult and now works with 'Focus,' a Boston-based support and information group.

Pellegrini said she experienced "phobia installation" and fear tactics used by cult members during the "indoctrination process," where a person's belief systems are changed to fit a cult's agenda and philosophy.

"I didn't know I was brainwashed," Pellegrini said. "I did know they didn't like it when I asked questions or when I thought on my own," she said, referring to cult leaders.

Mike Garvey, a former member of the cult, 'Transcendental Meditation,' who also works with Focus, identified four types of cults: religious, political, commercial, and therapeutic.

Cults often identify themselves as alternative religions protected under the First Amendment, he said. The different cults usually use the same types of recruiting techniques, he said.

Cults target young people and "people in transition," Garvey said, and hit college campuses "particularly during finals when stress is likely to cause one's level of critical thinking to be at a low point." People mourning the death of a loved one or suffering a similar tragedy are also particularly vulnerable to cults, he said.

Cult philosophy usually dictates that "the means justify the ends and because God has said, this justifies what one has done," Pellegrini said. Cults take "one out of the realm of the human and into the world of the superhuman" Pellegrini said.

Garvey said cult leaders try to persuade followers to adopt a "save the world" mentality by creating a negative world view.

"We were told we were responsible for the assassination attempt on President Reagan by John Hinckley," Garvey said.

The group was told: "we didn't meditate enough," and that they also were responsible for the fall of the Berlin Wall, he said. Cult leaders want people to think they can obtain incredible amounts of power by participating in cult rituals, he said. Leaders sometimes have members chant, speak in tongues, and meditate continuously to get members to spend time by themselves, he said. The use of meditation techniques, non-stop activity, and poor diet habits all work to induce dissociation, he said.

Garvey also warned students about several mind control techniques, including what he called the "love bombing" period that accompanies the recruiting process.

Cults teach feeling over thinking, a polarized world view, and thought-stopping techniques to prohibit critical thinking, he said. The group's needs take priority over the individual's, he said.

"You may not know the name of an organization for several weeks, months, or years," he said.

Outlining ways to avoid falling into cults, Garvey said people must maintain control over their lives and build healthy levels of self-esteem. "The development of critical

UMass hoop players to join Haigis Hoopla this weekend

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

Organizers of Haigis Hoopla, the 3-on-3 basketball festival scheduled for this weekend, strengthened the menu by adding John Tate and Rafer Giles, co-captains of the UMass basketball team, to the list of participants.

The event, which has drawn more than 100 teams from colleges and high schools across the Pioneer Valley, will feature food, music, and prizes, including Spalding basketballs, National Basketball Association hats, 'Haigis Hoopla' sweatshirts, and various gift certificates, for the winners.

Players must register tomorrow during the slam dunk contest and three-point shooting contests, which start at 6 p.m. at the Curry Hicks Cage. Registrants will receive game assignments and a bag filled with a T-shirt and various gifts from the Hoopla sponsors.

Giles and Tate will be on hand to judge the dunk contest and later, Giles will square off against the winner of the three-point shooting contest.

"All of the fan support we've gotten over the last three seasons has been tremendous," Tate said in a press statement. "It feels good to be able to give back to the community after they have applauded me for four years."

The 3-on-3 tournament starts at 9 a.m. Saturday on Haigis Mall in front of the Fine Arts Center, according to Brett Weinroth, a junior sports management major and organizer of the event. The tournament will wind up on Sunday, he said.

Tournament participants will compete in one of four divisions, based on their playing ability, said Peter Thomsen, the tournament director and sport marketing instructor.

During the tournament, a free-throw contest for participants and passers-by will be held, Weinroth said. Two winners will thinking skills to counter high pressure tactics" is important, he said.

Leaving is difficult, because cult leaders want people to believe that they cannot survive without the cult and instill in followers a tremendous amount of fear and guilt, Pellegrini said.

But there are support systems available, he said.

People can seek help at the Cult Awareness Network, (CAN) and find information by reading books, such as "Combating Cult Mind Control," by Steve Hassan, he said.

receive free American Airlines tickets to New Orleans, he said.

Food and drink will be sold and WHMP-FM radio will broadcast live from the event.

The tournament is being held to raise money for a scholarship to UMass for a student in need from Hampden, Hampshire or Franklin counties, Weinroth said.

Giles and Tate will also compete in the 3-on-3 tournament with two other UMass basketball players: Ben Grodski and Matt Anderson.

While this team, whose members helped lead the Minutemen to the National Invitation Tournament Final Four, looks like the one to beat, "My Team," led by former Northeastern and NBA player Perry Moss poses a formidable challenge.

are restive.

Nicaraguan President Chamorro, a longtime Sandinista opponent, has "yet to get a grip on the economic situation," said Kinzer.

Nonetheless, "Nicaragua has more freedom now than ever in its history. There is true freedom of the press for the first time in history," he said.

"For the first time in the last 15 years, Nicaragua's principal problem is not political," he said. "The economic problems are overwhelming."

"Many of the former contra fighters and many of the former Sandinista soldiers are waiting for a little piece of land and a little bag of seeds so they can start farming. It was promised to them. They've been waiting too."

He added, "It's really a very small investment for the world to put into Nicaragua in order to prevent this kind of tragedy from happening again."

A country of only three million people, Nicaragua needs both American aid and loans from world lending organizations, Kinzer said.

But the world's attention is elsewhere. After Chamorro's election, Nicaragua dropped off the front pages, something Kinzer calls 'outrageous.'

"We're not protecting our investment in Nicaragua," said Kinzer, citing millions of dollars the Reagan administration poured — illegally and legally — into the contra effort.

"If Mrs. Chamorro is not able to build the country economically, the time is going to come when Nicaraguans are going to start saying, "democracy didn't bring us any benefits," he said.

Kinzer, who grew up on Cape Cod, spoke of the difficulty of covering a country that once aroused such heated passions here. His book detailed the mistakes — often tragically fatal — made by the Sandinista guerillas-turned-bureaucrats.

Study: Different treatments, same results

The Associated Press

BOSTON — Terminally ill cancer patients treated at a clinic that empahasizes unproven treatments fare no better — and no worse — than people who get chemotherapy and other standard care, a new study concludes.

The study examined whether desperately ill cancer patients live longer and better if they receive unconventional treatments, like those offered at many clinics around the country.

They compared the outcome of people treated at one of these centers, the Livingston-Wheeler Medical Clinic in San Diego, with patients who got routine care at the University of Pennsylvania Cancer Center.

"Our study showed that regardless of whether they receive unorthodox or conventional treatment, these patients will die just as soon," said Dr. Barrie R. Cassileth, a psychologist from the University of Pennsylvania who directed the research.

The researchers said they were surprised to find that the quality of patients' remaining months of life was no better at the San Diego clinic, even though some of them avoided the rigors of chemotherapy and other hospital treatment.

They measured pain, appetite, breathing difficulties, psychological state and other aspects of living and found that those entering the clinic were already worse off than people at the university cancer center. People at the clinic continued to have a worse quality of life according to comparisons done every two months until their deaths.

Median survival for both groups was 15 months. Cassileth said this points out the failure of conventional treatment for advanced cancer.

"A difficult result was to face, as we frequently fail to do, the hard fact that conventional medicine, with all the toxicities it engenders, is not helping people live any longer and often makes their lives less pleasant," she said.

At the Livingston-Wheeler clinic, a woman who declined to identify herself said clinic officials would not comment on the study.

The study was based on a comparison of 78 pairs of patients, matched for age, sex, race, diagnosis and duration of disease, who received the two forms of care. The results were published in Thursday's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine.

Patients at the Livingston-Wheeler clinic are treated with vaccines and coffee enemas and put on strict diets consisting mostly of raw vegetables. The regimen is based on the unproven theory that cancer is caused by microbe.

Cassileth said the clinic's founder, Dr. Virginia Livingston-Wheeler, who died recently, agreed to participate in the study because she wanted to document her strong belief that her approach cured cancer.

New test recommended to check for prostate cancer

The Associated Press

Until now, doctors have relied largely on the rectal exam to routinely screen men for this kind of cancer. However, about two-thirds of cases of prostate cancer spread to other parts of the body before they are found.

Doctors who studied the latest method, which checks for levels of a telltale protein in the blood, recommend that it be made part of checkups for all men over age 50.

"It's very conceivable that using this test, the statistics in prostate cancer could be dramatically altered," said Dr. William J. Catalona. "Instead of seven out of 10 cases of cancer being advanced at the time diagnosis, we could flip-flop that, and seven out of 10 could be early stage."

By catching cancer early, doctors hope they will improve their chances of curing the disease with treatment. Currently, prostate cancer kills 32,000 American men annually, second only to lung cancer.

The test checks blood for prostate-specific antigen, or PSA. Levels of this protein, which is made only by the prostate, go up when the gland is cancerous.

Even though the blood test appears to be more accurate than rectal exams or ultrasound, another new way of checking for prostate cancer, the test still has a significant error rate. The doctors estimate that it misses about 20 percent of cancer cases. It also falsely suggests that cancer exists in about 16 percent of men studied. This occurs in part because prostates that are enlarged but free of cancer also produce increased levels of prostate-specific antigen.

The test is already used to monitor people who have been treated for prostate cancer to see of their cancer returns. Some doctors have also begun using it to check healthy people for cancer. However, this idea is controversial.

Dr. Ruben F. Gittes of Scripps Clinic in La Jolla, Calif., said that if cost is not a concern, the test should be offered to all men at risk of the disease.

"I think it's just as important as having a cholesterol test," he said. "You can do more about it if something is wrong."

However, Dr. Michael P. O'Leary of New England Medical Center in Boston was skeptical.

"PSA is a useful tool for following patients with known prostate cancer, but it is still not a useful tool for screening. It's not sensitive or specific enough," he said.

Catalona, a researcher at Washington University in St. Louis, directed the study, which was published in Thursday's New England Journal Of Medicine. The research was financed in part by Hybritech, Inc., a San Diego company that makes the test.

The study was conducted on 1,653 healthy men over age 50. Ten percent of them had higher-than-usual levels of the blood protein.

Graduating? You're screwed

Last Saturday I attended a banquet held for freshmen and senior Honors students. Before the meal, the over-ambitious frosh walked up to the podium, and, one by one, told us their names and majors. Many of them rattled off double majors, triple minors and pre-med programs. After the dinner the seniors continued the parade, this time announcing our post-graduation plans. I was the first to confess my future: "I will be pumping gas next year."

Mark B. Adler

I also heard: "I didn't get into grad school so I guess I'll have to get a job;" "I'm going to take some time off before going back to school;" and "I really don't know." And, we are honors students.

The front page of Monday's New York Times had the following headline: "Degrees and Stacks of Resumes Yield Few Jobs for the Class of '91." The article, examining the woes of graduating into a recession, referred to a history major who was fluent in three foreign languages (including Indonesian Malay), with nearly perfect grades (not me) graduating from a prestigious school (not UMass) who was having trouble getting a job.

Others were interviewed with credentials much better than mine, yet could not find decent employment. With the recession, many businesses are straining just to avoid laying off their own experienced employees.

Many seniors, like me, are looking to go to graduate school. The rate of students applying for graduate study has skyrocketed because an over-abundant gaggle of seniors has decided to sit out (or perhaps, "study-out") the recession. And an advanced degree may also improve their employment chances. Like so many of my peers, I have been left dangling above the void of uncertainty (adjacent to the pit of despair). In January I applied to ten history grad schools. Since I want to become a professor eventually, I need a Ph.D. I have been rejected, so far, by eight of the ten schools, and my prospects for the remaining two look mighty grim. My "A" plan involved going to the top-notch schools, like Virginia or Cornell.

My "B" plan had me at Rutgers or UConn. With ten applications out, I figured, who needs a "C" plan? Back in January my friends laughed at me for wasting the application money on ten schools. They are not laughing now.

If my ship from UConn or the University of Washington (in Seattle) does not come in, it looks like I will have to get a job. Stop snickering, I know what you are thinking: "Don't be such a lazy pus. Get off your duff and get a job."

You do not understand. For me to get the job I want, I need a Ph.D. My B.A. is as helpful to me as my high school diploma.

Like so many graduating seniors at UMass and across the country, I feel totally helpless. All the work I put into finding these ten schools, determining their stringent prerequisites and bizarre application procedures, has run me ragged. I spent seventy dollars to take the Graduate Record Examinations and thirteen dollars per school to send the scores. The transcripts cost me three dollars apiece and some schools wanted two. The applications averaged thirty dollars per school. All together, I spent seven hundred dollars to be thus tormented.

Three professors were very generous to write recommendations and the Career Center sent those out to the schools. One arrived at U. of Washington a week late so my application was thrown into the pile of late applicants and it will be reviewed if there are still some vacancies left in May.

When the 4,900 of us arrived here in 1987, the job possibilities seemed endless. As the remaining 3,600 of us march out of here with our diplomas in hand, we will stumble into a world of recession and uncertainty.

Roomie rules to live by

The semester is coming to an end. As a preparation for next September, allow me to offer the following list of rules for roommates:

- Snoring is absolutely forbidden. Snoring should be taken to mean any loud respiratory noise produced by you while unconscious. If I wanted to hear heavy breathing at night, I'd seduce Darth Vader.

Alex Dering

- Eating is not to be done with an excessive level of noise. By that, I mean no loud slurping, no heavy smutching, no onomatopoeic sounds of any kind. I don't want to listen to you start off every morning with a great big bowl of some godforsaken noisy cereal. To do so is to risk having Captain Crunch boldly go where no breakfast cereal has gone before.
- I don't care who (or what) you sleep with, but I don't want her, him, it, them in the room all the time. This is a two-person room, not the Motel Six.
- If your alarm goes off for more than two minutes in the morning, or if you hit the snooze bar more than four times consecutively, I reserve unto myself the right of wrapping the damn thing around your neck.
- Go to sleep when you want, wake up when you feel like, but if I'm asleep, I don't want to hear you crashing about the place like a hippo strung out on Quaaludes. This includes music. Under no circumstances should Bob Dylan be played at anything above a hoarse whisper at two in the morning.
- Political views. I don't care if you hang swastikas from the ceiling or if you are a born-again gay baby whale with a drinking problem, don't deliver diatribes on how correct your political views are. The same is applicable to religious debates.
- Phone messages should contain such frills as who called and why he or she did so. Vague statements like "Mark called," are useless if you know three people with that name.
- Hygiene. I hope you are one of those people who showers daily. If I wanted flies in the room, I'd start a compost heap in my sock drawer.
- Smoking. If you light up a cigarette or any similar product in the room, I will put it out in your eye. Think about that before you fill that pipe. The same for chewing tobacco.
- When in a drunken stupor, do not, under any circumstances, throw glass objects in the room. While in a drunken state, it is permissible to say exactly what you think of your roommate. So use the chance.
- If you don't like any of the previous ten rules, too bad. I was here first.

The dream will never die

Have any of you read Stephen Donaldson's The Chronicles of Thomas Covenant the Unbeliever? This guy, Thomas Covenant, is in rough shape. He's a lonely, unloved and angry leper who's been knocked unconscious. When he awakens, he finds himself in a lush, magical land, where he and the People of the Land encounter the evil powers of Lord Foul the Despiser.

Michael Hootstein

Alas, it is Lord Foul's intent to wage war on the People and the Land. Yet, it is not the physical destruction of the People and the Land that will satisfy Lord Foul. Foul will only be victorious when he has caused the People to despair and give up hope.

Twenty years ago, I lived on the twentieth floor of John Adams Tower. The symbols of our generation were painted on our doors: Jimi Hendrix, the American flag, and an owl with bloodshot eyes and a waterpipe growing out of his head. We were the Woodstock Generation and we were going to change the world. Although the line in the sand had been drawn at Kent State, our love and passion for mankind and for our Mother Earth burned brightly in our hearts.

Twenty years later, have we abandoned our ideals?

I believe that the answer is no.

We just found out that life wasn't as simple as we thought. We also found out that some of our fellow freaks were pigs, and a lot of the pigs were freaks. We found out that it's tough to feed the kids, clean the house, pay the bills, and make an honest buck while you're stoned out of your mind.

As the father of two special kids, the husband of one special wife, and as a returning undergraduate student here at one special University of Massachusetts, that bright light in my heart is burning brighter than ever. I am one of many. Yet, like Thomas Covenant and the People of the Land, we are being tested by Lord Foul and we must not despair.

Our planet is under siege. Palestinians, Jews, South Africans, African Americans, American Indians, Kurds, Iraqis, Men, Women, Old, Young, Gay, Straight, Poor, and not so Poor, and everyone else on the planet, are under siege. Our universities, our students, our parents, our teachers, our union workers, our administrators, our leaders, and yes, our ideals are under siege.

There is only one course of action. We must, as ONE PEOPLE, ONE PLANET, restore human dignity and enter into a battle with Lord Foul.

Let us not forget that, as human beings, we need to appreciate and be appreciated, love and be loved, or we will grow angry, our bodies will become diseased, and our spirits will become fodder for Foul.

Let us not forget that Lord Foul the Despiser is but one part of ourselves. Most importantly, let us celebrate those parts of ourselves that dream with Martin Luther King and imagine with John Lennon. We must remember how to wield the powers of song, of laughter, and of the heartbeat of our human circle.

If we are ever to tell our children that we live in the Land of the Free and the Home of the Brave, and that we are an honorable people, then we must prepare for battle. My elders, my fellow baby boomers, my young brothers and sisters, pass the word; the dream is alive!

We daily see the need for unity

As an openly gay man on this campus, I realize there is a need for unity among the campus community, especially among the members of marginalized groups. There has to be unity if we are going to be demarginalized. I feel that we have to stop dissing each other and unite to combat oppression, or at the very least, be sensitive to members of other marginalized groups.

Last Friday, I was invited to the Sylvan/Northeast semi-formal by some friends who were going. Going to an event like this usually doesn't pose a problem because semi-formals are open to all. In my three years on this campus, I have never had a problem with going to an event such as this, because I have always felt welcome. I consider myself very lucky.

The semi-formal started out on this note, until the slow dance, where the D.J. from Perfect Mix stated that he was going to make the atmosphere a little more intimate...for male/female couples only. After his statement, I felt very unwelcome and I was extremely angry that he, a member of the Asian race, was so insensitive to the members of another marginalized group.

When I asked why he made his comment, he said it was a joke. I told him that my sexuality is not any more a joke than his ethnicity, and that my friends and I were offended by his statement. I eventually got an over-the-air apology. I still felt unwelcome, but I stayed for the remainder of the semi-formal.

The message that I would like to convey in this letter is that bisexuals, lesbians, and gays are everywhere. We don't want to convert your children. We just want our basic rights. I would also like to see marginalized people work together to achieve those rights. Who said that dancing couldn't be a political statement?

Shawn Cotter
Orchard Hill

What did you expect in the aftermath of Desert Storm?

It's a funny thing, but if you start to look at history for too long you may start to notice some recurrent patterns and in the long run there is every danger that you might start to learn from them. To avoid this unpleasant side effect, the Surgeon General advises you to turn directly to the comics page.

Those who have been so foolish as to contemplate the recent events in Iraq at length may have been struck by the recollection that there were some who had predicted this kind of unspeakable denouement. Many of us said that if the United States were to destroy the infrastructure of Iraq in the saturation bombing that we foresaw, then civil war, chaos, and death would dance among us long after the American music ceased. But, the true blue warriors of the speckled band scoffed. They will never learn because they do not wish to. Others, however, need not be restrained by the starry-eyed myopia of those bound by red and white stripes. Therefore, peer again into this smoldering kaleidoscope.

Let us be clear about something once and for all. If you drop more bomb tonnage on a Third World country than was dropped on Germany and Japan combined, you will definitely create a situation of mass chaos which will, on top of the carnage of the explosions, result in civil war, refugee crises, starvation, and massacres. No one will doubt who created this inferno, these ongoing calamities.

Hussein Ibish

There has been talk of "Balkanization," and of "Lebanon-ization," but surely it is more accurate to see what has been done to Iraq as "Cambodia-ization." That is, that Iraq is experiencing a fate most analogous to that of Cambodia in the 1970s. Of course there are many crucial differences, and such parallels are highly problematic. Saddam is not Pol Pot, and Iraq is an accelerated case in terms of ordinary time. Nonetheless, the experiences indicate a clear and chilling pattern.

In its pursuit of the destruction of Vietnamese and Khmer independence, the U.S. engaged in a campaign of mass bombings that totally devastated Cambodia. As a result of the incursion of the Vietnam war into Cambodia, about 600,000 people (10 percent of the total population) died. Many were forced to flood into already overcrowded cities due to the saturation bombing of the countryside, and one third of the population, some two million, had been made into refugees. Famine, disease, and despair were pervasive. The national infrastructure was totally destroyed by the American bombing, particularly in the black year of 1973. Rice and saw mills, roads, bridges, and industry were all demolished. The sheer savagery of the U.S. bombing built the now notorious Khmer Rouge into the main opposition force and deeply radicalized them. The bombing essentially created a disastrous civil war.

By the time that the pro-U.S. regime could no longer remain in power, the stage was set for auto-genocide. The destruction of agriculture and industry, and the vast refugee population, combined with the radicalized and maniacal leadership of the Khmer Rouge, to produce the deaths of well over a million people in a few short years. It is as horrific a period as any nation has suffered, and was unquestionably the direct result of the scale of US bombing. Quite simply, the nation went mad.

In Iraq the particulars are very different, but the results of the bombing (both wars being waged by the U.S. primarily from the air) are roughly comparable. At least 200,000 Iraqis, half civilians and many children, have been killed in the bombing. The infrastructure of the nation has been totally destroyed. The U.S. engineered civil war has resulted in some two million Kurdish refugees, who are dying at the rate of 500 to 1,000 per day. Iraq has been accurately described as a body that appears intact but has had very bone shattered and every nerve cut by the hands of a skilled but demonic surgeon.

Employment, medical facilities, all seed warehouses, power plants, roads, bridges, water supply and sewage works, and communications systems lie in utter ruins. Starvation and disease are rampant. And, in a different way, the nation has gone mad.

Next time, and there will be a next time, that the U.S. is about to drop this kind of hell onto a Third World nation, let no one doubt what will be the result of the bombing. The awful pattern is clear to see. Look and you burn you eyes.

Chris Hani and the ANC will see Apartheid fall

From its founding in 1912 to its banishment in 1960, the African National Congress used non-violent tactics to promote the rights of blacks in South Africa.

Following a protest on March 21, 1960 in the township of Sharpeville near Johannesburg against the obligatory 'pass laws' (laws requiring blacks to carry identity documents) — where the police killed 69 protestors and wounded over 178 others — the government invoked a state of emergency, banned the ANC and other organizations, and detained thousands of activists, including Nelson Mandela.

After thirty years of suppression by the racist South African government, the African National Congress was finally legalized in 1990 and Nelson Mandela sought to end worldwide economic sanctions and its reputation as a pariah state.

This year marks a one year anniversary of this legalization, but the struggle continues. Apartheid is still very much in place and South Africa's 28 million blacks still have not attained citizenship and hence are not allowed to vote. The country's five million whites still control the economy and maintain many separate facilities.

Guy St. Rose

But because Mandela was released and the ANC legalized, the racist South African government and its allies want the world to believe that apartheid no longer exists and that state-sanctioned racism is a thing of the past and not of the present. Those who support freedom in South Africa and a total end to apartheid must not forget and must not fall victim to this great lie.

As part of this effort of remembrance and continued support, a coalition has been formed to welcome one of the ANC's top leaders, Chris Hani, who will be coming to speak at UMass on May 1.

Chris Hani is the Chief of Staff of Umkhonto we Sizwe (Spear of the Nation), the military wing of the ANC, which was set up in 1961 following the brutal massacre at Sharpeville by the racist South African government. As a central figure in the ANC, Chris Hani has emerged as an outspoken and powerful voice in the process of building the ANC into a viable opposition party to ultimately challenge the government at the ballot box.

"Hani is destined to be a part of that process," noted the Christian Science Monitor. "He is as popular among the thousands of exiled youth who left South Africa since the 1976 Soweto uprising as he is with the militant black youth inside the country."

All fighters for justice who seek to dismantle apartheid both abroad and here at home are urged to rally on May 1 and welcome one of South Africa's favorite sons, Chris Hani, and let the racial minority government in South Africa and its allies know that the world maintains its watch and will remain vigilant until apartheid is fully dismantled.

Once again, a White House chief of staff humbled

AP photo

FREQUENT FLYER – President Bush, Chief of Staff John Sununu, and Education Sec. Lamar Alexander return to the White House yesterday after a speech at the National Academy of Sciences Wednesday.

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Once again, a presidential chief of staff is at the center of a political storm. But John H. Sununu's frequent-flyer woes don't seem to be evoking much sympathy, even at the White House.

Democrats are smirking at disclosures of Sununu's repeated use of Air Force jets — including trips to Colorado ski resorts and to Boston to see his dentist. The White House defense of his 77 trips has been lukewarm at best.

The flap is just the latest public controversy involving the combative former New Hampshire governor. He has locked horns with fellow Republicans, angered civil rights leaders, publicly insulted congressional leaders and frustrated budget negotiators.

Like Alexander Haig and Donald T. Regan before him, Sununu has made enemies both on Congress' and even the administration's own staff with his brash and often arrogant demeanor.

Haig, who was President Nixon's final chief of staff, and President Reagan's secretary of state, is widely remembered for his "I'm in control here" declaration after the White House after Reagan was shot in March 1981.

And Regan, strong-willed and autocratic, alienated much of the White House staff as well as first lady Nancy Reagan before he was fired by Reagan.

A former captain of industry, Regan used to insist on being ceremoniously introduced for appearances by an off stage announcer, just like the president.

While Sununu hasn't gone that far, his current predicament is generating more than a few chuckles from inside the White House, where he otherwise rules with an iron fist.

Complaints of arrogance also were leveled at H.R. Haldeman, Nixon's chief of staff before Haig and a key figure in the Watergate scandal. And President Carter's chief of staff, Hamilton Jordan, so angered then-House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill (D-Mass.) that O'Neill deliberately mispronounced his name as 'Hannibal Jerkin.'

Sununu has been publicly silent since his travel habits were disclosed last weekend in news articles.

BLACK AFFAIRS

A survival kit

By LISA DANFORTH
Collegian Correspondent

What happens when three women - a filmmaker, a cleaning woman and a Yoruban goddess, encounter each other in a funeral home?

The three are brought together in the University of Massachusetts Department of Theater production of The Black Woman's Survival Kit by Smith College playwright Andrea Hairston. May 1st through 4th and 7th through 11th at the Curtain Theatre at UMass.

Directed by MFA candidate Kym Moore the company of nine women play a variety of roles in a compelling play that follows the black woman's experience through the generations handed down from mother to daughter.

Georgia befriends Shaunelle, and together the two women create their 'Survival Kit' for life in the 1990's, concoted of wit, wisdom, music and dance.

The scenic designer for the production is Fang Guo Wen, a visiting scholar from China, sponsored in part by the International Programs Office.

Mr. Fang is an award-winning designer for China Central Television in Beijing. The costume designer is guest artist Marion K. Williams, a 1986 graduate of the University Without Walls program with a concentration in costume design.

The play also features the work of graduate students Thomas Morgan, lighting design, and Celeste Rego, sound design.

In addition to the above dates, the show will also be presented at 2 p.m. on May 4th. Admission is $5 for the general public and $3 for students and senior citizens. Advance reservations are strongly recommended. Tickets are avalible at the Fine Arts Center Box Office, 545-2511. The Curtain Theater is Wheelchair accessible.

Above is one of the cast members for the play "The Black Woman Survival Kit"

Cape Verdean or African?

This is an invitation going out to the African Americans on this campus to attend some of the events that will be going on during the Cape Verdean Awareness week. The events will start on May 6th and will be going on through May 11th.

Ana Lisa Silva

Some African Americans on this campus are ignorant about Cape Verdeans and yet they have taken the liberty of accusing Cape Verdeans of being sell-outs. The image that African Americans have of Cape Verdeans is that of a people who have identity problems and their African background. Well, that is completely wrong and I suggest from now on they should do their homework and stop falling in the trap of stereotypes.

African Americans are the ones who need to wake up and realize that there are black people living all over the world and they should not expect all people to be like African Americans. Who said that African Americans represent the perfect example of black people? Some African Americans need to stop being so narrow minded and learn more about other cultures before they go around criticizing them. They need to realize that just because other people of African origin may have customs that are different from theirs, it does not mean that they are 'less black' than African Americans. African Americans need to stop expecting people to change and give up their cultures just to prove they are of African descent. Cape Verdeans have nothing to prove to African Americans. We have a culture, and we are just as proud of our culture as you are of yours. There are some African Americans who go around pointing fingers at people and say "Those people don't act black." Will someone tell me how one acts black.

Hopefully we will see a bigger turnout of African Americans at this year's Cape Verdean Awareness Week. I advise that African Americans attend these events and learn something about Cape Verde, and it's people. Please, don't come just for the food this time!!!

Looking forward to seeing you all there. PAZ!

Think about it quick!

MY THOUGHTS AND MY MIND

They call each other brother, although they kill one another.
They get upset when they are put down although they stab each other in the heart just to take the crown.

They feel as though five-o ruins their lives, although they shoot an innocent teenager for walking in
"their" territory at the wrong time.

Who? you ask are these people that they call they,
They are people like me who in the olden days were known as slaves.

I speak of them not in a bad way,
I only speak my thoughts and my mind, and what I fee! I should say.
Why can't we wake up and stick together?

It's useless when gangs striving for the same cause fight each other.
The mind God gave me is still young but my thoughts are more constructive than a bullet in a gun.

Why can't we kill violence instead of our own people? Black or White, we're all human.

I can't walk down the street
because I'm wearing a certain hat, what kind of trash is that?
They pull out a knife, maybe I should run ...
but then I remember, my thoughts are more constructive than a bullet in a gun.

I ask them if stabbing a person is their nature of having fun, they pause, look at me, and then they run.

Use the mind because your thought are more constructive than a bullet in a gun.

They took me out
To some lonesome place
They said "do you believe
In the great white race?"

I said "Mister To tell you the truth
I'd believe in anything
If you'd just turn me loose."

The white said "Boy,
Can it be You're a- standin
there
A-sassin me?

They hit me in the head And knocked me down.
And then they kicked me
On the ground.

A klansman said "Nigger look me in the face
And tell me you believe in
The great white race."

Hatch bars student band because of flyer

By MATTHEW CORCORAN
Collegian Correspondent

Wondering why Spanish Fly never got to play the Hatch on Saturday, April 6? If you don't know, then perhaps you saw their poster which said: "Come see us. You'll definitely get laid. Well, maybe not laid, but you'll have a good time."

Spanish Fly, a six-member student rock band "broke the rules," as set by the Hatch, by using the official Hatch logo in an unauthorized poster, said Larry Jeffers, Hatch manager.

An anonymous group found the advertisement "offensive" and called the poster to Jeffers' attention by phone.

"One [caller] claimed to be a professor, the rest were anonymous," he said.

"The sign was not that offensive," Jeffers said. "I had no problem with what [the poster] said, but apparently some people did. I cancelled the band because they didn't follow the rules. Simple as that."

Fly lead vocalist Mitch Fillmore said he was "quite shattered" by the cancellation.

"We were going to bring quite a theatrical show together, with smoke and lasers — something the Hatch has never seen before," he said.

He said the band members wanted to apologize to anyone who was offended by the posters.

"They were not meant to offend," he said.

Jeffers said Spanish Fly will be invited to play at the Hatch again, perhaps in the Battle of the Bands.

Fillmore said he would be willing to play at the cafeteria.

"I would love to play at the Hatch in the future," he said.

The Spanish Fly show is described by Fillmore as "a long set" of chart-busting pop rock with a hard edge, and various cover versions of classic rock bands like Rush and Van Halen.

Spanish Fly, who have been playing together since last February, are: Neil O'Brien on lead guitar, Steve Rogers on drums, Mary Muckenthaler on keyboards, Greg Sears on bass, Fillmore on lead vocals, and Kim Reddick on alternate lead vocals. Jim Haaf is Spanish Fly's Manager.

He said the ultimatum was given during daily meetings between the U.S. military liason Col. Dick Naab and Iraqi Staff Brig. Gen. Nushwan Danoun.

However, a U.S. military spokesman denied that an ultimatum had been given. "There has been no deadline set for the police to get out of town," said Army Col. Bob Flocke.

At Incirlik, the U.S.-Turkish base that is coordinating relief efforts, U.S. Maj. Michael Maher said, "We have nothing on such an ultimatum."

In Washington, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater yesterday said Iraqi forces patrolling northern Iraq are inhibiting Kurdish refugees from leaving their mountain sanctuaries. However, he said U.S. forces were 'working around' the problem. He said he would check reports about the ultimatum.

Asked about the Iraqi police, he said, "They're there. Their purpose appears to be to establish a presence. It's a matter of concern, of course."

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Attending a special reunion will put you in an upbeat mood. Get together with someone you usually see only during working hours. The Sunday papers could give you new employment ideas.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): At-home entertainment holds special appeal today. Limit the amount of money you spend. Family members will be glad to give you a helping hand. Diplomacy helps bridge the generation gap!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Love goes hand-in-hand with understanding now. A family member will champion your cause. Be candid with older relatives. If you unveil your long-range plans, someone may offer financial help.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A good day for paperwork and practical tasks. Demand exclusivity in a current romance. Getting together with one or two cherished friends gives you a fresh perspective.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A lecture strikes home. You resolve to break a bad habit! Family members are appreciative of your efforts. A suggestion from a relative or friend proves quite helpful. Repay a favor.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Watch what you say and curb a tendency to be extravagant. Major business transactions should be postponed until tomorrow. An older relative's finances come up during a family discussion.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Not a good day for risky real estate deals. Plan a trip instead. A relationship that appeared to be fading could come to life again. Promises of financial support may not be fulfilled. Rely on yourself.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Large gatherings are best avoided today. A family member could foist extra responsibilities on your shoulders. Do not hesitate to ask for a reprieve. Keep any promises you make to small fry.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A good day to think about the future and your long-term goals. Welcome the views of your mate and other family members. "Friendly competition" in romance is not as innocent as it sounds.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Sharing a spiritual experience will bring you and mate closer. Make amends to someone you may have slighted recently. A bouquet or box of candy could do more than words.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Someone who is energetic and forceful has great appeal for you now. Protect you position. Thinking logically will help you avoid an embarrassing situation. Romantic emotions may run high tonight.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Think and act in a more positive manner! Clear reasoning will help you emerge triumphant from a difficult situation. Look for opportunities to expand your social horizons.

to tie the game at 1-1 in the second inning.

An inning later, a rare bobbled ball by DiSarcina set the table for Amherst's Neal Huntington, who capitalized with an RBI double to give the Lord Jeffs their only lead.

Amherst's last gasp came in the seventh inning, when Toothaker allowed two walks. A fielder's choice by Lord Jeff outfielder Luke Belcastro put runners in scoring position with two outs, prompting Stone to the mound to consider inserting Villone, who was warming up on the sidelines.

But Toothaker struck out Vince Polsinelli to end the threat and preserve the win. Villone pitched the eight and ninth innings, striking out the side in the ninth.

"It was a decent ballgame, but it was no contest when Villone came in," credited Thurston of the Minutemen's stopper. "There's no question UMass is more talented than us...that and the fact that we didn't hit as well as I thought we could."

Now UMass' attention turns to Hartford, a team the Minutemen lost to earlier this season,10-9, in a game that UMass let slip away. Stone said that Daryle Corriveau would start for UMass, and that Villone would also see time on the mound to prepare for this weekend's crucial four-game Atlantic 10 Conference series against Temple. Today's game starts at 3 pm in Hartford.

department. They are batting .329 as a team and are averaging 5.8 runs a game, while UConn averages .258 as a team with 3.0 runs a game.

"[UMass] is a strong hitting team," Mullins said. "Mizesko and Conlan have been our one-two punch all season. We handled [the hitting] before and I hope we can do that again."

"This is a big game for us," Sortino said. "Hopefully we will get some people out here to watch two great softball games. The home field advantage would be a big boost for us."

THE GREATER SPRINGFIELD FORD DEALERS HAVE THE KEYS TO YOUR SUCCESS

WIN A TWO YEAR LEASE ON THE ALL-NEW 1991 FORD ESCORT. DETAILS BELOW:

One way to get started on the road to success is getting the keys to a new Ford/Mercury. Ford Credit and participating Springfield Metro Ford Dealers can help get qualified college graduates going with the Ford/Mercury College Graduate Purchase Program and $500 cash back from Ford Motor Company.

Here's all you have to do to qualify: Graduate with a Bachelor's or advanced degree between October 1, 1989 and December 31, 1991; have verifiable employment beginning within 120 days of vehicle purchase; have a salary sufficient to cover living expenses as well as a car payment. Although a prior credit history is not necessary, if you have one, it must be satisfactory to Ford Credit.

Ford Dealer sales representatives will be on your campus soon to explain the details of the program and offer you a chance to win a two year lease on a 1991 Ford Escort. Look for us on campus or stop by any participating Ford Dealer for details and entry form:

FORD MERCURY LINCOLN

*No purchase necessary to win. One entry per person. Entries must be received by a participating Ford Dealer by May 31, 1991 and the drawing will be held on June 8, 1991. Odds of winning are determined by number of entries. Winner is responsible for any and all Federal, state and local taxes, license, registration fees and insurance. There is no cash alternative.

kneeling near the crease as he tipped in the ball to tie the game 6-all. The scoring ended there at the half.

Hugh O'Callaghan netted a goal unassisted 30 seconds into the second half, but the score would remain 7-6 for a full seven minutes before McAleavey assisted Chris Nentwich.

Harvard's only goal of the third quarter was netted unassisted at 5:27 by Linehan. Ed O'Callaghan safely cleared a lost Harvard possession and passed to Rick Senatore who scored unassisted with five minutes remaining to advance the Gorillas 9-7.

Harvard created their most serious offensive threat in the fourth, scoring five goals compared to UMass' effort of three.

Kushner's unassisted goal was quickly answered by a Stephen Buetow-Cavouti combination as a result of volleyed play. UMass' John Schlipf scored unassisted during man-up and Beutow responded also unassisted.

Fastbreaks for both teams were annihilated by lousy passing and impatience. For five minutes the score was stalled at 11-9 in favor of UMass but was disrupted by Ralph Vogel's unassisted shot at 3:23.

A Guaglianone-Hugh O'Callaghan combo was answered by Reilly's assist to Linehan.

"That eleventh goal was all my fault," said Garber. "We didn't have our defensive-midi out there yet and [defenseman Corey] Cronin moved up, like he's supposed to, and the guy was open to shoot."

Cavouti then put the game in perspective with 50 seconds remaining in regulation to tie the score at 12-all.

"In those last few seconds [of regulation], I thought we'd at least get a decent shot off," said Harvard coach Scott Anderson. "But we didn't read the slide...In a way, I feel we moved back in the progression of our game."

Stick Check: Unbeknownst to this writer, Rick Mullins was named Player of the Week by Brine Lacrosse last week and Ted Kellerman was named Goalie of the Week this week.

Defense keys Gorillas' 13-12 OT win

By ADRIEN MATT
Collegian Staff

CAMBRIDGE — With just under two minutes left in the first overtime Gorilla Mike Cain scored the winning goal for a 13-12 decision between the University of Massachusetts and Harvard lacrosse teams yesterday.

"It really sucks to lose, but I'd rather lose to these guys than any other team," said assistant Harvard coach Scott Hiller, who graduated from UMass last year. "I thought this was one of our better games."

The goal was netted after the Gorillas had obtained control and settled the offense. Sloppy play characterized the second half and the transition game for both teams broke down.

A game which promised to be a match-up of offensive prowess proved to be a showdown of defensive tenacity. Defensive-midfielder Ed O'Callaghan and defenseman Jim Panetta showed some impressive hustle, encouraging the UMass defense to continue doing well.

"Besides [goalie Ted] Kellerman coming up big again, Eddie O' had a great game," said UMass coach Ted Garber. "This game evens out the Brown game..."

He explained that although Harvard (2-8) is not nationally ranked, a loss would have been disastrous and completely knocked UMass (7-2) out of playoff contention. He said he thinks the result of the Yale game evened out the showing at the game against Cornell, at least rank-wise.

Capping the fourth game in which his stick skills were crucial, Kellerman finished the day with 20 saves in 52 shots on goal. By comparison, Crimson's Chris Miller had 15 saves in 38 shots on goal.

This was one of the few games in which Kevin O'Connor did not win the majority of the faceoffs. Chad Prusmack made O'Connor work harder for the ball, winning 18 of 26 faceoffs.

"He's a great kid. He was better than me," said O'Connor who added they faced off against each other in high school. "He knew what I was gonna do before I would do it. I tried like three different moves out there and he guessed every one...I lost about a pint of blood out there trying.

"It really would have helped to have [Mario] Lopez out there," he said. "But Panetta and Hugh [O'Callaghan] did really well today."

At the first faceoff of the second quarter, Lopez was injured at midfield and taken out with an injured left knee. He said he believed his knee was hyper-extended. He was evaluated at Harvard and will be re-evaluated at UMass.

Gorilla Mario Guaglianone netted the first two of his three goals for the day early in the first quarter, assisted by Jim Kushner and Jim McAleavey, respectively. Chip Linehan responded just as quickly netting two goals, one assisted by Mick Cavuoti to tie the score at 2-all. Kushner wrapped up the scoring in the first quarter, netting a goal as he fell into the crease with 45 seconds remaining.

Illegal procedures and offsides were characteristic of second-quarter play. During man-up Mark Millon fed to Kushner who shot over the left shoulder of Miller. Crimson's Tim Reilly answered that goal three minutes later shooting at the left hip of Kellerman to tie the game at 4-all.

Mike Porter netted a goal unassisted as Harvard took their first and only lead (5-4) of the game at 6:31 in the second quarter.

O'Connor won the following faceoff but lost the ball when checked. Panetta picked up the groundball and passed back to O'Connor. Typical of earlier games, O'Connor went straight to the net and tied the game at 5-all.

Millon shot at Miller's right hip, scoring unassisted at 4:48. Crimson's Cavuoti assisted Dan O'Sullivan who was

Baseball defeats rival Amherst 6-2 behind fifth-inning rally

Third baseman/outfielder Steve Corradi (12) looks back to see if his take-out slide of Amherst shortstop Jamie Scrimgeour (17) prevented a double play. UMass beat Amherst 6-2 yesterday.

The University of Massachusetts baseball team got four runs in the fifth inning and strong pitching from Jeff Toothaker and Ron Villone, enabling them to beat crosstown rivals Amherst College 6-2 at Memorial Field yesterday afternoon.

"It was a struggle today," said UMass coach Mike Stone of the Minuteman win. "We got good pitching, but we're not really hitting as of late. We didn't play as well as we could have."

Toothaker improved his record to 2-1 by pitching seven innings of four-hit ball. The right-hander allowed two runs, only one of them earned, struck out four and bounced back from an early home run to claim the win for the Minutemen, now 18-19-1.

"I thought [Toothaker] got stronger as he went along," noted Stone. "He kept the ball down in the strike zone."

Toothaker agreed with Stone's assesment of his work.

"I could feel myself getting looser as I went along," he said, "and we were able to start hitting the ball in the fifth."

Amherst pitcher Matt Lane was protecting a 2-1 Lord Jeffs lead in the fifth inning when UMass' bats came alive. Mike Tobin smacked a 390-foot stand-up triple to the wall in right-center field with one out to start the Minuteman rally. At that point Lane's control abandoned him, as he walked Steve Corradi and hit Ian Torres with a pitch to load the bases.

Amherst coach Bill Thurston then removed Lane for Tony Petropulos. Instead of putting out the fire, Petropulos poured gasoline on it as UMass broke out for four runs. Brian Bright hit a two-RBI single, while Glen DiSarcina and John Carelli drove in a run apiece before DiSarcina was thrown out at home to end the inning.

"Usually Tony does the job for us," said Thurston. "But he had no location on his pitches today. He put them right over the middle and UMass picked up four runs."

The Minutemen got an insurance run in the sixth as Corradi hit an RBI single off of Petropulos, scoring Justin Howard.

The Lord Jeffs plated one run in the second and one in the third to take the early lead. Craig Gougen smacked a 2-2 Toothaker fastball over the left field fence

Track set for Brown Inv.

By KEITH BENNETT
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's track team will travel to Providence, R.I. Sunday to compete in the Brown University Invitational. Some of the other teams expected to compete in the meet are Dartmouth, Providence, Rhode Island, Brown and Holy Cross. The meet is a non-scoring meet.

"This meet gives kids a chance to try a different event or sharpen up for the championship meets," head coach Ken O'Brien said. "It also gives some kids one last chance to qualify for the championships."

Joe Kourafas will look to hone his skills in the long jump and javelin this weekend. He has consistently placed in both events for the Minutemen this season. He has jumped 21 feet, eight inches and thrown the javelin 174-0.

Jeff Peterson is another multi-event athlete for UMass. He will compete in both the shot put and discus Sunday. He has thrown the shot 42-6½ and the discus 131-1 this year.

Kevin Walters will compete in both the 100- and 200-meter races. "Kevin will face some stiff competition in the sprints," O'Brien said. "He'll be facing some of the better sprinters in the conference." Walters has posted times of 11.0 seconds and 22.2.

Senior Mike Grey will compete in the 400. Moving up from the shorter sprints this season, he has shown that he can handle the longer race by posting a 49.9 in the teams' last meet.

O'Brien said he is uncertain if Steve Brown will compete. Brown is undefeated this season in the 800, with a best time of 1:53.6, but sprained his ankle last week and may not be available.

Paul Doyle will compete in both the 110 hurdles and the 400 hurdles. He has placed consistently in both races this season and has best times of 16.0 and 56.8, respectively.

Senior Jeff White will join Doyle in the 110 hurdles. "Jeff has shown signs that he's starting to regain the form which made him a New England finalist his sophomore year," O'Brien said. White has run the barriers in 15.6 this year.

O'Brien said he expects Luke Simpson to continue his success in the hammer throw this weekend. His best distance is 153-5.

Freshmen John Raach and Tom Walsh will move up from the 1,500 to compete in the 5,000. "I want to see if [the 5,000] is a legitimate distance for those two to have a shot at in the conference meet." O'Brien said.

Softball home for rematch

By DAN WETZEL

What happens when the two best softball teams in the north meet up to do battle? What happens when those two teams happen to be two of the hottest in the nation? What happens when those two teams happen to be arch-rivals? Two great softball games should be the answer.

Today at 3 p.m. at Totman Field, the University of Massachusetts (24-9) hosts Connecticut (29-11). Both teams are on torrid hot streaks after slow starts. UMass has won 10 games in a row and 21 of its last 23. UConn has taken 14 straight decisions and 24 of its last 26.

The only team that has defeated UMass during its winning streak is UConn. On April 11 in Storrs, Conn., the Huskies swept UMass 2-1 and 2-0 behind the strong pitching of Kim Mizesko and Pat Conlan. Now UMass is looking for revenge.

"UConn will be a major confrontation for us," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "This is a tough team and we want to get those loses back. This is the type of game you want to playing at this time of the season."

"Anytime Connecticut and Massachusetts match up it will be a great battle," UConn coach Karen Mullins said. "They are a great team and this a great rivalry to be in. We know that they will be out for payback and we will just have to play our game like we did last time."

Both teams rely on their strong pitchers to carry them. UConn's Mizesko and Conlan have only given up six runs between them over the last 14 games, including nine shutouts. Mizesko is 15-6 (11 shutouts) with a 0.44 earned run average; opponents are batting only .132 against her. Conlan is an equally impressive 14-3 with an 0.84 ERA, while holding opposing batters to a .150 batting average.

Not to be outdone, UMass hurlers Darlene Claffey and Holly Aprile have been cruising. Claffey (12-4, 1.35 ERA) has 9 shutout in her last 11 starts. Last week Claffey, who has four no-hitters on the year, was named Atlantic 10 pitcher of the week.

Aprile is 12-5 on the season with a 1.51 ERA. She two-hit Penn State on Tuesday and has held opponents to a .179 batting average this season. Aprile, who last week was named A-10 player of the week, has also been dominating at the plate. She batted .636 last week improving her average on the season to .388, second in the A-10 behind teammate Barbara Marean (.469)

Killing Me Softly copes with relationships

By HEATHER A. BELL
Collegian Correspondent

Relationships. Watching Tim (Tone Nunes) and Lil (Joan Jubett) interact on stage I know that is what Killing Me Softly by John Binnie is about. Set in present day Scotland, the play covers universal issues ranging from economic class to AIDS to love. Tim, a college age gay male, meets Lil, a heterosexual college woman, and the play follows the development of their love and the issues they have to deal with as people in society. A very minimalist play with only the basic props, set, and naturalistic dialogue, the actors make the situations and feelings real with passion, understanding and simple honesty.

Directed by Dick Trousdell, a professor in the theater department at UMass, this is the first time Killing Me Softly has been performed in the States. Trousdell saw Binnies's work at a drama festival last summer. He feels Binnie has a good sense of "being direct and honest without being cynical."

"We've all got to 'come out' into the world," Trousdell says in reference to the meaning of the play.

Talking with Tone Nunes and Joan Jubett, who play the main characters, I have a sense of genuine emotion and connection between the two. Tim and Lil are real people dealing with real life, people everyone can relate to on one level or another. Tone and Joan both want their audience to realize that one of the most important things is not to be afraid. Not to be afraid of life, of emotions, or of love. "Admitting what we need as people," Joan says, realizing Lil has an inner need to find genuine love. Tone admires Tim's passion for life, and his constant trying to "walk out on a limb." He uses three words to sum up the play, "change, growth, and challenge," and he's right.

Kim Vogelsang and Ruth Cooke are co-sound designers for the show. Pre-show music is by Deacon Blue, a Scottish group, and intermission music is from Red, Hot, and Blue. Vogelsang notes that one of the foremost objects on everyone's mind was to let the show be very simple, "pick up and go," she said. When it is performed in Scotland it is a travelling show and needs to move quickly. The sound is simple, like the dialogue, to let the emotions and issues speak for themselves.

"I know I've done my job right when the audience forgets the set," Andrea Branford, the set designer says. The play is very energetic and in a moving environment, and Branford wanted to give the actors "lots of places to go" without being cumbersome to either the actor or the audience. She has tried "not to make the set another actor," she says, and she has succeeded. The colors have a very misty feel, giving the impression that there is no specific time, and the abstractness of the set lets the actor create many different scenes quickly and easily.

The designers for the show were very conscious of their setting and to impress that the situations are universal they have kept many of the Scottish elements in the play. All of the colors are drawn from a postcard of the city of Glasgow. They are muted and center around hues of soft pinks, blues, and grays. Costumes for the play tell a lot about the characters' feelings, and give an example of modern day Scotland. The dialogues have been kept as well.

"We all have irrational fears before we become educated," says Tony Maestrone, who plays Michael, Tim's brother. I think that is true of many things, AIDS, emotions, and love included. Binnie's play lets the audience open its eyes, safely becoming aware of how joyous life can be if we let it. If you have any time this weekend, this is a show you won't want to miss.

Killing Me Softly opens tonight at 8 p.m. in Hampden Theater, located in Southwest. Tickets can be purchased at the Fine Arts Center box office. Admission is $4 for students; $6 for the general public. The show will run through April 27, and there will also be a 2 p.m. show that day. After each performance the audience is invited to stay and talk with the playwright.

KMFDM and Braindead come for a visit

By DANIELLE DOWLING
Collegian Staff

KMFDM: Kill Mother Fucking Depeche Mode or Keine Mehrheit Fur Die Mitleid (roughly translated: "no pity for the majority")?

Both possibilities for the acronym are cool. It is also the moniker of a post-industrial group from Germany who will invade the Happy Valley this Friday night. Their music can be best described as dance music for those who have an unnatural obsession with bull whips and riding crops.

It all started in 1984 in Hamburg as an art project. Eventually, Sasha Konietzko and En Esch, who started the project, decided to make it a band. They released their first album, What Do You Know Deutschland?, in late 1986. The album compiled all of the material, consisting largely of ultra-heavy beat songs, the group had composed since its conception. A 12-inch single followed this release in early 1987.

In 1988, they signed onto Wax Trax Records, making their material available in the United States. Their first release on Wax Trax was Don't Blow Your Top, which evoked this response from Billboard Magazine, "KMFDM's new offering, Don't Blow Your Top, has a number of gems in the grooves."

That release was followed by a couple 12-inch releases in 1989, including a 12-inch produced by Einsturzende Neubaten's F.M. Einheit entitled, More and Faster, a song which was redone and re-released as a B-side for their 1990 EP release Virus. In late 1989, the group released their third album UAIOE which was followed by a tour in 1990 with fellow industrial groups Skinny Puppy and Ministry.

With the present line-up of Konietzo on vocals, keyboards and drums, Esch on guitar, vocals and drums and Svetlana Ambrosius on guitar, they released their latest album entitled, Naive, a pleasant little number that features all sorts of cool samples and overlays with growling vocals muttering something in either German or English. Melody Maker said of the album, "They sound like Depeche Mode after 12 years in a Russian labor camp."

En Esch claimed that his group is, "creating a new hardcore in a peaceful...we want people to get wild, but we try to create some peaceful vibrations."

Real peaceful like.

Opening for KMFDM is fellow Wax Trax recording artists Braindead Sound Machine. Interestingly enough, the group started back in the late 60s when members of Strawberry Alarm Clock and Alan Ginsberg released an EP in Germany under the name Brian Wilson. After many mutations and name changes, some names include No Time for Rimjobs and T.P.F.M.H.O. (Take Perry Farrel's Motherfucking Head Off), there is only one original member left, Lee the keyboardist. One of the group's productions is "Tony Danza: A Rock Opera," in which Italian-American culture is set against a blow-up of Madonna's armpit.

It will prove to be a very interesting night indeed.

KMFDM, with special guests Braindead Sound Machine, will play at Katina's on Friday night. Doors open at 8 p.m.

UMass Dance Department celebrates at Bowker

By DANIELLE DOWLING
Collegian Staff

When I was young, I took ballet. I dreamed of being a prima ballerina, obtaining the grace and beauty of a swan. In reality, I had the grace of a hippopotamus on hallucinogens, but I still like to watch those who can accomplish what I never will.

So, if you enjoy watching people skipping about in silly costumes, you may want to check out the three-day celebration of dance this Thursday, Friday and Saturday, presented by the UMass Department of Dance.

Thursday's and Friday's events will feature the B.F.A. Dance concert. Dance majors will perform the choreography of faculty members. Both concerts will consist of seven pieces: "Shout," "That Voice," "Quirk," "Desert Passage," "Solo Passage," "Dance to Dance" and "Curved Lines of Suspended Grace."

"Shout" and "That Voice" were both choreographed by the late Richard Jones. In "Shout," set to the music of Duke Ellington, the dancers jump, shake and shout as the "spirit" enters them, evoking the atmosphere of a Baptist revival meeting. "That Voice," based on the life of the late Edith Piaf, was created for Rebecca Nordstrom, chair of the Five College Dance Program, who will also be performing the piece.

Andrea Watkins, a University Dance faculty member, is responsible the choreography of three of the seven pieces: "Quirk," "Dessert Passage" and "Solo Passage." "Quirk" is a contemporary pointe ballet for seven women set to the music of Jean Michelle Jarre. "Desert Passage," a dramatic modern piece, and "Solo Passage" depicts Watkins' early dance training.

"Dance to Dance," which was originally choreographed in 1970 for graduating seniors, has been recreated by Marilyn Patton. "Curved Lines of Suspended Grace" will feature graduating seniors and juniors.

On Saturday night, there will be an alumni concert featuring the work of former students. Donna Davenport will perform a special tribute dedicated to the memory of Richard Jones.

The Dance Program's Gala Reunion and Alumni Concert will take place Thursday through Saturday at 8 p.m. at UMass in Bowker Auditorium. Tickets are $6 for the general public, $4 for senior citizens and students and $2 for children.

Performathon at the mall showcases local talents

By PAUL DeGEORGES
Collegian Staff

If you thought the only performing arts you could see at the Hampshire Mall was a bunch of roller-skating junior high kids or nimble-fingered video game addicts... you were probably right.

But on Saturday from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m., the Mall will be the location of a veritable extravaganza of talent supplied by some excellent local performers. This time you won't have to settle for Tetris eye-strain though, because the featured performers are the advanced and professional students, faculty, alumnae and friends of the Performing Arts Division of the University of Massachusetts.

For four hours visitors to the mall will be treated to the likes of the Performing Arts Tappers dancing to the music of the 40's; songs from Broadway to the classics; music for the cello, flute and guitar; and "piano for the young."

Joyce Rice will present a harp demonstration. Michael Nix will play music for banjo, guitar, and lute. Other special guests gracing that faux-townhouse haven that is the Hampshire Mall will include jazz singer Karen Scruggs with gospel authority Horace Boyer, the Amherst High School Russian Club Women's Choir, the Shutesbury Elementary School singers, comedy improvisation by the Raw Material company, Gregory Dean Smith of the Enchanted Circle Theater, Philip Prather from the Connecticut Opera House, and UMass basketball's own Hoop Dancers.

The whole day will be emceed by WHMP newsperson Mary Hadad, Jesse Pensoneault and Jay Haines and Equity actress Jennifer Hugus for an hour each in that order. Proceeds from Saturday's events will help raise funds for the scholarship fund and is sponsored by the UMass Fine Arts Center and the Department of Music and Dance.

The Performing Arts Performathon will take place from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. at the Hampshire Mall, Hadley. Check it out!

SGA votes to seek legal counsel

By ALEX DERING
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate unanimously passed a motion at Wednesday's Student Government Association meeting to use legal counsel should the administration continue to refuse to recognize the May 9 student elections for president and trustee.

Although only three members of the SGA, President David Gagne, Trustee Kevin Newnan and Senator Bob Monaghan, originally sought out the Northampton law firm of Barnes and Etheridge, the SGA officially supported their action at Wednesday's meeting by passing a motion to allocate up to $2,500 for legal expenses.

"We went to the American Civil Liberties Union and then to Barnes and Etheridge because we have exhausted all other means of communication with the Administration," said Monaghan. "Through repeated attempts to come to an understanding with the administration, it has become apparent that they are unwilling to allow students to choose their own leaders."

Earlier this semester, the leadership of the Student Government at that time, President Natasha Diephius, Trustee Angus McQuilken, Speaker Dan Chesnicka, Treasurer Karen Talbot and Registrar Rebecca Rudko, also known as the "gang of five," made a request to the administration for help with the student government, which they felt had become unmanageable and unproductive.

The administration took control of the student government and began to create a new governmental body with the formation of the Commission on Undergraduate Student Governance.

The administration also announced all student elections would be placed on hold until the new government structure was in place, because they said the new structure would probably eliminate some positions that had existed in the old government.

The Student Senate then impeached several of the gang of five and voted to hold the April 9 elections despite the administration's refusal to recognize the validity of those elections. Gagne was elected student president and Newnan was elected student trustee.

After the Commission on Undergraduate Student Governance develops a viable new government, elections for the office of student trustee will be held in early May, according to the administration.

According to Gagne, the fight to get the April 9 elections recognized is becoming even more serious than first imagined.

"Stepping out of the University structure was not something we intended to do," said Gagne. "But if we are to represent the students and do our jobs effectively, then we have to do certain things, no matter how difficult or unpleasant they may be."

Newnan was quite adamant about not giving up the fight to get the April 9 elections recognized.

"We have lawyers and are prepared to fight [the SAO and administration]," he said. "All we want is recognition of the rights of students to choose their own leaders and we hope to accomplish that outside of court."

Irene Carew, chairperson of the SAO, said because no documents have reached her yet, she couldn't make a valid comment on the SGA decision to retain legal aid.

Man discusses abused women

Says men should take active role in prevention

By KATHERINE T. LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

Men need to be more active in the struggle against violence against women, a leader in the men's movement said yesterday in a forum in the University of Massachusetts Campus Center titled "Football, Feminism and Other Contemporary Contradictions."

"Men's role in the movement is to educate other men about violence against women," said Jackson Katz, the founder and leader of Real Men, a Boston-based "non-sexist male" organization.

According to Katz, men often are in a position to speak out against attacks on women, but fail to do so because they are afraid to be labeled as effeminate or gay.

"Homophobia is a big issue here," he said.

Katz added men are also afraid to look at their own behavior toward women, citing a case in which men describing their sexual experiences have mentioned how they coerced women into having sex with them, yet did not directly refer to the experience as a rape.

"The fact is that most men feel threatened by looking at themselves," he said. "Introspection is awkward."

According to Katz, this insecurity causes them to batter their women lovers, in the belief that violence, or the threat of it, guarantees power in the relationship. "Physically abusive men feel the need to physically control the women they're involved with," he said.

Katz disputed the popular idea of the "battle of the sexes," saying the battle is one-sided.

"One sex has been at war," he said, "and women are losing — badly."

Katz, a 1982 UMass graduate, was the first man to earn a certificate in the Women's Studies department. Since forming Real Men, he and the group have participated in leafletting campaigns at New England Patriots and Boston Red Sox games, protesting the amount of sexual harassment in sports. Other protests included marches on Super Bowl Sunday — which Katz said was "the worst day of the year for battered women" — and boycotts of comedians Andrew Dice Clay and Sam Kinison for sexist humor.

Katz said men can help women fight sexism and violence against women in many ways, including participating in rallies such as "Take Back the Night," supporting political candidates who are committed to women's full equality and dealing with their own sexism.

Most of all, he said, men should learn from women themselves.

"If you really care about the women in your life, speak out against sexism and violence against women," he said.

Judge rejects $100 million settlement in Exxon oil spill

ANCHORAGE, ALASKA (AP) — Exxon's proposed $1 billion settlement of the nation's worst oil spill has been placed in doubt by a judge's ruling that a $100 million criminal fine isn't enough punishment.

Under a plan announced last month, Exxon agreed to pay fines of $50 million each to the federal and state government. The company also agreed to pay $900 million as part of a separate settlement of civil claims to clean up Alaska's shoreline.

But U.S. District Judge H. Russel Holland ruled Wednesday that the $100 million in fines was not enough to deter future oil spills.

"The fines which were proposed to me were simply not adequate," said Holland who added that he had studied federal sentencing guidelines in reaching his decision. "There is no question that the Exxon Valdez oil spill was off the chart."

With Holland's rejection of the criminal fine, Exxon could withdraw from the $900 million civil settlement.

The company also pleaded guilty to four misdemeanor pollution charges in exchange for the dropping of felony counts as part of the agreement, and Holland gave Exxon until May 24 to decide if it would withdraw those pleas.

The Justice Department said it would go to trial on the criminal charges if the pleas are withdrawn.

Exxon spokesperson Joe Tucker said Wednesday the company had no immediate comment.

"I don't think anybody suspected this would happen," said Sen. Pat Rodey (D-Anchorage) and a member of a panel that helped work out the settlement between state and federal officials and Exxon.

"Certainly, conventional wisdom was that the plea agreement would be approved," Rodey said.

"We thought it was a good plea agreement," said James Neal, lead attorney for Exxon Shipping Co.

Justice Department officials in Washington and Gov. Walter J. Hickel, who was in Los Angeles on Wednesday, also expressed disappointment at Holland's decision.

But environmentalists who had complained that the criminal fines were too low, praised the judge's ruling.

"It's about time somebody called the shots like they really are," said Riki Ott, a leader of the Oil Reform Alliance, an oil industry watchdog group formed after the spill.

Alaska Attorney General Charles Cole said Exxon has 10 days to decide whether it will withdraw from the settlement.

A Justice Department official in Washington, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the department would be willing to talk with Exxon about the possibility of reaching a new agreement within the next 30 days.

An analysis done for The Associated Press in March showed the total cost to Exxon of a $1 billion settlement could be as little as $486.3 million if the company took tax savings on it and purchased an annuity to make the payments over 10 years.

Iraq ordered to withdraw troops

By WALTER PUTNAM
Associated Press Writer

BAGHDAD, IRAQ — Iraq insisted yesterday it is negotiating in good faith with Kurdish rebels, but word of a reported agreement on Kurdish autonomy met with skepticism in Washington and among some Kurdish refugees and guerrillas.

Meanwhile, the United States, Britain and France have told Iraq to withdraw its security forces from the refugee zone in northern Iraq by the weekend, the White House announced yesterday.

Press secretary Marlin Fitzwater said the ultimatum, delilvered Wednesday night to Iraqi officials at the United Nations, instructs Iraq to immediately begin pulling its forces out of the Zakho area near the Turkish border.

In northern Iraq yesterday, allied officials said Iraqi police appeared to be heeding an order to leave the area around Zakho.

The allies are trying to convince Kurdish refugees it is safe to return to allied-protected camps in northern Iraq.

Kurdish rebel leaders said Wednesday they had secured a tentative pact, from Saddam Hussein, that would grant them a measure of autonomy, which they have sought in decades of struggle.

But the Bush administration questioned whether Saddam could be trusted, and many refugees in camps along the Turkish and Iraqi frontier were still skittish about returning to their homes.

Iraq's prime minister, Saadoun Hammadi, yesterday accused the U.S.-led allies of interfering in Iraq's domestic affairs by ordering Iraqi authorities to vacate the so-called northern "safety zone" where Kurdish refugee camps are being set up.

But Hammadi also said Iraq is prepared to "open a new page" in its relations with other countries.

At a Baghdad news conference, Hammadi said little about the reported agreement with the Kurds, but said the government was acting "with sincerity" in its negotiations with the rebels.

Asked whether Iraq would enter similar talks with Shiite rebels in the south, he replied: "Iraq has the desire and is willing to hold any dialogue that would serve the interests of Iraq."

Student creates archive of Gregory Levey

By AMY HENRY
Collegian Staff

Aaron Fincke, who is an Amherst resident and Hampshire College, as well as seven Five College students and members of the community, are creating an archive about Gregory Levey to document all the community reactions and events surrounding his self-immolation.

Levey lit himself on fire Feb. 18, 1991 with paint thinner at the Amherst Common and died almost immediately.

The purpose of the project is to serve dually as documentation and memorialization, said Fincke. "It's important to have the archive for future generations to have public access to understand what went on," he said.

Fincke, who helped develop the idea for the archive project, is concentrating in philosophy at Hampshire College and is doing the project as an independent study. The archive will be finished midsummer and housed in the Jones Library in Amherst.

Fincke said before Levey's death he had intellectualized the issues surrounding the Persian Gulf War. "I was involved in anti-war organizing, keeping up with current events, and arguing with people who didn't agree with me, to constantly refine my views."

Levey's self-immolation brought home the human dimension of the Gulf War, Fincke said. "We were all affected by the emotional poisoning resulting from the uncertainty around the civilian destruction caused by the Gulf War. Levey was an example of destruction caused by the Gulf War. Levey was an example of someone who couldn't function any longer under that pressure. It was partially an act of desperation," said Fincke.

Levey's death was also politically motivated, he said.

"Although he was not involved in the anti-war movement at the time, he had been in the past. After talking with his family and friends, I've learned he was a very politically aware person and very upset with American foreign policy. Before he died he burned an American flag."

Emile Durkheim, a turn-of-the-century French sociologist, describes a psychological basis for altruistic suicide that could explain Levey's self-immolation, according to Fincke.

"Altruistic suicide involves excessive integration of the individual into society. He cannot separate his personal identity from some facet of the societal structure," Fincke said.

Fincke said he got the idea for the archive during the two-week existence of the vigil and memorial site. He felt Levey's acts and the following community reactions were of great historical significance and were unprecedented locally.

"Because of the sense of grief and tragedy spawned by a public death, Levey's was a kind of action that ruptured the fabric of the community. It brought all political polarization into sharp distinction," he said.

The funds for the project came from the Gregory D. Levey Memorial Fund.

Fincke said his primary goal in the production of the archive is to create a completely objective record of all events surrounding the self-immolation.

The archive will consist of three sections, the first of which will contain four essays. The first essay will have both "right-" and "left-" wing perspectives on the Gulf War and the social conditions for freedom of speech, to provide a historical context, Fincke said. The second essay furnishes biographical information on Levey.

The third essay provides Western sociological and psychiatric perspectives on suicide as a mental illness, to establish the ideological basis for a large part of the community's reaction, Fincke said. The fourth essay is a chronology of the political suicides since 1963 to provide the historical basis for viewing Levey's act as one of protest, he Levey's act as one of protest, he said.

"It is important to provide both perspectives of the self-immolation because the community reacted to it in both ways," Fincke said. "In creating this archive I have considered ways," Fincke said. "In creating this archive I have considered its importance in the long-term and short term. I'm using archival materials that will last for centuries. "Because time will obscure the cultural milieu that created Greg's act and the subsequent reactions, it's essential that one provides the historical, scientific, and cultural context for these events. Otherwise the archive wouldn't be as useful.

The second section, the bulk of the archive, will be a media, photographic and written materials including composite of transcriptions from radio broadcasts, 70 newspaper clippings, people's writings from the diary books that were left at the memorial site and over 70 photographs of events in town.

The third section is a photographic inventory of artifacts that were left on the common. "People left a great amount of things of personal and/or monetary value," he said.

"By putting those three sections together with attention to chronology and aesthetics I have tried to recreate events surrounding his death and on the common to vicariously allow people to get a sense of the tragedy and controversy that occurred in Amherst," he said.

Speaker address life of gays on college campuses

By JOE O'CONNOR
Collegian Correspondent

"Dyke, man-hater, lezzie . . ."

These were some of the insulting terms for lesbians listed by a woman as part of an introductory anti-homophobic exercise held by Warren Blumenfeld Wednesday night in Campus Center 917.

Blumenfeld, a member of the Boston Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Speaker's Bureau, has also written a book titled, Looking at Gay and Lesbian Life. Blumenfeld spoke to a group of about 35 students, faculty, and community members about what is happening on collge campuses for homosexuals and bisexuals in a lecture titled, "GLB Studies."

Blumenfeld said he wanted the audience to fully realize how negatively society portrays homosexuals. Blumenfeld then went on to talk about efforts being made on college campuses to disseminate accurate information about homosexuals in order to dispel negative myths and stereotypes.

Blumenfeld described two Research Centers at Yale and the City University of New York that have archives for lesbian, gay, or as he terms it "lesbigay," and bisexual works and information.

"What's interesting also is the availability of research directories . . . they tell you who's working on what, around the world," Blumenfeld said.

Other recent developments include openly lesbian and gay, or lesbigay, therapists and counselors in colleges. They're present "either to help a student cope with criticism for being lesbian or gay, or to help a student emerging as gay or lesbian," Blumenfeld said.

"Fraternities and sororities are also developing around the country for gays and lesbians," Blumenfeld said. He went on to say that many national fraternities and sororities have stated acceptance for lesbian and gay members, but he went on to detail instances where some closeted gays and lesbians have been kicked out when their sexual orientation was discovered.

"The privacy of those individuals should not have been violated," he said.

Blumenfeld listed numerous other advances for lesbigay student and faculty groups, like scholarships, "domestic partnerships," which allow same sex couples the same benefits as married student housing, and the new degree of Lesbian, Bisexual, and Gay Studies available as an Associate's Degree at the City College of San Fransisco. However, he said there were difficulties with this degree.

"How do you define Lesbian, Bisexual, and Gay studies? We don't know. Would Lesbian studies fall under the Women's Issues Department? Would it fall under the Gay studies Department? Would it have a separate department?" Blumenfeld said.

He also said the same problem existed with lesbigay literature.

"Would a book by a 'straight' author with a gay subplot be lesbigay literature? What about a book by Oscar Wilde with no specific meaning?" he said. Blumenfeld added that only time will settle these problems.

State college presidents have no appetite for Weld's dinner

SPRINGFIELD (AP) — Calling it a "sham" and worse, presidents from most of the state's colleges are saying "Thanks, but no thanks" to an invitation from the governor to an official dinner.

Asking the nearly broke colleges to help finance the governor's annual dinner to honor outstanding employees at a time when state workers are being furloughed to save money is "like a script from 'The Marquis de Sade School of Human Relations,'" said Springfield Technical Community College President Andrew Scibelli.

The cost of the October dinner at the Park Plaza Hotel in Boston, which in past years has attracted about 1,400 people, is split evenly among the participating agencies with each being charged $250 for every honoree they send, he said. Most of the colleges are being charged about $1,000.

David A. Haley, state commissioner of personnel administration, who started the "Pride and Performance" dinner eight years ago, said yesterday that 75 of the 88 government agencies invited have accepted. "In difficult times it is more important than ever to honor outstanding employees," said Haley.

Haley also criticized some of the college presidents for their sharp letters of rejection which he said suggested that "being a college president doesn't bring great wisdom."

Although all nine state colleges and at least seven of the 15 community colleges are staying away, Haley said he has gotten acceptances from three community colleges and all three of the state universities.

Steven Wollmer, a spokesperson for the Massachusetts Teachers Association, which represents the faculty at the public colleges and universities, hailed the protest.

"Asking the colleges to pay for dinners when they are being underfunded by

TV viewers polled

Study: Greater effect in US than USSR

By MICHAEL MANGIARACINA
Collegian Correspondent

American television viewers are more likely, than Soviet viewers, to be influenced by what they watch, according to one finding of a recent study on the effects of television in America and the Soviet Union.

The study, a first of its kind, was conducted by Michael Morgan, a communications professor at the University of Massachusetts, George Gerbner of the University of Pennsylvania, and Ellen Mickiewicz of Emory University. In the United States, "half of light viewers say they get much satisfaction out of life, but only . . . about a third of heavy viewers say they get very much satisfaction," said Morgan in a recent interview.

"It's a syndrome. If you have fewer cultural resources to draw upon . . . and you tend to be more lonely, bored and depressed to begin with, then you're more likely to stay at home and watch more television," he said.

In the Soviet Union, only 5 percent of those polled reported the highest life satisfaction. However, Morgan said television viewing did not seem to be a factor. "It's not related to television. Fewer people are satisfied in the Soviet Union and television doesn't have anything to do with it."

Unlike those in the United States, people with more education in the Soviet Union reported lower satisfaction, and a person's income did not seem to be a factor.

Morgan cited grim economic conditions as one root of Soviet dissatisfaction. "It doesn't matter if you have more income . . . there's nothing to buy anyway."

A sociological effect known as "mainstreaming" was linked to television viewing in the United States. This phenomena occurs when different population groups begin to display similar views and opinions, Morgan said.

"In the U.S., even though there was more diversity overall, that was much reduced among heavy viewers," said Morgan. Television seems to have become a cultural link between otherwise diverse American groups, he said.

According to Morgan, television viewing seems to have little of the same effect on Soviet audiences. There is a greater overall similarity between Soviet population groups, but this has not been linked to television, he said. The common hardships faced by the Soviet Union is the unifying factor, he said.

Americans are more willing to believe what they see on television, especially on news programs, Morgan said. Those who watch the news, Morgan said, "believe most of it, without realizing they're mostly getting government ideology."

Soviet news is widely perceived as propaganda and the public usually says "if it's on the news, then people know it's not millions of dollars to honor employees who are being furloughed is a classic case of fiddling while Rome burns," Wollmer said. "It's surreal."

Scibelli said that his temper snapped when he found a packet of informational materials on the dinner "at least one and one half inches thick" on his desk the morning after Weld announced last month that he was furloughing state employees to save money.

He fired off a letter to Gov. William F. Weld that said, in part, "I'm sure all of my employees will be overwhelmed with this recognition now that the governor has decided to furlough them, demonstrating his own form of recognition for dedicated service.

"If nothing else, you have given new meaning to the word bureaucrat and trust me, it hasn't elevated it," he wrote.

The state college presidents also refused to participate in last year's award dinner to protest college cutbacks, said Paul Weller, president of Framingham State College.

David Bartley, president of Holyoke Community College, said his school planned to put the $1,000 that would have been spent on the dinner, into a student loan fund.

Notes from the Basement

A few moldy leftovers from the budget cut file: If Gov. Weld thinks professors — and, for that matter, state troopers, fire fighters, hospital employees, etc. — are "essential," he should pay them. Weld's logic is especially goofy in regard to his just recently abandoned attempt to give his cabinet a raise. According to Weld, the men and women on his cabinet are good at what they do, and they were promised a raise a while back, and if things continue like this they'll get fed up and leave state service . . .

Hmmmm. Couldn't the same case be made for good, angry people on the state payroll everywhere?

Of the 17 UMass grads who are state senators and representatives, two are on the Senate Ways and Means Committee and three more are on the House Ways and Means Committee, in whose hands the Governor's disastrous budget now lies. Kenneth Lemanski (D-Chicopee), is Vice Chair of House Ways and Means, and David Magnani (D-Framingham), and Stan Rosenberg (D-Amherst), are both Committee members.

It is not a given that UMass grads in the Legislature are strong supporters of public higher education. Based on his voting record in 1990, Stephen Brewer (D-Barre), sided with Citizens for Limited Taxation 88 percent of the time and against the Massachusetts Teachers' Association 40 percent of the time, according to the Massachusetts Political Almanac, published by the Center for Leadership Studies.

Other UMass-educated reps with short memories include Lemanski, who voted against the MTA party line 52 percent of the time in 1990, Magnani (59 percent) and Senate Ways and Means Committee member William MacLean Jr. (56 percent).

As a yardstick, Rosenberg, historically one of UMass' best friends at the Statehouse, sided with the MTA 96 percent and against CLT 90 percent of the time in 1990.

Sally Kerans (D-Danvers), and Daniel Valianti (D-Marlboro), have both been in office less than half a year, and as freshman legislators, could be especially receptive to a letter.

Advised Rosenberg, "You can't take any legislator for granted. Two years ago when I proposed a bill that would have increased UMass' funding, some [alums] voted against it."

Hispanic groups don't just party

As a member of the Hispanic community and as a student of the Bilingual Collegiate Program, I feel the responsibility to reply to the article, "All Puerto Ricans Want To Do Is Party," by Charles R. Venator.

Before pointing out some important things the BCP does for our students and for our community, I would like to inform all the ignorant people out there that being Hispanic means pertaining to the language, people, and culture of Spain and Latin America. While we are trying to address our people's ignorance, Mr. Venator is promoting it by writing this insolent article.

The idea of the BCP promoting illiteracy is ridiculous. The BCP has several programs which are reaching out to the Hispanic students, even to an eighth grade level, so that these students get motivated about continuing their education. One of the main concerns of the BCP and one of the tasks it is trying to accomplish, is to inspire these youngsters, as well as the students who are presently in college, to carry on with their education and become prosperous people. Besides throwing expensive parties, like Venator claims, the BCP, AHORA, The Cultural Center and the students involved in these organizations participate in Latin America Week, the International Fair, concerts, theater, and other events. In addition, these organizations are involved in recruiting Hispanic students to UMass. They are trying to create a strong support system for the minority students at UMass, and to educate the community in general. They are also trying to enlighten the North Americans about the Hispanic culture.

At least Mr. Venator had the dignity to give the BCP some credit for "filling admissions quotas, finding financial aid and promoting good tutoring." Well, if these things aren't helping our students and our community, and if you have some better ideas, why don't you stop by the BCP or any of the organizations' offices and volunteer to help. After all, you were a member of AHORA, not RIGHT-NOW, when the organization, according to you, went down.

Every organization in UMass needs some revision Mr. Venator, and if we were to talk about people sitting on their chairs and drawing paychecks, we could start with our governor and legislators, who, right now, don't seem to be doing anything to help our educational system.

Mr. Venator expresses a great concern about the oppression and stereotyping Hispanics are facing in this country, yet in his article, he contributes to it. If you are going to talk about Hispanics partying all the time, speak for yourself and not for the rest of us. If you want to keep your dignity and honor, don't support the stereotypes and don't use our name to get the attention of the readers. We are worth more and have more dignity than that.

An apology for the semi-formal

We would like to apologize for the comment that was made during the Northeast/Sylvan semi-formal on Friday, April 19. This comment, directed at the Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual community, was made by a non-University student who was properly censured, and more importantly, was made out of ignorance. We applaud Shawn Cotter for speaking out for the GLB community. It is paramount to realize the difference between ignorance and malice. We must stand together to combat such ignorance. We support the eradication of ignorance through education. We would like to invite speakers from the LBGA to hold a forum in our area next semester. Armenian deaths ignored

Yesterday, April 24, was National Armenian Genocide Remembrance Day. Or at least it should be. On April 24, 1915, the extermination of the Armenian race officially came into effect as proposed by the newly-instated Young Turk regime in the Ottoman empire.

This action was set forth as a result of the Armenian state wanting to to break away from the empire, and religious disputes between Christian Armenians and Muslim Turks. On this day all Armenians of stature, i.e. intellectuals, scholars, priests, doctors, political leaders, etc., were arrested in Constantinople and imprisoned. After a total of 600 persons were collected, they were sent to various towns in Turkish Armenia to be eradicated.

Christian Garbis Adanalian

Over the next several years, vast numbers of Armenian women and children were forced out of their homes in villages across Turkish Armenia and sent to the Syrian desert. They were forced to march until they died of starvation, exhaustion, or at the hands of "gendarmes," released prisoners whose duty was to kill Armenians in exchange for their release. Armenian men were either shot to death in the outskirts of their villages or were forced to hard labor until they eventually died.

Those Armenians who survived the desert were sent to concentration camps outside Aleppo and Damascus in Syria where they were murdered. These atrocities were committed by the Turkish government off and on until 1923.

Talaat Pasha, the Minister of the Interior of the Young Turk regime, was the first leader to perpetuate the mass extinction of an entire race of people. Thus, the Armenian Genocide was the precursor of the Holocaust. Talaat invented the blueprint for genocide, a set of basic rules for exterminating an entire race. This plan would later by implemented by the Nazi regime. As a result, 1,500,000 Armenians perished over an eight year period.

In October of 1989, Senate Minority leader Robert J. Dole proposed that the remembrance day be made official after similar attempts had been made in 1985. The proposal was shelved and brought up again in February of last year, which caused a huge dispute both in Congress and in Turkey. If passed, the bill would call for the president of the United States to officially announce the day as Armenian Genocide Remembrance Day and to ask all Americans to recognize the day with fellow Armenian-Americans.

However, the Turkish government was not happy with the proposal, continuing to deny what had happened earlier in the century. The Turkish government threatened to break all diplomatic relations with the United States and began suspending all U.S. military operations on bases in Turkey. Thus, to avoid any conflicts with their strong ally, Congress threw the proposal out the window.

Every time it is brought up, chaos develops between the United States and Turkey. If the politicians in this country were not such cowards they would face up to Turkey, force the Turkish government into admitting the atrocities, and pass a bill commemorating April 24 as Armenian Remembrance Day. But because the United States needs Turkey for strategic military purposes, the United States will continue to brown-nose the Turkish government. However, the United States has officially recognized April 11 as Holocaust Remembrance Day. This is unjust.

Not only should the Armenian people have such a day, but all peoples that have suffered from mass extermination should also have one. Cambodian-Americans should be remembered for the atrocities committed against Cambodians under Pol Pot during the 1970s, American-Indian Remembrance Day should be established for those who perished in the 1800s, etc.

I ask that all UMass students remember the genocide, and show support for Armenian Remembrance Day. Thank you.

ARTS & LIVING

Max Roach to bring his quartet to the Horse

By BILL ROSENBLATT
Collegian Staff

Max Roach puts in a lot of appearances around here for a world-class musical giant. He gives guest lectures in music courses, plays at Fine Arts Center concerts and appears at the Bright Moments festival each summer. But do we ever get enough of him and his great music? No way. Next Monday night, he will be playing his first club date in the area in almost two decades; his quartet will be at the Iron Horse in Northampton for two shows at 7 p.m. and 10 p.m.

Valley Jazz

There is absolutely no better introduction to jazz than at a Max Roach gig. He personifies the music; he is the living embodiment of a large portion of its history. Hearing him play live is tantamount to hearing a European classical music concert by Bach, Mozart, Schubert, Stravinsky and Webern all rolled up into one.

The analogy holds because Roach is perhaps the only musician of his era who has kept up with the accelerated pace of the music's innovations; unlike most of his contemporaries, he is still with us (physically), and his music defies relegation to one specific era or genre. An entire book would be needed to do justice to all of his accomplishments; he is reputed to be working on his autobiography, but in the meantime, the following sketchy outline will have to do.

Max Roach was born in North Carolina. At an early age, his family moved to New York City (Brooklyn); like many African-Americans of the pre-WWII era, they wanted to escape the segregated South to the "promised land" of jobs and integration in the industrialized North.

In the mid-1940s, Roach participated in the "bebop" revolution under Dizzy Gillespie and Charlie Parker. His first leader gig involved a quintet (with Clifford Brown and Sonny Rollins) that defined the music of the 50s known as "hard bop" — the style imitated by most of today's young prodigies. In 1960, his We Insist: Freedom Now Suite pioneered the connection of African-Americans' music with their social struggle.

He took his first teaching position at the University of Buffalo in the late 60s, and in 1972 he came to — that's right — UMass, to start one of the first Afro-American music programs at an American university. He taught here full-time for a few years, after which he became adjunct faculty and devoted more time to recording and performing.

In the late 70s through early 80s, Roach made duet recordings with the likes of Cecil Taylor, Anthony Braxton and Archie Shepp, that showed once and for all that the so-called "free" music is part of the African-American music continuum and not some pseudo-intellectual, elitist offshoot (as many critics considered it to be). His subsequent percussion ensemble, M'Boom, went as far as anyone in demonstrating the music's connections to African and other non-Western indigenous cultures.

More recently, he has dealt with electronics ("from bebop to hip-hop," as he has put it) and with the innovative use of string in jazz. His Double Quartet consisted of the standard European string quartet (two violins, viola and 'cello) and a traditional jazz quartet of trumpet, saxophone, bass and drums. The Double Quartet's gig at the FAC a couple of years ago remains one of my favorite concerts in recent years.

It would be fair to say that the most appropriate answer to the old bugbear question, "What is jazz?" is, "Whatever Max Roach has done or is doing."

He has worked hard at increasing the acceptance of the music as this country's legitimately original contribution to world musical culture. His crowning achievement in this area was his recent receipt of the prestigious MacArthur "genius" award, the first ever to a Black musician. In addition to the no-strings-attached money the award provided, it was a strong signal from the "establishment" that the music should be taken seriously. Although it has a long way to go before it achieves parity with European classical music in this regard, Roach's MacArthur Prize was a significant step.

Roach normally plays auditoriums and concert halls, but now we get to see him in the intimate setting of a small club. He will be bringing the quartet he has been working with since the mid-80s, the same lineup as that which formed half of the Double Quartet. This super-tight band consists of Odean Pope on saxophones, Cecil Bridgewater on trumpet, Tyrone Brown on bass and of course Roach on drums.

Pope and Brown are both Philadelphians who were that city's "best-kept secrets" for a long time. Pope started out in the late 50s as a protege of John Coltrane; more recently, he has led the 8-horn Saxophone Choir around Philly and at New York's forward-thinking Knitting Factory. Brown's name has been whispered in awe by countles bassists, as in, "Man, there's this baad cat down in Philly...' Cecil Bridgewater has been involved in varios activities in and out of jazz, including the demanding world of Broadway pit bands.

This band will be history, and it will be fun. Go see Roach's quartet next Monday night, and be prepared to increase your understanding of what the music called jazz is all about.

Hughes tells of travels in I Wonder as I Wander

By JAY ALLAIN
Collegian Correspondent

I Wonder As I Wander
Langston Hughes
Thunder's Mouth Press

Today's society can clearly be characterized as one in which the visual media have gained dominance over the printed word. Leaving aside the challenge this presents to those who teach writing and literature, it also means that many people will never come to know an actual poet. Some may even be stunned to learn that some of their fellow human beings would devote their lives to the ineffable calling of following the Muse, putting a pen to her promptings, however measured or far away.

Book Review

While it is unlikely that we will encounter another period like Poland during World War II when poetry was as "essential as bread," Volume Two of Langston Hughes' autobiography brings the highly diverse life of the famed poet and novelist alive. I Wonder as I Wander hearkens back in form to the Oriental tradition of the journal kept during times of travel. In this case, Hughes, one of Black America's most prominent writers, begins by describing the gritty circumstances of his own life. While only 27, the stock market crash hit.

"When I was twenty-eight," he writes, "my personal crash came." Although writing had figured in his life prior to this, economic necessity forced it into a fresh incarnation.

"For ten years I had been a writer of sorts, but a writer who wrote mostly because, when I felt bad, writing kept me from feeling worse," he wrote.

Ah, the sensitive, misunderstood poet perhaps? Enter the Great Depression, an economic backdrop whose resonance is palpable today. In the crisp, candid prose that characterizes his prose style, the author observes,". . .if I were to live and write at all, since I did not know how to do anything else, I had to make a living from writing itself. So, of necessity, I began to turn poetry into bread."

Because the author is Black, his life's experiences frequently collided with the entrenched attitudes of racial separatism. Yet leave the shores of the old United States and racial attitudes often evolved dramatically.

One of my favorite vignettes in the bood is the second entry, "Havana Nights." For those of us raised in post-Castro times when United States spin doctors paint Cuba in joyless ideological terms, it is intriguing to see a Black writer encounter pre-revolutionary Havana — and an all-day party at that! As the wine and urmba fill the balmy twilight, Hughes writes of a small Black band, "Like a mighty dynamo deep in the bowels of the earth, the frums throbbed, beat, sobbed, grumbled, cried, and then laughed a staccato laugh. The dancing kept up until it was quite dark and the first stars came out." Hughes' fascination with the lavish event literally leaps off the page and one wishes he/she made the party too.

However not all is fun and frolicking. Back in the United States, one quickly learns that raciam did not simply have to do with integrated bathrooms; being on "the wrong side" of the racial divide in the Deep South could sometimes unleash the venom of bigoted natives. As Hughes travelled the South reading his poetry, mostly to college audiences, one of his campus guides recoils at the way two Blacks have been killed. A Dean of Students, Juliette Dericotte, extremely well-liked by her students, was in a serious auto accident. In another incident a Black athlete struggled to find the right parking lot. Hughes' guide exclaims, "How could any hospital refuse to take her in, injured, bleeding — just because she's colored? And one of our football stars beaten to death by an Alabama mob because he parked his car in a white parking lot by mistake?"

There is little of the author's poetry here to augment the context of his literary swing through the South. But perhaps to show that poetry can be anything but staid and obscure, Hughes relates an incident that peaked in Chapel Hill, North Carolina after an essay and a poem of his graced the literary presses.

Commenting on the poem, "Christ in Alabama," Hughes writes, "It was an ironic poem inspired of the thought of how Christ, with no human father, would be accepted were He born in the South of a Negro mother, and it ended: "Most Holy Bastard/Of the bleeding mouth/Nigger Christ/On the cross of the South!"

For those of us who've never been near a poet, "I Wonder as I Wander" is a superlative antidote; and for those of us who feel miseducated about issues of race, Langston Hughes' autobiography is a necessary corrective. And there are two volumes of him to enjoy this summer.

Joffe exhibits thesis

By SARAH ELLIOT
Collegian Correspondent

Stop yourself for just a moment. Look around you. . .observe. Listen carefully. . .concentrate. Chances are you will either see a poster or hear a passerby comment on what has appeared in the UMass art galleries throughout this week. Eight inspired graduate students of the UMass art department are, or will soon be, luring curious students and professors into their transformed galleries to present their M.F.A. thesis exhibitions. Gert Joffe is one such artist who enchants us with a collection of landscape drawings entitled Textures, Contrast and Nature.

While admiring Joffe's work, you begin to wish we could all view landscapes and nature as he does. Applying a variety of techniques, including lithography and etching on copper and media including charcoal, ink, and pastels, he strives to capture untimely nature settings of river banks, trees and prairies in a lucid poetic manner. He clearly demonstrates a keen understanding of what it means to absorb such a tranquil yet secretly active environment, as well as infuse it into the eye of the viewer.

Joffe creates these specific moods, partially by looking beyond the actual surface of his subject matter, as he methodically roots between the crevices of the pebbles, and within the clusters of leaves dangling from branches and finds another level of life through his detail, precision and keen observation.

The Student Union Art Gallery has become a kind of placid haven in the midst of an active campus. It just might bring back some memories from summers past and activate some hidden excitement for the summer that is soon to come. . .as you think of wading in cool springs and taking long summer strolls through shaded forests hills. You can still capture this essence through April 26 (which is today, so hurry). . .it's just what the doctor ordered before the commotion of finals and the end of school activities.

LIVING COLOR IS NOT SOLD OUT. Please ignore what was said in the calendar listings in yesterday's paper. You can still purchase Living Color tickets at For the Record in Amherst, The Northampton Box Office, The UMass Fine Arts Center Box Office and Main Street Records in Northampton.

We are heartfully sorry. We have made a hideous error. We don't do it to often, but when we do we like to correct ourselves. Please don't hate us because we're wicked stupid.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Financial matters continue to dominate your thoughts. Someone you thought was your friend may be trying to pull a fast one. Stick to projects you can handle alone.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A family member's erratic behavior may be difficult to understand. Use reasoning to extricate yourself from a sticky situation. Concentrate on one thing at a time. Teamwork will prove satisfying.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Throw away outdated ideas. Start something new today. Homemakers discover ways to make money from their creative and artistic skills. Approach a potential love interest – live for the moment!

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You are better at expressing yourself now. A telephone call to a friend could lead to new business. Travel goes hand-in-hand with romance. If single, you give more and more thought to marriage.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A new relationship helps you open previously closed doors. Financial gains result from a special encounter. Mate is willing to help you with a special project. Make a grand entrance at a social event.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A new independence helps you move closer to a long-sought goal. Your salesmanship could make you a legend in your own time! Give romance another chance: it is time to forgive a mistake.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Something that once seemed impossible now looks highly likely. A speculative venture makes a big difference to you finances. You and your mate bring each other luck! Work together as a team.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You could receive some special information over lunch. Use it wisely. Putting all of your cards on the table will win you a second chance. Look confidently to the future. Romance deepens.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Approach family members in the spirit of love and understanding. You may win them over to your way of thinking. Set no terms. A give-and-take attitude will cement a promising relationship.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Although everybody appears friendly and cooperative, you cannot be certain that you will obtain the results you want. Put more zip into your spiel.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Stay on your toes. Someone who lacks your scruples could try to deceive you. Pay more attention to joint holdings, investments and tax matters. Revelations abound tonight. Better days lie ahead.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Put a big job aside and tackle those little ones that have been piling up. A relative could be difficult to get along with now. Limit your everyday spending and build savings.

Mizesko (16-6) was equally as tough. She struck out 13 Minutewomen, 11 in extra innings – when it counted the most. In the 12th with Aprile on third with only one out, Mizesko got Bush and Bonnie Schilling to strike out swinging. At one point during the extra stanza she retired 11 in a row.

"I was so into the game that, when people got on base I just bore down," Mizesko said. "You just have to keep your composure when facing a team as explosive as UMass, and luckily I did."

UMass was able to crack Mizesko, who had only given up nine earned runs before yesterday, as they scrapped back into the game. In the fifth with Bush on second, pinch hitter Chris Collins hit a grounder to shortstop, Donna Fagan. She tried to throw out Bush at third and overthrew Woodman, allowing Bush to score. In the sixth, with DellAnno on third and Barbara Marean on first, Aprile came up with a clutch single to tie the game at 2-all.

In game two, it was all UMass. The Minutewomen, happy to see Mizesko on the bench, hammered on pitcher Pat Conlan, scoring five runs in the second, while batting around. Conlan (14-4) had previously only allowed 12 earned runs this season.

The heroics were led by Marean, who had a base-clearing triple in the third. Aprile and Jen Miller also had RBIs.

The key to this game was not hitting, but Darlene Claffey. Claffey (13-4) threw a one hitter and recorded her 12th shutout of the season. The game was stopped in the sixth inning due to darkness. The lone hit was a single by Blackman in the top of the sixth. Claffey already has four no-hitters this season.

UMass will try to avoid a letdown tomorrow when they face Central Connecticut at 3:30 p.m. on Totman Field.

last year's ace Gerry Creamer was offset by the addition of Ron Villone, who has been dependable and effective in the closer role. Villone has averaged a strike out per inning this year, which is good for fourth place in the A-10.

The Minutemen have been more consistent this year also, although they have struggled to bring their record over the .500 level, due to two big losing streaks early in the season. UMass has won 13 of their last 18 games.

However, Temple has improved significantly this year also, according to baseball information director Mike Mahoney.

"This year, we're a lot stronger in all aspects, especially fielding," he said. "Our hitting is getting guys into scoring position especially our hit and run."

Temple's Bob Higginson is tearing up the league. He's hitting .402 with 12 home runs, which leads the A-10, and 50 runs batted in.

Massachusetts Gorillas host those New Jersey Knights at 1 p.m. on The Hill (with a forecast of sunny skies and temperatures in the high 70s).

Rutgers (No. 10) has lost to the likes of Princeton (5), Johns Hopkins (7), Loyola (8) and, most recently, Syracuse. The game between the Orangemen and the Knights proved to be festive as the teams swapped the lead numerous times.

Rutgers had leads of 6-1 and 10-4 in the first half before Syracuse initiated an 11-1 tear in the second and third quarters. An Orange streak gave them a 15-11 lead which was answered by four Rutgers goals which closed the game to 16-15. The end result was 20-15.

Senior Steve Luciano led the Knights with five goals for that game, tying Syracuse's Tom Marachek and Tom Gilmartin. Luciano leads Rutgers in points with 27 goals and 21 assists and has led the team in goals four times and assists five times.

Senior John Mone (pronounced Mo-NAY), senior Steve Locker and sophomore Chris Pratt have contributed their share of goals and assists for the Knights.

Last year's game proved to be a heart-stopper. With 1:19 in regulation, Mark Feinberg netted what would be the winning goal for UMass. But the 12-11 UMass lead was threatened by Greg Rinaldi who shot wide with 15 seconds left to play. The Knights were held scoreless in that fourth quarter as the defense came to the rescue.

Tri-captain Jim McAleavey walked away with one goal and four assists and Francis Pepe netted two goals. Hugh O'Callaghan and Mark Millon each had one goal.

Millon has scored in every game this season and surpassed his scoring totals from last year in the first five games. He has been team goal leader in five games this season.

McAleavey still leads the team in points with 10 goals and 24 assists. Jim Kushner has scored five goals and one assist in the last two games and has 15 goals and five assists for the year, including a team-high six goal effort against Brown.

Defensive-midfielder Mario Lopez is 'tenatively' out for the season after hyper-extending his left knee against Harvard Wednesday, according to coach Ted Garber.

As a result, Jim Panetta will probably see more action this weekend.

"I've been ready to play all year," Panetta said after Wednesday's game. "When I first got out there, I was overwhelmed . . . once I got my first hit, I felt more confident."

UMass, UConn split softball doubleheader

By DAN WETZEL
Collegian Staff

It had it all.

Great defense, clutch hitting, big pitches and more drama than anyone needs for a Thursday afternoon. The only thing it didn't have for the University of Massachusetts softball team was a win.

Yesterday in the opener of a doubleheader UMass (25-10) lost a 3-2 heartbreaker to UConn (30-12) in 14 innings. The Minutewomen rallied to win the nightcap 5-0.

However, it will be game one that will most be remembered. In the top of the 14th, UConn's Wendy Blackwell led off with a single, advanced to second on a sacrifice, then third on a passed ball. Janna Venice got her third hit of the day but Blackwell could not advance. With Sharri Blackman at the plate, Holly Aprile's pitch got by catcher Cherrie DellAnno and Blackwell came into score.

In the bottom half of the inning, Aprile got a single, but UConn's Kim Mizesko struckout Sherri Kuchinskas and Peggy Bush to end it.

This game belonged to the pitchers. Both Aprile and Mizesko were absolutely brillant, pitching all 14 innings and coming up with the big pitches when neccesary.

At one point Aprile (12-6) retired 11 Huskies straight. After giving up two runs in the first — only one earned — she did not let another UConn player score until the 14th. She struck out 10 and was helped out by some incredible defense.

In the seventh Kuchinskas picked Venice off first and then threw Blackman out trying to steal second. In the eigth Bush made a remarkable, running-over-the-shoulder catch to deny Chris Woodman extra bases.

Baseball hounds Hartford, 8-5

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

Dave Edwards' three-run home run in the seventh inning proved to be the game-winner yesterday afternoon as the University of Massachusetts baseball team broke the .500 mark with an 8-5 win at Hartford yesterday.

Edwards' homer, his third on the season, was part of a five-run outburst that broke a 3-3 tie and provided the run support that pitchers Daryle Corriveau and Rob Graziano needed. Corriveau improved to 3-3 on the year, while Graziano picked up his first save with 2⅓ innings of one-hit ball.

The win put the Minutemen, now 19-19-1, at the .500 mark for the first time this season going into this weekend's crucial four-game series with Temple.

Mike Tobin led off in the seventh, reaching first base on an error. He moved to second on a Steve Corradi bunt single and reached third on an Ian Torres sacrifice bunt. Tobin scored on Brian Bright's sacrifice fly, Bright's team-high 34th of the year.

Derek Dana and Glen DiSarcina followed with singles and were both driven in by Edwards' home run.

The Hawks responded in kind in their half of the seventh, scoring two runs and prompting UMass coach Mike Stone to bring Graziano in for Corriveau, who tired. Mike Scrapchansky and Mike Desjardins both hit two-out RBI doubles before Graziano entered. Graziano struck out Steve Matthews to end the Hawks' threat, then retired the next six Hartford batters he faced to end the game.

Until the Minutemen went ahead for good in the seventh, the game was a see-saw affair for the first four innings as the lead changed hands. Hartford jumped out to a 2-0 lead right away, as first baseman Bob Nenna smacked a two-run home run in the bottom of the first.

UMass went ahead 3-2 in their half of the fourth inning as Derek Dana knocked in two runs with the first of two doubles for the day. Hartford came right back to deadlock the score at four in their half of the fourth, capitalizing on an uncharacteristic error by Tobin. Scrapchansky followed up on the opportunity with a triple, driving in the tying run.

Corriveau struck out six Hawks in 6⅔ innings of work for the Minutemen, earning his second straight win in as many starts. RJ Zaluki drops to 1-5 for the Hawks, who had defeated UMass three consecutive times dating back to last season.

Dana and Edwards were the leaders for the Minutemen offensively. Dana went 4-for-5 with 2 RBI, while Edwards knocked in four runs in a 2-for-4 performance.

Bright, who had been in a mini-slump as of late, busted out with two doubles and an RBI, returning to form.

Minutemen face Temple in four-game series

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Correspondent

It may be true that every game is an important one, but this weekend's four games against Temple University are the University of Massachusetts baseball team's most important of the year.

The Minutemen can clinch a berth in the Atlantic-10 Conference Tournament with wins in three of the four games. They can win the Conference's East Division title with a sweep of both Saturday and Sunday's doubleheaders. The games start at noon on Lorden Field.

UMass is currently atop the A-10 standings with a 7-3 record. Temple is just percentage points away with an 8-4 record, and Rutgers places third with a 5-5 mark within the Conference.

Last year, UMass went to Boyerstown, Pa., needing to win 3-of-4 games to make the A-10 Tournament and they swept Temple, winning all four games.

UMass is more talented this year, as the young pitchers and hitters have developed during the year. The loss of

Olson sues Pats, Kiam

BOSTON (AP) Sportswriter Lisa Olson filed suit against the New England Patriots yesterday morning, charging sexual harassment and civil rights violations that have led her to leave the Boston Herald and the city.

Olson, 27, who has worked for the Herald for four years, will leave her job, her attorneys said. She is currently covering the Boston Bruins of the National Hockey League for the newspaper.

"She has to leave the state, at least for now," said Norman Zalkind, one of her attorneys. He would not say when she planned to leave the newspaper.

Olson's suit was filed in Suffolk Superior Court against the National Football League team's owner Victor Kiam; former general manager Patrick Sullivan; former media services director James Oldham; and three players, Zeke Mowatt, Michael Timpson and Robert Perryman.

The suit also alleges intentional infliction of emotional distress and intentional damage to her professional reputation. It asks for unspecified monetary damages.

The suit stems from incidents beginning last Sept. 17 when Olson said she was sexually harassed while conducting an interview in the Patriots locker room.

Zalkind said since the incident Olson has endured abuse from some of the fans of sporting events.

"A great number of times she is yelled at, screamed at, sees negative graffiti about her . . . her car was vandalized," Zalkind said. "She's frightened all the time."

He also said Olson has received hate mail and harassing telephone calls.

"Nobody should have to go through this just for trying to do their job," Olson said Wednesday. "If anything this suit will make it easier for others so that something like this won't happen to other female journalists."

Olson said she intended to let the issue drop after the NFL fined the team and the players in November. But she decided to sue after Kiam joked about the incident while speaking at a banquet Feb. 4 and because Mowatt and Perryman did not pay the fines.

"What Kiam did was treat Lisa Olson like the butt of a joke instead of a person," said Michael Avery, another attorney for Olson.

"He [Kiam] apologizes and does it again, which shows he had no sincerity," Zalkind said. "Kiam is older and in a higher position and should have known better than the young players."

Kiam's office at Remington Products Inc. said he would not be available for comment yesterdayy.

The team declined to comment on the suit. "The Patriots organization has no comment. This is a legal matter and it would be inappropriate for us to comment on it at this time," said Mike Hanson, a spokesman for the Patriots.

Mowatt was fined $12,500 and Perryman $5,000 after an independent investigation by the NFL found both participated in the incident. Timpson paid a $5,000 fine last week, but denied he was involved. "The fines were paltry. They were demeaning," Zalkind said. Zalkind said Timpson's payment has not gone unnoticed by the plaintiff.

"There's a lot of defendants and they will not necessarily each have to pay the same amounts of damage," he said.

Timpson's agent, Brett Senior, has said Timpson was aware of the pending suit but had no comment.

According to court documents, Olson was interviewing Maurice Hurst, a Patriots player, in the locker room Sept. 17 when Mowatt, who was naked, displayed his genitals and made sexual remarks while egged on by Timpson and Perryman.

The documents say Olson left but was harrassed again two days later by Mowatt when she returned to interview players.

The suit also said Sullivan called her around Sept. 23 and "threatened her with remarks which included a warning about any skeletons there might be in the closet."

Continued harassment by members of the Patriots organization and the team's fans caused Olson "severe emotional distress" and damage to her reputation as a sports reporter, according to the suit.

"The harassment has continued and she has to get some justice from the courts," said Avery.

The Herald staff member involved in the suit, Robert Sales, executive sports editor of the Herald, said the paper was giving its "full support in her quest for justice in this matter."

A Herald staff member who asked not to be named said Olson probably will take a leave of absence from the paper.

Zalkind declined to say whether Olson planned to join another news agency in the future.

Gorillas host Rutgers

Five could prove to be a very lucky number for the No. 13 ranked University of Massachusetts lacrosse team.

Although the Gorillas (7-2) and Rutgers' Scarlet Knights are even in the series with seven wins apiece, UMass has won the last four games. Could this mean five-peat?

Rutgers' record sits at 6-4. Could tomorrow's game become loss number five?

Tom Hayes and company have lost to the No. 5, 6, 7 and 8 ranked teams. Could this be the fifth Top 20 loss for the Knights?

You'll find out tomorrow when the Iraq, Kuwait little changed by Gulf War, expert says

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

Although the Persian Gulf War is over, the situation in Iraq and Kuwait has changed little, according to an expert on the Middle East.

"You could be forgiven for thinking you really hadn't missed that much," Dr. William Quandt of the Brookings Institute said Saturday at a panel discussion at the University of Massachusetts.

He noted that Saddam Hussein was still in power in Iraq, that Kuwait had been "liberated" from Iraqi occupation, that the proliferation of arms in the Middle East was "still open for business," and that the Israeli-Palestinian conflict held little hope for resolution.

Quandt, while emphasizing that the war has produced deep human, economic and political costs, saw the war as producing opportunities for the United States and the Middle East to achieve the stability and peace which the region has lacked for the past 50 years.

Unfortunately, said Quandt, the United States is unlikely to take advantage of these opportunities.

"The message from this war is that if a very powerful country with military aspirations threatens a country with oil, they better watch out for the United States," Quandt said.

"I'm not sure if we've set a precedent for more likely scenarios," Quandt said. 'It's almost unimaginable that the United States would react in similar ways to other contingencies.

"The plight of the Kurdish refugees demonstrates almost a reluctance to intervene when there are border problems and humanitarian concerns," he said.

Quandt said once the United States' objectives of removing Iraq from Kuwait and weakening Iraq's military standing in the region were achieved, the United States has lost interest in promoting other goals for the Middle East.

"There's a tendency [for United States policy] to go through the motions on Arab-Israeli issues, to lose interest in arms control and to forget issues of economic development," Quandt said. "Instead of exploiting the extra opportunities from the war, we have instantly reverted to business as usual."

Preceding Quandt's talk were three panels, on Iraq and Kuwait, on the regional dimensions of the war and on the economic impact of the war on the world economy.

Mary Ann Tetreault of Old Dominion University gave a talk on the "View from Kuwait," noting that the internal Kuwaiti resistance to Iraq's invasion will leave a lasting political impact on that country.

"The return of the emir has been highly problematic," Tetreault said, referring to the leader of Kuwait. "The emir has been subject to criticism for fleeing the country during the Iraqi invasion, for political repression and for surrounding himself with family members in important political offices.

"The [Iraqi] invasion has left a legacy of armed resistance," Tetreault said. "When the government tries to repress the people, they will run into much more grown-up opposition."

The themes of political repression and the legitimacy of governments in the region was a problem which several of the experts said they saw as a key to ending the legacy of turmoil in the Middle East.

"Most of the Arab governments will not fall, because they are repressive and have strong internal security forces," said Shibley Telhami, a professor of government at Cornell University.

Telhami was referring to regimes such as those of Syria, Saudi Arabia and Kuwait, where popular participation in the political process is very limited.

"To survive, these governments will have to become more repressive," continued Telhami. "This is especially true if they are forced to take on the policy which the United States wants them to, namely to make peace with Israel without resolving the Palestinian question."

Quandt noted the repressive nature of many of the governments in the Middle East, and faulted the United States for failing to use its influence in the region to work toward increased democratization in the Middle East.

"You don't need a Ph.D in political science to wonder

Myths and stereotypes discussed surrounding bisexual issues

By AMY HENRY
Collegian Staff

Some 50 participants attended a three-hour workshop Friday at the University of Massachusetts to increase an awareness of bisexual issues and enable bisexuals to come together and discuss their own issues. The event was held as a part of Lesbian, Bisexual and Gay Awareness Week.

When facilitators of the workshop asked participants why they had come to the workshop, they compiled a varied list of answers.

Some participants said, "curiosity," "to overcome biphobia," "to feel a sense of community," "to combat invisibility," and "kill stereotypes."

Participants were also asked to brainstorm negative and positive aspects of bisexuality.

"There's the stereotype that bisexual women will leave a women their involved with for a man," according to Amy Lesen, a member of the Lesbian, Bisexual and Gay Alliance.

Shawn Cotter, another LBGA member said, "The same stereotype holds true for bisexual men."

"Bisexuals break down socially dichotomized sexuality between heterosexuals and homosexuals," Lesen said.

"That bisexuals are promiscuous and can't stay faithful to either sex," said Student Government Association Commission member Laura Silver. "There's also the myth that they are attracted to everyone."

"There's the myth that bisexuals are fifty-fifty. That we have an attraction to men and women equally," said UMass student Kelley Hayes.

Another activity consisted of participants breaking up into three groups according to their sexual orientation. There was a group for bisexual women, a group for bisexual men and one more for gays, lesbians and heterosexuals. Each group was asked to write down questions they wanted to ask to the other groups.

Gay and lesbian participants were asked if there is room in the gay and lesbian movement for bisexuals.

Sullivan said, "people who are gay and lesbian haven't gotten out of thinking about sexual orientation in black and white thought patterns. I hope a place can be made."

Partipants were also asked why gays and lesbians who are attracted to the opposite sex do not label themselves as bisexual.

One male participant said, "It is something that occurs very rarely and I do not take it seriously enough to change labels."

A female student said, "When I'm attracted to men I

Chicago attack victim seeks justice

By TRYSTAN SKEIGH
Collegian Staff

Editor's note: This is the first of a three-part series examining an attack in Chicago.

Because gays are not a "protected class," the FBI said it cannot investigate the recent harassment of three gay graduate students at the University of Chicago.

The three students, Chris Bauer, Kevin Fuller and Andrew Ross work together in Cummings Science Building and have been targeted by an anonymous group that calls itself "the Brotherhood of the Iron Fist."

All three have received numerous pieces of anti-gay hate mail and phone calls, which began in mid-February after Fuller was quoted in a student newspaper story about UC's Gay and Lesbian Alliance.

The situation escalated on March 17, when Fuller received an anonymous threatening phone call that said "Tonight, one of you dies."

A few hours later, Bauer, who is physically challenged and walks with a cane, was attacked by two masked men as he walked home from his lab in Cummings. One of his attackers said they were going to kill him by injecting air in his veins with a hypodermic needle. Bauer fought them off and they ran away, leaving behind a note that read "This one is now in a box. There's only two more we know of to get."

After the attack, Murphy said the University administration contacted the FBI for help. The Chicago Police were already investigating when the attack occurred.

The FBI refused to begin a separate investigation because, explained Chicago FBI spokesman Bob Long, the harassment is not considered a federal civil rights violation under existing civil rights statutes. He said if the harassment had involved racial or religious minorities, the agency may have entered the investigation.

Kevin Illia, another Chicago FBI spokesman, said "under the Civil Rights Act of 1965, gays and lesbians have not been recognized." Illia said the Act deals mainly with "ethnic groups."

"There is no case law that protects gays and lesbians as a civil rights group at this time," Illia said. "However, I'm sure as this thing evolves this will change. . . ."

Bauer said in regards to the FBI's decision , "We [gays] are persona non grata as of yet."

Because the harassment involves threatening letters sent through the mail, the FBI referred the University of Chicago's request for help to the Postal Inspector's Office, according to Bill Murphy, assistant vice president for the University of Chicago's News and Information Office.

The Postal Inspector's Office has begun to investigate because it is illegal to send threatening letters through the U.S. mail, Murphy said.

Although the FBI is not conducting a separate investigation, it is helping the Chicago police and the Postal Inspector's Office conduct interviews, Illia said.

The last paragraph of Friday's article on the SGA was left out due to an error. The paragraph should have read:

"There is a lot of confusion as to what the role of SAO is," said Irene Carew. "You'd have to ask the vice chancellor [Jo-Anne Vanin] about what the administration's next move will be on this."

Vanin was at a meeting according to her secretary and was not available for comment.

Commuters kick off vote drive for primary

By MARC ELLIOTT
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Commuter Area Government is conducting a massive "get out to vote" drive targeting students who are registered to vote in Amherst for tomorrow's First District Congressional primary.

Volunteers plan to contact registered voters by telephone tonight and from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. tomorrow telling them where and why they should vote. Some will solicit voters in person and escort them to the polls with transportation provided out of Orchard Hill and Southwest.

"We're going to knock on their doors and ask them if they're registered," said volunteer Mathew Pavesi. "If they are [registered], we're going to ask them if they can come with us and vote, there's a car waiting downstairs."

"Voting has never been so easy," said Commuter Area President Susan Church.

Pavesi stressed the impact the student vote could have this closely contested race. UMass can make the difference because the race is going to be close," he said. "It could come down to as close as 100 votes."

Pavesi went on to express the importance the election will have to the University in light of the impending public higher education cuts.

"With the upcoming tuition and fee increases and Gov. Weld's anti-education policy, students have to band together and elect legislators that will fight for our educational right," he said.

The registration deadline for tomorrow's primary has passed, but students can register for the general election until May 15.

Volunteers are needed to work the phone banks in the Student Government Association office, the Off Campus Housing office and the Commuter Area Government office tonight and to solicit voters in the residential halls and provide transportation to the polls tomorrow. Interested persons should call the Commuter Area Government office at 545-2145.

Incest survivor says victims suffer 'betrayal of trust'

By ELIZABETH BUTTS
Collegian Staff

Survivors of incest are often blamed for having been a part of incest, a survivor and activist said Friday night at Smith College.

Gayle Woodsum, a co-founder of "Looking Up," a non-profit organization for the victims and survivors of incest, told the audience of more than 100 that incest and other forms of sexual abuse are widespread throughout the world, adding that 64 million people in the United States have been sexually abused.

"I'm a living, walking testament to the fact that incest is real," said Woodsum.

The victims of incest, said Woodsum, do not fit into any specific category. "They can be a two-month-old child or a 16-year-old man," she said.

"These are trusting, innocent, loving children who are brutally raped by the people who are supposed to keep us safe," said Woodsum. "I don't care what the specific details are... This is a betrayal of trust more hideous than we've ever been able to describe. That is the reality."

Society also looks for characteristics in offenders that separate them from "normal" people, said Woodsum. "It is scary [for people] to think that sex offenders come from the population at large," she said.

People would rather think that offenders commit sex crimes because their parents did it to them, Woodsum said. This information comes from offenders, she said. "They're very smart," she said. "They say to themselves, 'What's the best excuse? Daddy did it to me.'"

"This information is not being used to stop offenders but to oppress victims," Woodsum said. "It makes us think we are evil and awful and we should not have children."

The blame is often placed on the victim, she said.

"They tell us 'You're sick; let me help you...' They label us co-dependent, schizoid, dysfunctional; they tell us we have bad coping mechanisms. We've spent billions of dollars for the privilege of these labels.

"We live in a society that supports, encourages, and protects sex offenders," said Woodsum. "We [the victims] are forced to lie in order to survive. We are expected to go out into the world and say, 'Everything is fine at home.' And then when we go into court they pull out a sheaf of papers and say, 'This is a girl who has a history of lying.'"

Incest is on the rise, she said. "The problem is how to attend to both our own personal pain and this broader social reality.

"We spend one-third of our lives being raped, the second third recovering, and the last third paying off Mastercard for our therapy. There's going to be no time to prevent it. This is the reality... it terrifies me."

The other piece of the reality, however, said Woodsum, is that "victims keep surviving, and survivors keep coming, keep speaking out, keep trying. This is the one thing that keeps me going. The offenders haven't stopped this."

For her work with "Looking Up," Woodsum received the Gloria Steinem Woman of Vision Award and the Noyce Award for Non-Profit Excellence.

Hightower blames parties for S&L crisis

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

Six candidates for the First Congressional District seat shared the stage with former Texas Commissioner of Agriculture Jim Hightower at a forum on "Savings and Loan and Bank Bailouts" last night at Bangs Community Center.

Democrats Chris Hodgkins, John Arden, Sherwood Guernsey, Don Robinson, John Olver and independent Dennis Kelly each spoke for 3-5 minutes regarding the federal savings and loan crisis. The forum represented a late opportunity for candidates to present themselves prior to the democratic primary on Tuesday.

Hightower, spoke on behalf of the Financial Democracy Campaign, a national grass-roots organization fighting to fairly solve the S&L crisis.

"We've got to stop beating around the bush [on the S&L issue] and start beating Bush," Hightower said. "We can go to the people, . . . we want to take this issue out of the business pages and put it into politics where people can get hold of it."

Hightower, a Democrat, said he placed most of the blame for the crisis on the economic policies of Ronald Reagan and George Bush, citing a Stanford University estimate which placed the cost of the crisis at $1.4 trillion dollars.

"Our own government is putting good people out of work," Hightower said. "Bush and Reagan promised to get industry moving again; it moved to Taiwan and Hong Kong, to everywhere except here in this country.

"We went from being the world's largest creditor nation in 1980 to the largest debtor nation today," continued Hightower. "What did the pundits call this period? Prosperity. The question is, if this was a boom, a boom for whom?"

Although Hightower blamed the last three Republican administrations for the nation's economic ills, he also pointed a finger at Democrats in Congress for being too passive.

"I'd like to say it's only George Bush and the Republicans doing this, but too many Democrats are in there too — people like [House Speaker] Tom Foley and [Senate Majority Leader] George Mitchell," Hightower said.

"If the meek will ever inherit the earth, those two will become land barons."

Hightower closed by exorting those present to mobilize politically on a local level to combat what he sees as unrepresentative government on the national level.

"Right now, we have a minority government," he said. "What we need is a politics that talks to these people."

Hightower offered an anecdote about a woman in Kansas in the populist movement of the 1890s who took to the stump to tell farmers "you've got to raise less corn and more hell," as encouragement to the progressive movement of today.

Pro-choice congressional candidates feted

By KATHERINE T. LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

Some 150 students and pro-choice activists gathered yesterday on the Amherst Commons for a rally to support pro-choice candidates for tomorrow's Congressional primary elections.

The field director for the National Abortion Rights Action League, Maren Heslathe, said the rally was used to motivate the audience to participate in a leaflet campaign in neighborhoods in Amherst and Northampton.

The NARAL, sponsor of the event, distributed leaflets with NARAL "report cards" which graded each of the 11 candidates on their stands on abortion rights.

Jill Hanover, another NARAL organizer, said voters in the district, which have been traditionally pro-choice, must be informed as to which candidates favor women's right to choose.

"We have to remember that now more than ever, [the issue of choice] is crucial," she said. "We know we have to tell the voters of this district that (state Sen.) Linda Melconian and (former state Rep.) Steven Pierce can not go to Washington."

Melconian and Pierce, who are widely regarded as the front-runners in the Democratic and Republican primaries, respectively, have both voted against abortion rights in the state legislature. NARAL recently gave them "F" grades on their "report card" based on these votes.

Hanover warned that voters are unaware of Melconian's voting record, assume that she is pro-choice, and this impression could help her win the election.

"Two-thirds of the district's voters think Linda Melconian's pro-choice," she said.

Hanover said this election is important because a new Congressional bill, known as the Freedom of Choice Act, would codify reproductive rights as spelled out in the Supreme Court's 1973 Roe v. Wade decision, and that five more representatives were needed to co-sponsor the bill for it to pass.

Jean Gibbon, a junior at Smith College and a student representative for the Pro-Choice Majority, said the bill is important because state legislatures, such as Utah, are passing strict anti-abortion laws. "Every state legislature is a battlefield," she said.

if there is something wrong in the a region that continually produces these types of regimes," Quandt said.

"Somehow, when we come to the Middle East, this idea [of democratization] is put on hold," he said. "There is something almost racist in thinking that Arabs and Muslims are not up to the game of democracy."

Although most of the costs of the Persian Gulf war appeared in the human and economic destruction in Iraq and Kuwait, the conflict was not without costs for the United States, said to Smith College economist Tom Riddell.

Riddell noted that the present costs of the war ranged between $50 and 75 billion in incremental costs, which he defined as those costs over and above what is budgeted for United States military forces already deployed around the world.

However, Riddell said there may be hidden costs from the war which will appear in the future.

"The use of force to resolve this crisis may lead the U.S. to again resort to force in the near future," Riddell said. "Though there are cuts in the military budget already in place, the effect of the Gulf War is that there will be little tolerance for going beyond this."

Despite the quick success of Operation Desert Storm, the panelists said the problems for the United States in the Middle East are far from over.

"I don't think the war has solved the American problems in the Middle East," said Richard Herrmann of Ohio State University. "I don't know if it hasn't made them much worse."

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

International justice?

For left and right, North and South, rich and poor alike, international law is the great shibboleth, the tin idol before which all rhetorics prostrate themselves. With the possible exception of the fundamentalists, all pay tribute to this greatest of modern political illusions. But enough.

Hussein Ibish

Reliance on the principles of "international law" absent a viable and impartial enforcement mechanism (something inconceivable in current geopolitics) means an unqualified acceptance of the ruling world order. Clearly, international law is applied by the powers that be in a highly selective manner, and in that sense is unjust. Less obviously, international law, in so far as it is a mechanism for maintaining a status quo based on neocolonialism, enforced dependence, and the exploitation of the vulnerable by the ruthless, is a barrier to international justice. Even the equitable enforcement of existing international law (written by and for the imperial powers) would only serve to maintain and rationalize an unacceptable order by codifying the global plantation system.

Some, like Noam Chomsky, argue that without international law, "the guys with the guns will just take what they want." But how, pray tell, would that differ from the current situation? When has international law ever stopped the United States, for example, from taking what it wants, when and how it pleases?

In effect, international law only applies to those outside the Northern security structure, like Iraq; one law for the rich, another for the poor (sound familiar America?). All this Trojan horse really does is provide a cover for the violent suppression of rising alternate centers of power by the omnipotent monopole. Surely it is better to disspell this intellectual fog and mist and shine a spotlight unflinchingly on the muggings and rapes.

Further, as a weapon of defense, international law is a mere dagger of the mind. It will float tantalizingly before the downtrodden peoples of the planet, always out of reach. Only neocolonial ruling elites like the al-Sauds and al-Sabahs will be covered by this protection racket, as long as they serve the interest of their masters.

But no one with the slightest independence can hope for succor. It is all an utter hoax. International law is a trap expertly laid, and baited with dreams of justice and equality.

But surely, critics will say, we need an order of some kind, a system to avoid anarchy? No doubt we do, and it is to be hoped that one day we will get one. This "law," however, is so flawed as to seem irredeemable. Besides, nobody can deny that for the system to change it must be challenged to the point that it can no longer resist. No one is going to give away power such as this, least of all imperialists. Rights are not given, they are taken.

But, they will continue, isn't order most in the interests of all those poor ordinary folk who live in the small nations, so that they can be left in peace? Peace yes, but at what price? The current world order is designed to exploit these very people indefinitely and it is clearly in their long term interest that it be uprooted. Slaves do not depend on slavery to survive.

While it is to be a last resort, force may at times regrettably have to be used to redress the depredations of colonialism and restore national integrity in the South, particularly in the case of an ongoing economic exploitation.

The arguments against "aggression" and "irredentism" inherent in the current international law provide a ready made moral/legal rational for the enforcement of the status quo by the great power , which refuses to subject itself to the same standards. Of course all peaceful means should be used to achieve justice, and genuine reform is best, but it isn't going to happen.

The national rights of Third World peoples are not within the gift of the United Nations, and are not subject to the constraints of international "law." Governments are subjected to all sorts of blackmail involving aid and loans, and often do not feel free to make their real views public. But individuals who are free to speak openly must not be complicit in this shabby deception.

And so we say: Long live international justice!

Death to "international law"!

Respect for immigrants

Recent events move me to express the views of those hard working Puerto Rican immigrants who struggle to establish a place in this diverse, multicultural society. This is not to say we have turned our backs on our island homeland or its national interest, but in truth we are immigrants.

Nancy Miranda

Those who have not experienced the pain and suffering of the working class of incoming Puerto Ricans and only know the comfortable transit of the luxury liner and the first-class cabin, cannot comprehend the difficult choices we have faced.

Of late, several organizations that exist to facilitate the migration of those who come from one culture to another without benefit of wealth or status, have come under scurrilous and unfair attack. To be frank, entities like the Biligual Collegiate Program and other fine Puerto Rican dominated institutions serve the interests of a class of people with whom these critics are unfamiliar. How can Puerto Rican students who have not had the privilege of private education, Anglicized parents, and frequent travel to and from the island, possibly just slip into the academic and social life of UMass like an Anglo from Concord? We obviously need these organizations and are proud and grateful to them. The tutoring service that BCP provides, for example, has meant the difference between success and failure for many Puerto Rican students.

The idea that the BCP functions as a trap or academic straight jacket from which "dependent" students are unable to free themselves is untrue, and belied my own experience and that of countless others. The BCP tutors, when they are performing in the usual and expected way, show students who either have language problems or simply come from a different academic tradition, howthings are done in Amherst, Massachusettes.

The suggestion has also been made that all Puerto Ricans want to do is party. This sort of gross generalization is little more than slander and if it is meant to be an attempt at a "calling out" of the community, it has failed miserably. Obviously, some people are not familiar with the mass of Puerto Rican students who work hard and do well, and then party when the time is right. They are the majority and deserve better than this.

The critics, many of whom certainly represent the attitude and views of the privileged elite, have spoken with a breathtaking arrogance. Who are they to find fault with people who generally are trying to do their best under difficult circumstances? To be fair, the critics may mean well, but it is very clear that these are people of little understanding, who judge others without due consideration of living realities. Often they only succeed in reinforcing damaging stereotypes and thus harm the interests of their own Puerto Rican community. What we need is unity, understanding and cooperation, not foolish and counterproductive carping.

Pike frat boys ought to be held responsible

An open letter to the boys of Pike:

The reason I am referring to you as boys has nothing to do with age. It has to do with an incident that occurred the evening of Thursday, April 25.

After an evening of studying at the Newman Center, I left for home at approximately 9 a.m. As I was walking by the Pike house, in addition to howling and barking, a few people started calling out derogatory names and obscenities such as "pussy." This unsolicited behavior was childish, offensive, and also completely demoralizing.

I do not know why the brothers of Pike find it acceptable to scream "I see a pussy," as a woman walks by. If the temptation to harass a woman is too great for Pike, maybe the University should consider moving this fraternity out of such a high visibility area before they embarrass themselves, and disgust others, any further.

Writer belittles AASA agenda

This is a letter in response to the article "Where will all the 'fun' and 'anger' lead our communities?" by Alexander Nguyen, printed Tuesday, April 23, on the Multicultural Affairs page.

My name is Amy Chee and I would like to make it clear foremost that I cannot write on behalf of the Asian American Students Association, but am writing this with thoughts similar to others who participated in Asian Night, which was presented on Friday, April 19, by AASA. The article described Asian Night as "lacking in vision and definition." I would like to note that the first page of the Asian Night program defines the purpose of the night's events as "...to promote cultural diversity in this community and create unity among different ethnic groups." Asian Night achieved this goal, as is noted later in the article when it states that Asian Night "effectively mobilized a mass of people and harnessed a vast amount of positive energy." This was the goal of Asian Night as defined by the program coordinators.

The tone of the article when it referred to Asian Night, and the International Student's Association's International Fair, was belittling and seemed to overlook the months of work, the numerous people involved, and the positive results. I'd like to see positive reinforcement of events that work toward uniting the community and supporting diversity, and possibly a pat on the back for a job well done. Instead, the article reflects the writer's preconceived notion that Asian Night represents the AASA as "song and dance" only. AASA is more than that, and I would hope that the writer of the article, incidentally the multicultural chairperson of AASA, would know this.

Amy B. Chee
Vice-President of AASA

Greetings UMass! I have just been elevated to the honorable position of editorial editor. I am ready and willing to read your opinions, so please send lots of letters and columns. Submissions must bear your name, local address and phone number. This information is subject to verification. Letters should be no longer than 50 double-spaced, typed lines. Columns must not exceed 70 double-spaced, typed lines. Untyped submissions or submissions of unreasonable length will not be considered for publication. Letters and columns written in response to a previously published letter will not be printed. Responses or criticisms of columns or articles must be restricted to letter form. don't take it as seriously because I usually get bored and the feelings go away quickly."

The group of bisexual men were asked what influence the gay male community has on them.

Steven Lambert a UMass student, said, "A lot of men who label as gay still uphold patriarchial concepts. Their is a lot misogyny in gay culture. Their rejection of bisexual men because they go out with women is a form of it."

The bisexual women were asked if they could be in a monogamous relationship.

Silver said because bisexuals have the potential to love men and women does not mean they cannot be monogamous.

Living Colour defines "high energy" at LeFrak

By DAN LEARY
Collegian Correspondent

Living Colour
LeFrak Gymnasium
Saturday, April 27

Living Colour? In the fall of '88 a band called Living Colour played in UMass's Student Union Ballroom opening up for the Godfathers. For the most part, nobody knew who they were, it was a month and a half before their single "Cult of Personality" would start getting airplay or MTV rotation — in a sense they were nobody. But for the people who wandered into SUB that night the band took a very vivid identity as a quartet of unrivaled energy combining hard rock and funk into adrenaline-soaked virtuosity.

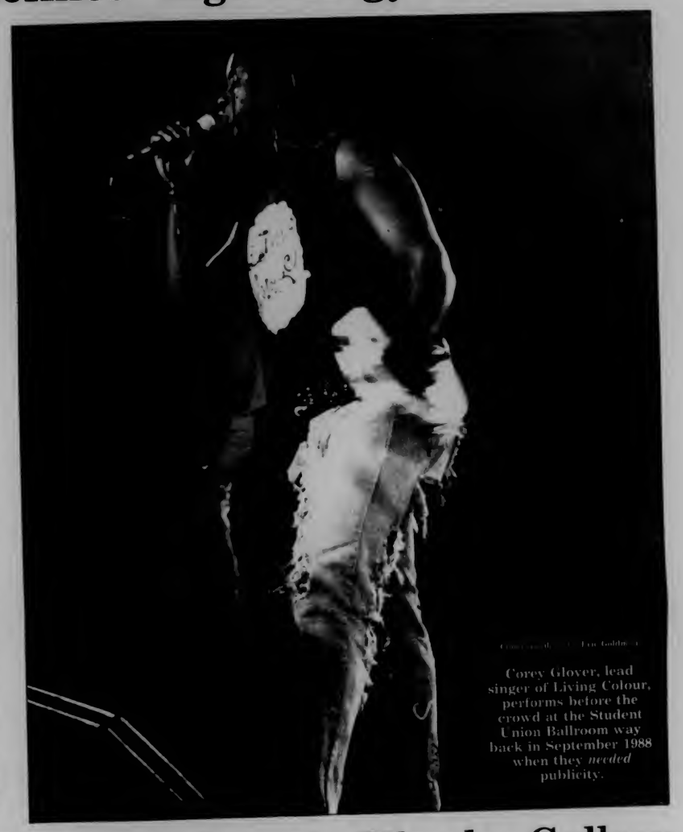
Now, thanks to the Rolling Stones and MTV, everybody knows this foursome; and, Saturday night at Amherst College's Lefrak Gymnasium, residents of the Pioneer Valley had their second chance to see the high energy antics of the band that defines high energy (and I'm not kidding).

After 45 minutes of the Living Colour-esque opening group Sinister Dane and twenty-five to thirty minutes of policemen trying to shut off gymnasium fire alarms triggered by stage fog machines, Living Colour took the stage. They opened their hour-and-half set with "Elvis is Dead" followed by "New Jack Theme" from their recent album Times Up. In addition to the numerous selections from Times Up, the band performed a handful of songs from their first album Vivid, including "Middle Man," "Desperate People," and the surprise of the night, the caustic, "Which Way to America."

Unlike many bands that try to replicate studio performances on stage, Living Colour explore their songs to their musical boundaries with their remarkable improvisational talents. Drummer Will Calhoun's ridiculously complex drum fills and ability to effortlessly weave in and out of time left no question as to why, as a Berklee student, he was voted the school's best drummer. Front stage, singer Corey Glover, guitarist Vernon Reid and bassist Muzz Skillings, were just as busy as Calhoun sprinting and dancing from one side of the stage to the other. Skillings showcased a number of playing styles, most formidable of which was his jackhammer-like thumb slapping employed for the new album's title track. No less formidable was the fret work of Reid; Vernon, the band's primary songwriter and spokesperson, took a time-out from his fiery soloing to perform an excerpt from "History Lesson" announcing that, "In Africa, music is not so much an art form as a means of communication," before leading the band into "Pride"(both songs from Times Up).

Kudos go to the light crew whose spectacular work enhanced an already spectacular show. For the intro to "Desparate People" red lights chased each other frantically across the gymnasium walls suggesting police cars.

The band appropriately closed their set with the mellow Latin flavored, "Solace of You," giving both the crowd and Living Colour a chance to catch a breath before the seething encore of "Cult of Personality."



Corey Glover, lead singer of Living Colour, performs before the crowd at the Student Union Ballroom way back in September 1988 when they needed publicity.

Abandoned Soviet artists hang in Wheeler Gallery

By LISA CURTIS
Collegian Staff

It all began one day when a Soviet real estate agent in America convinced his boss that there was money in Soviet art. The entrepeneurs traveled to Kiev and came upon four very modern artists: Alexander Kuznetsov, Konstantine Samoylenko, Natalya Borisova and Alexander Petropaviovsky.

The artists were then flown to Cape Cod. They had come with great expectations, explained Petroporovsky. "America! Millionaires!" said my friends in Kiev. Unfortunately their art work was shipped separately and it did not arrive until four months later. By that time it was August and all the tourists had left the Cape to go home. The four Kiev artists were abandoned with a gallery, art work and no opening, no publicity, and very little English. They soon discovered the fault in their friends' predictions. Two of the artists have since gone home, but Petropaviosky and Kuznetsov are still in America. Where? Art from Kiev is located in Wheeler Gallery at UMass for what will be the only are exhibit of their work. April 18 was the date of their opening.

Standing at well over six feet tall, wearing a black sweatshirt inside out, a fluorescent ink baseball cap that read "Jack's Outback, Yarmouth Port," a large silver cross on a large chain, and sandals, Petropaviosky makes a lasting impression. His paintings are similarly bold and colorful.

A cluster of Russian speaking artists and students formed to help translate this interview. Michael Coffey, an Easthampton sculptor who has studied Russian and traveled in the Soviet Union, and Gregory Kostin, an exchange student for one semester from the Technical University in Leningrad, were my lingual saviors.

Petropaviosky, originally from Leningrad but who now calls Kiev home, was flown into New York City from Moskow by his sponsor.

"New York is interesting," said Petropaviosky, "But the 55 m.p.h. speed limit is very bad. Sixty miles and the police stop you. Ticket. Bad." He shakes his head and smiles. Soviet drivers are not limited to driving at such snail paces.

The art classes that Petropaviosky took at the Technical University were very classical. "One of his professors at the Institute taught classes 'underground' to help them develop modern, abstract approaches to art which had been frowned upon in the Soviet Union," explained/translated Coffey. These new approaches had not yet developed in the curriculum.

With the other Soviet reforms, the perception of art is changing too. "Today [modern art] is OK." says Petropaviosky. "but in the time of Krushchev and Brezhnev, it was a problem."

Petropaviosky, 40 years old, has a 15 year old son. "TV, TV TV, sports! Stupid!" is how he described his son's interests which do not include art.

"It's the same for the whole world," chuckled Coffey.

Petropaviosky who constantly slipping into teasing sarcasm, described his three step process which leads him to create a work of art. He twists his index finger against his forehead while making a whistling sound. This, the first step of his three-step-process, explains Kostin, was to "get an idea."

"I then buy the painting supplies and the third stage is to paint," chuckled Petropaviosky. A little more serious, he says that his inspirations come, "from life."

"A blind, deaf man cannot be an artist," he said.

He narrated the story behind his painting, "The Party," an oil on canvas which is priced at $3,500. The canvas is covered with Russian words and shows a man running across a table surrounded by straight-lipped on-lookers.

"These are my friends. It is a holiday. Good. We all drink a big bottle (of alcohol). This man runs back and forth, back and forth on the table. I bought the meat, the drink." Alexander makes stomping motions with his feet to show the fate of his purchases. "(The painting) is a joke, about students and for students. Russian party and American party the same."

Petropaviosky creates small sculptures which are also on display at the gallery. "Unfortunate Tour to Everest" is an oil on wood with cut outs from beer cans nailed around the painted portion.

The three other artists whose work is featured were unavailable for comment.

Alexander Kuznetsov's eclectic sense of sensuality and religion is reflected in his paintings. In "One More Time About Something," a woman's nude body shown from the neck down holds Kuznetsov's head on a plate. Another plate holds a hand, and in the distance a red figure sits on the ground.

Natalya Yurchenko Borisova, who takes symbolism from the world's greatest cultures and recombines them in intriguing ways in her paintings, describes her themes as evocative and mysterious, according to the press release.

Natalya had to return to the USSR early to take care of her two small boys, ages five and seven. The boys are featured in her painting "My Family," a pastel on board that makes use of soft earth tones to evoke a comforting, loving piece. It differs markedly from her other paintings like "The Woman with Flowers" which is an oil painting on masonite in which a black woman in a blue cape cradles gaudy pink flowers in her arms.

Konstantine Samoylenko is the most obviously political artist. His powerful social commentary is expressed by slashing through the canvas.

In the oil painting, "Help Me" a man's face is twisted out towards the viewer, his mouth dropped in a silent moan. His "wound" is a foot long slash through the canvas approximately an inch wide. It is "stitched up" with wire that is crusted over with red paint. There is an intense look of concentration on the medic's face who holds a needle in his hand. The brush strokes are linear, confusing and emotional. It makes a nice contrast with Petropaviosky's light hearted works. This piece is priced at $4,500.

These pieces of Soviet thought, life and love will be on display at Wheeler Gallery until May 5.

Guy deals with roommates from hell

By AHVA DAVIS
Collegian Staff

Nothing to do tomorrow night? Why not go see Bill and Karen in the Hampden Theater? It's free!

Tomorrow night will be the opening night for Bill and Karen, a comedy about stereotyping, and how the main character,"Guy," deals with his unbearable roommates.

The play relates to "certain eccentric personalities," said Zach Slovinsky, who wrote the play.

According to Slovinsky this play is sitcomish. "It is a play, but it is more like a sitcom."

Bill and Karen takes place in a collegiate setting with the problems of "Guy," and how he deals with his "nightmare roommates" said Slovinsky.

Along the way, the cast has run into a few problems, and has had some setbacks. "People got nervous and started dropping out, but [the cast] have been able to overcome the obstacles," Slovinsky said.

The play is being funded in part by the UMass Arts Council, and the Cultural Enrichment Fund. It is also being sponsored by Student Valley Productions, and the Union Video Center.

The money they received is from the student activity funds, so get your money's worth! "It is the students that are paying," said Slovinsky.

The play will be videotaped by the Union Video club, so "it is not going to be like someone's dad videotaping it," said Slovinsky.

Bill and Karen will then run over the campus cable system, and will be shown on the televisions in the Student Union.

Slovinsky, who is a senior communications major said that he "wanted to do more writing as opposed to visual things."

Bill and Karen will run tomorrow, and Wednesday at 8 p.m. in the Hampden theater. Remember that ADMISSION IS FREE!

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Give new ideas time to develop. Jealousy may crop up at an unexpected moment. Your fears are groundless! Relieve tension by working on a favorite hobby or artistic project.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) You cannot afford to invest in unexplored projects proposed by your associates. Stop daydreaming but stay upbeat. Make a greater effort to live within your means. Buy fewer items on credit.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Romance could take on greater significance now. Follow your intuition where financial offer is concerned. Someone may be trying to test your loyalty. Immerse yourself in creative endeavors.
CANCER (June 21-July 22) An element of luck works in your favor. You handle a tricky situation with dispatch. Someone influential is impressed by your performance. Unexpected expenses could make a dent in your savings.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Be fair but firm when mediating a dispute involving your associates. Invest extra cash wisely. Seek a professional opinion regarding a personal matter. Take no chances where your health is concerned.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Plan more and talk less. A change in appearance or employment may be your best option now. A hobby could become a source of extra income if you decide to advertise your talents.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Your tenacity will be rewarded where your career is concerned. Profits rise — and so does your self-esteem. Take more interest in the ambitions of your offspring. Avoid sounding critical.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) Keep your feet firmly planted on the ground when it comes to financial issues. Do not allow partnership difficulties to upset you. Gather up those unwanted household items and donate them to charity.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) Expect the unexpected! Someone's behavior may upset your schedule. Concentrate on projects you can handle on your own. Home life is more appealing than in the recent past.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Personal relationships are full of peaks and valleys. If your energy is low, curtail your schedule. Be more patient with an older relative. A forgiving attitude can work miracles.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) A careless comment or act could incite a loved one. Try to be more considerate of those who love you. A promotion is in the works. Resist the temptation to scatter your energies.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) Romantic relationships enjoy highly favorable influences today. A change of residence or employment is a distinct possibility. Now is an excellent time to sell property and extra possessions.

ace Majeski, and won the game in the sixth on a very controversial call.

The inning started as DiSarcina doubled and Dave Edwards was intentionally walked. Majeski wanted to pitch to Jay Dodig, who he struck out twice earlier in the day.

Dodig dug a hole, getting two strikes, and apparently struck out on a foul tip that was caught by catcher Scott Haws. However, both umpires ruled that the foul hit the dirt first, a call that suprised almost everyone – especially Temple. Temple argued vehemently, but to no avail.

Majeski served up the next pitch and Dodig tatooed it over the left field fence for a three-run homer, one that gave UMass their first lead of the game and their first win of the series.

"I wanted it," Dodig said of the home run. "I knew they showed no respect towards me when they walked the guy in front of me."

Pandemonium followed, as two Temple players and coach Rich Danson were ejected in the argument that followed. Temple was deflated after the clutch homer. Graham picked up the win and Villone got the save in finishing the game.

UMass kept the momentum going and scored early and often in Saturday's second game, building a 4-0 lead after two innings. Temple closed the gap to 4-2 and knocked starting pitcher Scott Meaney out of the game, but UMass added two insurance runs in the sixth, ending the scoring 6-2 in their favor. Rob Graziano relieved Meaney and picked up the win, and Villone closed the game out.

On Sunday, UMass looked unenthused in the first game and lost, 13-6. Temple, on the other hand, came out like gangbusters in spirit, and runs soon followed.

Starter Jim Telgheder gave up a two-run homer to Bill Schellhorn in the fourth and Temple led 3-0. UMass cut the lead to 3-2 in the bottom of the fourth, but that is as close as they ever got.

Temple scored two runs in the fifth off of Telgheder to make it 5-2. He was hooked, being the first of six pitchers for the game. Greg Dowd, Graziano, Peter Ferrari, John Sammarco and Chris Robidoux all saw action in the blowout.

Graziano gave up the big hit, a sixth inning-grand slam to Mike Rubin that upped the lead to 9-2. An error by Ian Torres and a Kollinsky single brought in two more runs in the inning. Brian Bright walked in the bottom of the sixth, advanced to third on a DiSarcina single, and scored on a Carelli sacrifice fly, making it 11-3.

Temple kept hitting in the top of the seventh and used a Higginson double play and a Robidoux balk to score two more runs.

In the last of the seventh, pinch hitter Andy Pelis led off with a walk and eventually scored on Coraddi's sacrifice fly, cutting the score to 13-4. Bright then hit a two-run homer that eased the pain at 13-6.

Six innings of work yielded the win for Aprile, which was saved by Claffey. Claffey faced three batters in her first save of the season.

Aprile walked two batters and struck out none. Claffey walked one.

A pair of singles and a double from Marean in four appearances at the plate turned into 1 RBI.

In both the fifth and sixth innings, Marean committed two errors.

The UMass bats were lively in the game, ringing out nine hits altogether. Heather Dorsey, Marean and Racheal Lawson split the 3 RBI.

Aprile picked up the pace at the plate, going 2-for-4 behind a pair of singles.

Both Kuchinskas and Lawson were 1-for-1 with singles. Dorsey tapped a single as well in a 1-for-3 showing.

Claffey had one hit in the seventh inning.

Pather batting produced six hits, all singles. Three Adelphi players knocked the ball around for those hits.

Romi Sugiyama, Val Muller and Marco each went 2-for-3. Marco was the RBI getter.

The Minutewomen face up against the Providence College Friars on Wednesday.

"They knew what was on the line," said UMass coach Ted Garber. "We played pretty well up and down the field . . . cleared the ball well . . . rode just like we wanted to . . .

"The assistant coaches deserve all the credit for today's win," he added. He said Tom Carmean Tim Soudan Aaron Jones and Glenn Maller all contributed greatly.

And once again attackman Mark Millon set the pace for the UMass offense netting his first of five goals for the day six minutes into the first quarter on a behind the head shot in front of the cage.

Midi John Schlipf scored on a bounce shot unassisted two minutes later followed by attack Mario Guaglianone's assist to defenseman Hugh O'Callaghan.

A Locker-Mone combination was the only Rutgers goal netted in the first quarter, soon answered by an unassisted Rick Senatore goal to end the scoring at 4-1.

The Knights, although encouraged by small rallies, were never able to completely recover from UMass' dominant play.

"We held the tempo of the game," said midfielder Kevin O'Connor. "We had the depth they needed and on a hot day like today, you've either got to have heart or depth."

Nick Delapi assisted Mone who scored on a bounce shot as a result of a successful pick near the crease. Mone then assisted Prat for a 4-3 scored which was the closest Rutgers would come to evening out the score.

Within the next 18 minutes the Gorilla defense of Gary Wood, Mullins, Cronin, Panetta, Fitts, Matt Garber and Ed O'Callaghan held Rutgers scoreless for the second and third quarters. In those 18 minutes, UMass put away six unanswered goals.

Jim Kushner initated the barrage netting a goal after some hesitation at the cage. It was soon followed by a Wes Depp-Jim McALeavey combo. Frank Pepe scored unassisted and McAleavey assisted Millon who was decked infront of the crease, to finished the half at 8-3.

Guaglianone was fed by Kushner then again by Millon.

Rutgers woke up when the score sat at 10-4 and their response was a 6-1 run, evenning the third quarter at 11-9, their final significant threat.

Locker scored unassisted and a Mone-Pratt combination was the result of a fastbreak from an unconverted UMass clear.

Kushner went straight to the cage on a fast break and scored.

Luciano fed Mone, and Pratt and Jamie Watson netted one and two unassisted goals.

In the fourth, Chris Nentwich took a feed from Millon to score followed by McAleavey's behind the back pass to Millon who was right in front of the cage.

Locker responded unassisted to make it 13-10, but Rutgers was not heard from again until seven minutes later, much too late to recover from three quick UMass goals.

During man-up Millon and McAleavey combined again to score, the only man-up opportunity for the Gorillas.

Midfielder Mike Caine beat two Rutgers defensemen around the cage to net the 15th goal of the game.

After winning the faceoff, Kevin O'Connor went straight to the net and scored unassisted.

A Prat-Cunningham combo with 3:04 to play was the final goal for Rutgers as the fourth Millon-McAleavey combination put the icing on the cake for a 17-11 game.

Gorillas rip Rutgers 17-11

By ADRIEN MATT
Collegian Staff

Whew.

Once again the University of Massachusetts lacrosse team's defense and Ted Kellerman stepped up to the challenge of shutting down Rutgers' attack, defeating the Scarlet Knights 17-11 Saturday on The Hill.

Kellerman had a career-high 27 saves for the day, outdistancing John Schmunk who finished with 18. In the last four games, Kellerman has made 66 saves for a total saves average of 62 percent.

"Teddy's playing great and that does so much for the defense," said defenseman Rick Mullins. "I have no worries about getting hurt or tired out there. . . we have so much more depth."

Depth may prove to be the Gorillas' saving grace. Injured starters have not fazed the defense's impact on impressive attacks, as proven by Saturday's play. Defensive-midfielder Mario Lopez is out indefinately with a hyper-extended left knee and defenseman Corey Cronin is nursing a bruised left shoulder.

Defensemen Jim Panetta and Brad Fitts stepped in and hussled to groundballs, checked hard and played strong defense.

"The team has all the confidence in the world in them," Kellerman said of Panetta and Fitts.

"Panetta did an excellent job," Mullins echoed.

Rutgers' attackman Steve Luciano, the team's leading scorer, was held to a mere assist. Midfielder Dave Cunningham, the team's leading feeder, was also held to one assist. Attackman John Mone, midi Steve Locker and attackman Chris Pratt each had three goals, the team-high.

UMass' Jim Panetta (24) and Ed O'Callaghan performed well against the likes of Rutgers' David Cunningham (23) and Steve Locker (24) on Saturday, holding them scoreless for an 18 minute stretch.

Softball sweeps Adelphi 5-3, 3-1, continues winning streak

By THOMAS A. GEORGE
Collegian Staff

With seven games left in the regular season, two decisive victories over the Adelphi Panthers move the University of Massachusetts softball team onward and upward toward the Atlantic-10 Tournament.

The Minutewomen extend their season record to 29-10, and hold the A-10 mark at 12-0.

The doubleheader played in Garden City, N.Y., Sunday yielded wins for starters Darlene Claffey and Holly Aprile. Claffey also netted a save in the second game.

In the first game, the game winner did not uncover itself until the fifth inning where the game was tied at 3-all. Coming off the bat of Aprile, a solo homer put the team ahead. This go-ahead run was added to in the sixth by Jen Miller's triple to leave the score at 5-3.

In the third inning, third baseman Barbara Marean would unload a three-run homer. Marean leads the team with five home runs, followed by Aprile at two.

Miller had two of the seven UMass hits, the other being a single. Marean, Aprile, Sherri Kuchinskas, Peggy Bush and Cherie DellAnno each had a hit.

Miller committed the one UMass error that put Adelphi's Leslee Perkins on base.

Catcher Kuchinskas and outfielder Peggy Bush both singled in 1-for-3 performances.

Plagued by back spasms, Cherie DellAnno was relieved in the third inning by Heather Dorsey. In DellAnno's two at bats, she had a single.

Claffey posts a record of 16-4-1. She had three strike outs and three walks in the outing. The hurler was not as stellar at bat in this showing, with no hits in two at bats.

Losing Panther pitcher was Karen McGarry. The Adelphi record now stands at 14-15.

Panther hitting was rather tame in the first game, three hits spread between as many players.

Second baseman Maureen Marco had a single and tallied 2 RBI. Centerfielder Chris Kelliher also had a single.

Perkins, who would again reach base, doubled in the sixth representing the third and last hit for the Adelphi squad. Perkins also notched a lone RBI in that game, as well as the Panther's single error.

The second game was marked by closer competition, yet sloppier play. Both teams committed a pair of errors in the 3-1 UMass victory.

Minuteman Brian Bright, although tagged out here during the first game against Temple on Sunday, walked in the bottom of the sixth, advanced to third on a single and scored the team's third RBI on a sacrifice fly.

Carelli's squeeze play propels UMass to Atlantic 10 playoffs

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts baseball team proved to themselves, their coach and, more importantly, their competition they are the team to beat in the Atlantic-10 this year. UMass stood up to trash-talking Temple, taking 3-of-4 games this weekend against them at Lorden Field and clinching a berth in the A-10 tournament.

In basketball terms, UMass rejected Temple's best shot in their faces and stuffed the ball at the other end to win the game. The exclamation point was John Carelli's suicide squeeze in the sixth inning of Sunday's finale that won the game for UMass.

After a luckluster 13-6 loss in Sunday's first game, UMass stormed out to a 3-0 lead in the second game but lost it in the top of the sixth.

The Minutemen played their gutsiest ball of the year in the bottom of the sixth. Catcher Derek Dana led off with a long double to the right field fence. Glenn DiSarcina laid down a sacrifice bunt that moved Dana to third, and set the stage for the climactic finish.

Karl Majeski pitched out to Carelli on the first pitch, protecting against the squeeze play.

"They thought we were going to squeeze a little earlier, so that's why I was waiting until the end of the count," coach Mike Stone said.

Carelli waited for the 2-1 pitch from Majeski as Dana stormed down the third base line. They executed the squeeze play perfectly as the whole Temple team watched, collectively staining their drawers. By the time third baseman Marc Buffone threw Carelli out at first, UMass had the 4-3 lead.

"I felt good. I felt pretty comfortable up at the plate," Carelli said. "Coach Stone told me to be prepared for the squeeze."

"Yes, he's done it before," Stone said in reference to confidence in Carelli. "I was just waiting for a good count, and I figured he might throw a slider on 2-1, which is a good ball to bunt."

Graham pitched the seventh and got out of a minor jam, picking up his second win of the weekend. He may have been tired, but he was mentally tough.

"I wasn't as strong [as on Saturday], but mentally, I wanted to be in there so bad it wasn't funny," he said.

UMass scored in each of the first three innings on RBI singles by Steve Corradi, Justin Howard and DiSarcina, respectively.

However, starter Jeff Toothaker and Ron Villone failed to hold the lead as they got into trouble with walks.

Temple came back with a John Bujnowski 2 RBI double in the fourth inning that ousted Toothaker from the game. Villone stopped that rally and another in the fifth, but he looked shaky as he fell behind hitters all day.

Temple's Frank Rubin blooped a single into right field that scored Jason Kollinsky in the sixth inning and tied the score at three. Villone and Rich Graham, who finished the sixth after pitching nearly seven innings of superb ball on Saturday, escaped by retiring the number three and four hitters for Temple, Bob Higginson and Buffone.

In the opening game of the series, UMass rallied from a 1-0 deficit against Temple

'Censored' war footage to be shown

Film contains Gulf war information not released to major networks

By AMY HENRY
Collegian Staff

Footage not shown on NBC, CBS and CNN of the damage done to the Iraqi people by the U.S.-led intervention during the Gulf war will be shown this week, said a spokesperson for the National Coalition to Stop United States Intervention in the Middle East.

Nick Camerota, a Western Massachusetts organizer for the National Coalition said, "This is footage the U.S. electronic media has not allowed the American people to see. This video puts a human face on the Iraqi people and might cause some Americans to question what sort of victory we're supposed to have won.

"This information was not released to the mainstream because the majority of major networks and newspapers are controlled by corporations and their corporate interests would be hurt by the airing of this information," he said.

The advisory board on the Western Massachusetts branch of the Coalition has announced two area showings of Nowhere to Hide, a videotaped documentary produced by the National Coalition and narrated by the organization's founder, former U.S. Attorney General Ramsey Clark.

"A good deal has been written and shown about the plight of the Kurdish people and inside Kuwait but the American media has not shown the horrific effect of massive U.S. air strikes on Iraq. This bombing campaign is unprecedented and 75 percent missed their targets," Camerota said.

The videotape is a filmed record of Ramsey Clark's fact-finding tour of Iraq when he visited the country from Feb. 2 to Feb. 8. The footage shows results of some of the massive U.S. air strikes.

Clark's documentary includes scenes of bombed out civilian housing and tours of overburdened Iraqi medical facilities, Camerota said.

The Coalition was founded in August 1990 after Saddam Hussein's invasion of Kuwait. The Coalition is made up of anti-war, religious, labor unions and minority rights organizations.

According to Camerota, 75 percent of the National Advisory Board of the Coalition are people of color from countries such as the Caribbean and Latin America.

"They are people who are or have been affected by U.S. military intervention in other parts of the world," he said.

Camerota said there are some principles that are important to have in order to join the group.

"The belief that the immediate withdrawal of all U.S. ships and military should take place. Be against sanctions, for the solution of the problems of the Middle East by people of region. We really insist that money should be spent on human needs," he said.

Camerota said the upcoming screenings of the documentary will provide the National Coalition with an opportunity to unveil the organization's next major educational effort: the creation of an International Commission of Inquiry regarding the United States' conduct in the war.

Clark and the Coalition contend the United States violated provisions of the Hague Convention, the Geneva Accord and the Nuremburg Charter and the organization plants to offer evidence of these offenses against international law, Camerota said.

According to Camerota, the National Coalition's Commission of Inquiry is being set up not only in the United States but in 10 other countries such as Algeria, Australia, Belgium, Canada, England, France, Japan, Jordan, Malaysia and Tunisia.

The Clark documentary will be shown Wednesday, May 1 at 7:30 p.m. in the lower level of Northampton's Unitarian Society. It is being sponsored by the Middle East Peace Coalition and the Amherst Friends Service Committee. The second showing will be at Amherst College in lecture hall three of the Merrill Science Building. It is being sponsored by the Amherst College Just Peace organization. The video is 28 minutes and discussion will be facilitated by a member of the Coalition.

For further information regarding the showings of the video or information on the International Commission of Inquiry call 538-8537. Or write Box 2733, Springfield, MA. 01101

Victim of gay bashing makes his story public

By TRYSTAN SKEIGH
Collegian Staff

Editor's note: This is the second of a three part series on the student assault in Chicago.

Chris Bauer is a very articulate and soft-spoken 25-year-old graduate student studying Molecular Genetics at the University of Chicago. He considers himself a "fairly normal" student, who believes his work is "more important than his personal life."

He is also "physically challenged" and walks with a cane to and from his lab in Cummings Science Building to his apartment.

And he is gay, a fact only a few people knew until recently, when he was attacked by two masked men who tried to kill him because of his sexual orientation. After the attack, Bauer decided to make his story public. Bauer is not sure how his attackers learned he is gay.

His assailants, who have not been apprehended, are believed to belong to an anonymous student group called "The Great Brotherhood of the Iron Fist." This name was attached to several anti-gay hate letters received by Bauer and two of his friends, who are also gay graduate students who work in Cummings. The three have been receiving homophobic letters and phone calls since mid-February.

In a Sunday evening telephone interview, Bauer said he "was very closeted before all of this."

Bauer said coming out in order to tell people about the attack was a decision he made with reluctance.

"I hate to have it happen this way, but the story has to come out. I probably would never have come out like this if [the attack] hadn't happened."

"If this can help bring about change for the gay community. . .then it's important that I give a face to this story, because without a face this attack means nothing. If people can see me as a fairly normal young graduate student, maybe they'll think about what happened more."

Bauer says he sometimes feels uneasy around his coworkers and he is worried about his future career now that his sexual identity has become common knowledge.

"I have a much higher level of fear now that everyone knows I'm gay. . .it's been hard trying to figure out what people are really thinking about me. I try to block it out — it's too late to go back and tell all my co-workers, and I shouldn't have to feel like I have to — my work is much more important — this was more of a private, personal issue.

"Of course I'm concerned now that the faculty know. . .I wonder if this will change what they write in my letters of recommendation, or how they evaluate my work."

Yet, on a more positive note, as a result of the attack and the surrounding publicity, Bauer says more gay students have decided to openly acknowledge their sex-

Beautiful weather, music highlight Haigis Hoopla

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

People from all over Massachusetts flocked to Haigis Mall this past weekend to catch Haigis Hoopla, the 3-on-3 basketball festival, sponsored by the Sport Management department and WHMP 99.3 FM.

Spectators were treated to two days of exciting basketball, plenty of food, music courtesy WHMP and some beautiful weather.

"I was very happy with the way things went," said Peter Thomsen, professor of the Event Management class that put the whole festival together.

Once the phone bills are paid, property returned and payments made to cover damages — including a basket that was destroyed by vandals Saturday night — the remaining money will be put toward the scholarship fund, Thomsen said.

The Event Management class will donate between $500-$1,000 to a UMass scholarship fund, which will be given to a student from the Western Massachusetts area, according to Thomsen.

"I think people were unsure of the event before it happened," Thomsen said. "But, I think people really enjoyed themselves."

Saturday, some 1,000 people turned out to take part in the festivities which included a foul shooting contest, the winner of which won a trip to New Orleans. Chris Chrabascz sank 18 straight free-throws to walk away with the trip.

"I loved doing it, but it was a tremendous amount of work. The amount of time the students put in was really encouraging," Thomsen said.

"I think you can count on this to be an annual event. I'm just glad it went so well the first year."

"If I had to do it again, I would have brought an ice cream truck in," said Russell Spielman, a student in the class. "I would have pushed the advertising Saturday night to make sure that people knew that it was a two-day event.

"The best part of the whole thing was we ran ball in the Cage after we took apart the baskets."

Though former Northeastern University star and NBA player Perry Moss was a no-show to the event, his team did surprisingly well without him, according to Thomsen.

There were seven different divisions based on playing ability. The "Minutemen," a team of John Tate, Rafer Giles, Matt Anderson and Chris Baily, won the Dr. J. Division.

The "Tazmanian Devils" (Pam Batalis, Jeanne Orr, Tuti Scott and Phyllis Capis) won the Women's Division.

"What the Hell's Polo" (Thorr Bjorn, Russ Yarworth, John McDonald and Scott Devine) won the Pitino Division.

"Run-n-Gun" (Steve Connors, Dale Harris, Darrin Harris and Noel Goldberg) won the Sutton Division.

"Mackimmie Magic" (Michael Uden, Meeland Sadat, Russ Bridge and Soloman Commisong) won the Skinner Division.

"SPO Connection" (Norris Ambrose, Pierre Beaulieu, Maurice Mitchell and Charles King) won the Masters Division. Sports Management Department Head Glenn Wong's team finished second in this division.

"Quabog Hogs" (Mark Snow, Pedroan Rehmat and Ron Gresty) won the High School Division.

ANC Chief of Staff to speak on reforms in South Africa

By ERICK OLSEN
Collegian Staff

Chris Hani, Chief of Staff of the military wing of the African National Congress, will speak Wednesday at 6 p.m. in Campus Center room 163 as part of his national tour celebrating the one-year anniversary of the legalization of the ANC.

Hani, also an ANC Executive Committee member and member of the Political Bureau of the South African Communist Party, will discuss the transition process in South Africa, the need for continued reforms, and related issues.

A representative of the Five College Chris Hani Coalition, the group sponsoring Hani's UMass visit, said the purpose of his visit is to raise campus awareness of the ongoing international struggle against apartheid.

Binky Feldman, a member of the Hani Coalition, hopes Hani's visit will "demonstrate a common goal among the Five College interest groups on issues of importance."

In a recent exclusive interview with People's World Weekly, Hani accused the South African government of "stoking the fires of confrontation" and "orchestrating a propaganda campaign that seeks to isolate the ANC so that in the final analysis they talk with an ANC that is toothless."

Hani also said, "To the outside world, [South African President F.W.] de Klerk appears to have introduced reforms. But on the ground, those reforms remain on paper." He also called upon friends and anti-apartheid allies to "intensify sanctions against this regime until we reach a situation where we feel there is no going back, that there is movement towards a democratic South Africa."

Hani's tour follows the April 15 decision of the European community to lift sanctions imposed in 1986 banning imports of South African iron, steel and gold coins.

In an article in Sunday's New York Times, Nelson Mandela strongly criticized the decision, saying it "shows clearly how Europe allies itself with White South Africa and has no regards for the lives, the views and the needs of Black South Africa."

The African choral group BARWA, which performed at Nelson Mandela's speech in Boston, will also be featured.

The Five College Chris Hani Coalition includes: UMass CASA, Afro-American Studies Department, Young Communist League, Five College Inc., Black Mass Communications Project, and other groups dedicated to bringing Chris Hani to the area. Hani's national tour is sponsored by People's Weekly World.

WMUA to institute director of Third World Affairs

By LUISA QUINTANILLA
Collegian Correspondent

Much has changed at WMUA 91.1 FM, the student radio station at UMass, since it was founded in 1949.

Because of an increasing concern about diversity, WMUA will be instituting a new position of director of Third World Affairs next semester.

Tomas Garcia, the ALANA Affairs director, said the position originally described as the Third World Affairs director was renamed the ALANA Affairs director this semester, for the benefit of all American students of color. The acronymn ALANA stands for African-Americans, Latino-Americans, Asian-Americans and Native Americans.

Garcia said a new Third World Affairs directorship has been created "to respond to the needs and interest of foreign students from the Third World."

The whole idea is to increase the variety and scope of programming. Current programming includes Rock, Urban Contemporary, Blues, Jazz, World Music, House, Rap and even Polka.

Glenn Siegal, WMUA's advisor, believes the station's diversity is the key to it success; WMUA was recently ranked third in a Valley Advocate popularity poll.

WMUA began as an attempt to replicate the Fort Devens radio station here in Amherst. Originally, WMUA was devoted to the dissemination of information, but now it is dominated by music with a more limited role for public affairs and news.

As the radio station's amount of programming, physical space, membership and hours of broadcast have grown, "it has grown in stature and respect," Siegal said.

WMUA operates under a format described as "Block Programming," in which weekly time slots are devoted to different kinds of music.

This is intended to make it easier for listeners to regularly tune in to what they want to listen to, Siegal said. There is an increasing emphasis in diversity in the content of the blocks.

WMUA is a student-run organization, because it exists primarily to train students who are interested in the technique and business of radio communication, Siegel said.

Man accused of exposing himself at LBGA dance

By TRYSTAN SKEIGH
Collegian Staff

Witnesses say a man displayed his genitals and pushed a woman during an LBGA dance held Saturday night in the Blue Wall Cafeteria.

According to the University police log, officers working the dance "received complaints of a male subject causing a disturbance, exposing himself, and pushing a female subject attending the dance."

The police have identified the man, but are withholding his name. A show cause hearing has been scheduled.

According to Miriam Bloom, a former UMass student and member of the LBGA, between 12:30 a.m. and 1 a.m. a man "walked to the middle of the dance floor, and dropped his pants and his underwear for five to 10 seconds.

"He was basically swinging his dick around," Bloom said. "People were backing away, they were really grossed out."

According to Bloom, the man was part of a small group of "four to five guys standing around the dancers. They were ...making comments, giggling and pointing. . . ."

Bloom said she earlier went up to the group and asked them to leave. "They just stood there, and I went back to dancing," she said.

Bloom said a little later one of the group walked to the center of the dance floor and dropped his pants. She said as he walked off the floor "he walked by me and pushed me."

Bloom said shortly after she was pushed, the police came and escorted the men out of the dance and gathered information from witnesses.

Bloom's account was confirmed by another woman who said she saw the exposure and asked not to be identified. She said it was obvious to her the men had no idea it was an LBGA dance until after they had entered the Cafeteria.

Buzz Harris, an LBGA member who attended the dance, said he didn't see anyone in the group drop his pants, although he said that behavior wouldn't have surprised him. He said the men were "passively hostile, whispering to one another and gawking."

Bloom has filed an assault charge against the man who pushed her.

uality and speak up on campus about gay rights.

"There aren't a lot of openly gay students here. We're open to each other in certain situations, like GALA dances, but not the campus as a whole. . .you don't usually see students walking around wearing buttons or arm-in-arm here. . .until now."

Bauer said since his attack many gay students have sent signed letters to The Maroon, the student daily newspaper, and there have been several gay rallies on campus.

Yet, despite the support he has received from the gay community, Bauer lives with a great deal of fear. He is still receiving threatening letters and phone calls.

He still has bruises from the beating he received during the March 17 attack, and he says he is much more cautious now. "I keep doors locked behind me, at work and at home."

And despite precautions, which include a University police escort to and from his lab in Cummings, Bauer says he still has nightmares. "They're not about the attack anymore. Now it's about what they will do next."

Bauer is critical of the Chicago police investigation. "Only two days ago they started interviewing students in my building [Cummings] and it's been two-and-a-half months since [the harassment] all started. Why has it taken them so long?"

Bauer says he hopes that despite the fear and the problems, in the end, good will come from his ordeal. He wants more people to learn about gays and the harassment they receive.

"I hope that eventually, this situation will bring about a heightened awareness of the needs of the gay community. . .as it has already started to do here."

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

We students must vote!

As voters head toward the polls for today's primary in the First Congressional District race, the issue of public education has become of the essence.

This district has two state colleges, North Adams State and Westfield State; three community colleges in Springfield, Holyoke and Greenfield; and the flagship university for the state, our University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

In the past two years, the public higher education budget has been cut 23 percent — about $176 million — making higher education for middle-class students more difficult.

For the students of all state colleges and universities and future students, there should be hope. There should be a chance.

The late Rep. Silvio O. Conte was a great leader, a great man. He was a true public servant and never forgot his constituents. This is a man who helped the University and the idea of affordable education.

Also, due to the recession, there have been large numbers of layoffs all over the district. Those affected by the sagging economy need a voice willing to revive business and industry in the economy, to make the people of Western Mass. proud of themselves and their state again.

We encourage each and every one registered to vote in the Congressional District to help safeguard the future of public higher education and help restore the economy by taking time out to vote.

Find the candidate willing to work for higher education and people. The media is bombarding you with the facts and figures — but for the most part, voting records say it all.

We need a candidate who wants to restore the state higher education system and find jobs for those devestated by the recession. The well-being of the Commonwealth should be restored to what it was — and still should be — before the State Legislature and Gov. Weld dismantle the entire system.

Why Collins is our only choice

More than protests and letter writing, we need elected officials working for our goals instead of us. When other state legislators say "put UMass on the chopping block again," we need Jim Collins to say "no more." Jim Collins, as Congressional representative, will do just that.

Jim Collins will do wonders for us in Washington. The Federal Government has incredible influence over the University. From scholarships, to Pell grants, to the $40 million we received in aid last year, no one can claim that a former UMass graduate and an advocate won't be an asset to us in Washington.

I also support Jim Collins because of his record on education. When the state legislators proposed the tuition retention plan, which handed the power to increase fees to the Board of Regents, Jim adamantly fought against it. He had the foresight to know that leaving the decision to increase fees to a small number of non-elected officials and allowing the University to keep the profits, could only insure outrageous tuition increases. John Olver supported this plan and the result of its passage: a 70 percent increase in tuition and fees. Thanks John Olver!

I support Jim Collins for his stands on other issues as well. First of all, he is pro-choice. In an election where the Democratic and Republican front runners are pro-life, it is essential that we cast our vote against those who are against choice. Collins also is a strong advocate for the environment. Collins knows that cleaning up the polluted mills and rivers in western Massachusetts brings back jobs to the region and helps our economy.

Most of all I support Jim Collins because he knows how to get the job done. He doesn't sell out, he doesn't compromise, and he doesn't give up. In a time of increasing tuition and budget cuts, this University needs leadership, strength, and dedication from a Congressional candidate willing to fight for the future. Jim Collins is the only person for the job.

Campaign commercials were dumb

At least now I won't have to watch the battle of the beasts on TV anymore. Not that I have anything against horses or bulls. . . The latest round of political advertisements for the First Congressional District seat hopefuls are, to say the least, interesting if not somewhat comical.

Horses, bulls, flaming photographs, construction helmets, the Tipster and ominous music all highlight the political ads clogging up the airwaves in an effort to secure today's primary win in the race to succeed the late Silvo Conte.

Meredith O'Brien

In the Republican corner, former state Rep. Steve "I am a weenie" Pierce is trying to use his ads to prove his political competence after Gov. Weld beat him in the Republican gubernatorial primary.

This Westfield native, who has a record of being fiercely anti-choice, is certainly no friend to public higher education, government employees or even the homeless and the poor. Being a conservative right-winger who totes the ideology that government should not help its citizens in need with things like welfare and medicaid, Pierce believes that the private sector, out of the benevolent goodness of its heart (and quarterly gains), should aid its fellow citizens. The government should just let them suffer.

His ads, however, paint another picture of this pint-sized politician. With good old Steve in a hard-hat that is way too big for his head, he talks about the "working" class and how he wants to help them. He tries to make himself look like just an average Joe who wants to do his gosh darned best in Washington if you nice folks will just help him get there.

Give me a break. As a source close to me who went to high school with Pierce said recently, "He's a geek. He always was a geek even when we were in high school." Enough said.

On to the Democratic side of this mad dash to Washington — we have two Amherst natives, state Sen. John "Workhorse" Olver and former Chancellor of Higher Education Jim "I'm from UMass" Collins vying for the Congressional slot.

Both their commercials, while toting traditional liberal stances, leave much to be desired. Olver's ads, portraying him as the "workhorse," give people the image of an old, beaten-up mule who does not have any energy or charisma. In one ad, his workhorse leaves the pack (state Sen. Linda Melconian and Collins) "in the dust" of his hoof-prints. The only credible advertising Olver has done is promoting his slew of endorsements — a legitimate piece of information voters need to make an intelligent choice.

Collins' ads do not focus on his UMass background enough, though he does emphasize how he quit the Dukakis administration after the Duke "sacrificed" public education for political, presidential gains. But looking at the close-ups of Collins' face, trying to be ever-so-sincere in relating to the working people — while the camera zooms to his tough, clenched fist — is ineffective advertising, looking fake and forced.

Then there are the Linda "Shame on Us" Melconian ads where we see her in her "best of the 60s" outfits/hairdos, asserting that she, as an intern in Tip O'Neill's office, was the motivating force behind the Middle East peace accords. Her ads go even further trying to push her lackluster record (and pro-life stance) into the shadow of the Tipster giving her his endorsement.

More memorable than her forgettable ads are the ones which attack her. The National Abortion Rights Action League has poured thousands of dollars into a fierce anti-Melconian campaign fearing that people might vote for her because she is a woman, not realizing she is anti-choice. These commercials, despite their ominous, melodramatic music, are the most effective of the lot of political punches.

The last of the commercials — orchestrated by Sherwood "No more Bull" Guernsey and the quirky and unpredictable Rep. Christopher Hodgkins who we only know from his Uncle Sam pose where he stands there pointing his finger out of the screen — are the most amusing. While Guernsey is a very forgettable character except for his pack of bulls, Hodgkins comes forth as a nasty backbiter who sets Pierce's photos on fire and chastises little old Olver for supposedly covering up his record.

When all of today's votes are whittled down and counted, we can only hope that the two left when the dust has settled will be a little more intelligent and thought-provoking with their ads. Please, no more bull.

Thank You again!

As I'm sure you have learned, the fi e that ripped through Zeta Psi two weeks ago left 14 .nen homeless. Initially, through the support of neighboring sororities, they have had a place to live. In particular, we feel it necessary to thank the sisters of Alpha Chi Omega for all their help and patience. We have literally entered into their house and claimed it as our own. It is now time for us to give back. Alph Chi their house and their lives and to find permanent arrangements.

Because the fraternity house was considered University Housing, it is the obligation of the University to find those individuals housing. Their solution, however, was far from adequate. Their only proposal was to locate the brothers across campus in existing unpaid singles, stretching from Northeast to Southwest. A $400 charge was also implemented. Such a situation would have severely weakened the strength of our brotherhood.

Fortunately, other alternatives were available. Southwood Apartments have been very helpful to us during such difficult times. They were able to locate the brothers together, in three connecting apartments. They have also worked out a highly reduced rental agreement so that the cost wouldn't be so painful.

Such help from Southwood only adds to the existing support we already have from the community. We want you to know that all that has been done for us will not be forgotten, for we could not have have made it thus far without it.

Viet-Nam: 16 years after independence, the war continues

Kompong Chhnang, Cambodia

Ho Chi Minh City, Viet-Nam

Photography by Leah Melnick

April 30, 1975 may be seen as "the fall of Saigon" or the "victorious independence day" of Viet-Nam. Either way, it is a day which celebrates the reunification of a Third World country which defeated its colonizers.

Alexander Nguyen

After 16 years of independence, Viet-Nam, as well as Cambodia, still suffers from U.S. intervention. Although the United States suffered a military defeat, it is still winning the war through a political and economic embargo. The United States has, in effect, been trying to starve the Vietnamese people to death.

The embargo does two things. One, it prevents American business from having anything to do with Viet-Nam. The other is the consistent pressure on the World Bank, the Asian Development Bank and the International Monetary Fund to not have normal dealings with Viet-Nam.

Due to these international pressures stemming from the United States, Viet-Nam has had a tremendously difficult reconstruction campaign. Cambodia is also victimized because it is being used as a bargaining chip in this game since the United States has demanded that Viet-Nam withdraw its troops from Cambodia. The real problem with Cambodia comes from China and the United States, without whose sustenance the genocidal regime of the Khmer Rouge would not survive.

Although South East Asia continues to suffer because of Western intervention, the people continue their struggle for self determination. They have proud and resilient cultures which have proven to survive colonization.

As Leah Melnick's photographs reveal, "life goes on." The people have been scarred by the years of war. They have lost their land and their families. But their spirit endures because their priorities include their children who represent their future.

They will go on to derive functional forms of governance from their cultures, their ideologies and their values regardless of foreign intervention.

South East Asians have a long and proud history. Their struggle against the unjust forces of the West continues.

Cambodian New Year: a 'non-assimilated' celebration

By ALEXANDER NGUYEN
Collegian Staff

The Cambodian community of Massachusetts celebrated its New Year Saturday at the Amherst Regional Junior High School in a "non-assimilated fashion," according to celebration organizer Boreth Sun, a UMass graduate student.

"Unlike most other cultural events, we avoided putting on a show for the American people which would reduce our culture to museum exhibits," Sun said.

The New Year Celebration presented various cultural songs, dances and a slide show of photos recently taken in Cambodia. Cambodian people came from all over Massachusetts and Rhode Island.

Sun said that the Celebration was focused on the "community" of the Cambodian people and pointed out that there was no Western music or photos, and that some performances and speeches were not translated. "In the U.S., we celebrate this as a community holiday more so than a New Year holiday," he said.

"It was a wonderful atmosphere where you could sense a real community spirit," said UMass graduate student Michael Morgan. "The event was genuinely for Cambodians, not for Americans."

"The celebration reminded me of my experiences in Central America with the resonance of Khmer language all around and the warm feeling of family," said UMass student Tonya Muro.

Sun said that one of the main objectives was to help youngsters retain their cultural heritage as they acculturate American culture. "We made a strong effort to include younger people in the performances and held traditional Cambodian games for them to play," he said.

"For the elders it was a time to gather and share memories of Cambodia. They have the knowledge and wisdom which they pass on to us to continue the traditions."

Morgan noted the paradox of the event being beautiful and alive yet being held in an American junior high school. "I felt as if it was an American imposition," he said.

Sun said that the celebration was very restricted by American guidelines. He noted that the New Year had to be celebrated two weeks after the actual date of April 13 because they could not find a place for that date. Also, he said it was very difficult to reconstruct the appropriate environment of a Buddhist Temple in the Junior High School.

Sun said that although there are many other Cambodian celebrations throughout the year, the New Year is the biggest one because it is a time when all people come together to continue their culture and retain their identity.

Muro said that it was a nice experience to be in a situation where the "minority" was the majority. "For the European Americans, this was a great experience because they don't have opportunities to experience international cultures in this genuine context very often," she said.

Morgan stated that he felt some European Americans there were uncomfortable with the cultural differences, especially in the structure and orderliness in which the Cambodians went about the events.

"It really hit me in a funny way when I overheard an American asking where the ketchup was," he said.

ARTS & LIVING

A successful start to a three-day long BFA dance feast

By MELISA CANLI
Collegian Staff

The three-day dance extravaganza kicked off on April 25 in Bowker Auditorium with the BFA Concert. The performances were interspersed with student dancers and instructors from the department, including one from Marilyn Patton who is retiring after 25 years of involvement with the UMass dance department.

There was a wide variety of pieces, differing in mood and character. The program began with "Dance to Dance" in which the dancers conveyed just that – dancing for the sheer pleasure of it. The large group in aqua, purple and fuchsia costumes danced to a sci-fi sounding Bach piece.

Rebecca Nordstrom performed a tribute to Edith Piaf with four or five different segments featuring Piaf's strong voice. Nordstrom's gestures were intended to give the feeling of seeing a Piaf performance live, perhaps with her facial expressions.

After the emotionally deep tribute, there was "Quirk." It was, well, quirky. The dancers wore a wild print on their multi-colored unitards. Their timing was excellent and they ended with half of them sliding off stage. The two excerpts from the Magenta Dances were performed by Andrea Watkins. It was one of the most delightful pieces of the whole concert. One could almost feel the ocean licking at one's toes and hear the cries of the seagulls piercing the auditorium. Watkins was a perfect accompanist to the piano and flute that flowed like a body of water. She especially drew laughs and applause from the audience when she returned to the stage and donned a pair of blue fins. Her grace would have put a duck to shame as she leapt and danced with her webbed feet.

The second half of the concert opened with "Desert Passage," a very realistic piece that conveyed its message well. The dancers wearing only black, never faced the audience. I felt parched and exhausted as they attempted to cross an imaginary desert. Their moans and sighs of fatigue at the end complemented the backdrop of the rising and setting sun as it blazed orange to red.

"Curved Lines of Suspended Grace" was performed by a large group. Their rainbow colored costumes and steady flow made this piece one without dramatic rises and falls but one that pleased the eye nevertheless.

In "Marilyn," Patton performed to Carly Simon's spiritually uplifting song in a piece choreographed by her students. Last but not least was "Shout." This was one of the best in the concert. Dancing to the jazzy beat of Duke Ellington, the dancers expressed character, energy and unity. The pastel colors, the hats and flowers in the Good evening. Here at the Institute of Dwarf Gourami Research, we've made a shocking discovery: the word 'Dwarf Gourami' is disappearing from human vocabulary!

However, we can prevent this disaster! Simply insert the word 'Dwarf Gourami' into everyday phrases, like "Have a Dwarf Gourami day" or "Hi, how's your Dwarf Gourami?"
When by yourself, including "it" in song lyrics has proven very successful...
When I think of you, I touch my dwarf gourami...
For you forgetful types, just cut out this cute card, tape it to your hand or wallet, and read aloud! Good luck out there!

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Travel plans may be up in the air due to last minute changes. Buy only the materials you need in order to avoid waste. Investment offers abound now. Trust your instincts.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Widen your circle of friends. A civic project puts you in the spotlight. Dress and act conservatively. Look for new ways to build your savings. Being frank with your mate pays big dividends.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Pay more attention to your personal appearance. Information you receive from friends or neighbors may be incomplete. Tackle home repairs without further delay.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Good, sound thinking prevails today letting you settle on a positive course of action. Curb a tendency to take on a heavier load that you can comfortably handle.

LEO (July 23-Aug 22) A good day for heart-to-heart talks. Show an awareness of your special obligation to your loved ones. Refuse to tolerate nonsense from your offspring. An older family member needs comforting.

VIRGO (Aug 23-Sept 22) Travel favored, especially if a dear companion comes along or a favorite person is waiting at the other end. Lost articles could surface under mysterious circumstances.

LIBRA (Sept 23-Oct 22) Communications with authority figures will leave little room for error. Weigh your words carefully. Loved ones may not be in a cooperative mood. Appeal to their better nature.

SCORPIO (Oct 23-Nov 21) Too much domesticity could leave you feeling edgy. Socializing could be the antidote you need. A difficult choice will have to be made; your future happiness could be at stake.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov 22-Dec 21) Relying too heavily on others can lead to resentment all around. An infatuation could be risky. Look elsewhere for the excitement you seek. Romance is even better the second time around.

CAPRICORN (Dec 22-Jan 19) You would be wise to look into someone's financial dealings before deciding about a working arrangement. Do not mix romance with business. Take advantage of a golden social opportunity.

AQUARIUS (Jan 20-Feb 18) Take time out to have some fun. A change of scenery will provide fresh inspiration. Routine is the enemy of romance. Be spontaneous! Wear your heart on your sleeve.

PISCES (Feb 19-March 20) Your creative ideas need time to be developed. Avoid rushing into anything. You can afford to be patient. Stretch your budget to accommodate an unexpected visitor. Share a special secret with mate.

A vivid tapestry of Brazilian music

By MADANMOHAN RAO
Collegian Staff

Produced as part of a campaign in support of the indigenous nationa of the Amazon basin, the 15 tracks on TXAI feature an excellent selection of Brazilian music, both traditional and contemporary. Like so much of the music from the Third World, TXAI too sings of the struggle of Third World people (in this case, the people of Amazonia) and their attempt to preserve their culture, their land, and their way of life.

"Overture," the opening track, features background vocals by Milton Nascimento, and a narration (whose translation appears in the liner notes) by Davi Kopenawa Yanomami, a member of the Yanomami nation who live at the extreme north of Brazil. Davi aptly captures the apprehension of his people: "The White men are ruining our forest and if we don't defend it, we will soon see our end."

The title track is a more contemporary piece. "Txai" is a word in the language of the indigenous Kaxinawa people of Western Amazonia. It was adopted as a term of respect and caring for all those who have allied themselves with the people of the forest.

Three tracks feature the original music of the Waiapi, Kayapo and Paiter people. The Kayapo and Paiter populations have been greatly reduced, their territories have been invaded, and they are discriminated against in their own homeland.

In addition to making a strong political statement, the album is also a musical masterpiece. "Coisas Da Vida" (That's Life) features fluid saxophone solos by Nivaldo Ornellas. Percussionists Robertinho and Ronaldo Silva get a chance to exhibit their dextrous talents in "Estorias da Floresta" (Stories of the Forest).

Cellos, violas, violins, trumpets, trombones and a chorus provide a very richly layered texture in "Benke," "Yanomami E Nos," and especially in "Que Vira Dessa Escuriadao" (What Will Come Out of This Darkness?).

"Sertao Das Aguas" (Hinterlands of the Waters) is a seductive, lilting samba piece. One of the highlights of the album is "Nozani Na," a wonderfully melodious vocal duet featuring Milton accompanied by Marlui Miranda.

The lyrics in the album are very powerful and poignant. Almost entierly in Portuguese, they shine through even in their English translation: "To have to resist the pain without understanding why, to have to withstand the pain without deserving it — if this is my destiny, who is the tormentor who decided it should be so?"

The only track on which there is some English commentary is "Curi Curi," set to the music of the Waiapi people. It very succinctly captures the plight of the indigenous people of Amazonia: "They don't need our language to know that we have sold them down the drain in the name of progress."

Cyclists take back seat to MIT

By ANDREA MIGLIASSI
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts bicycle racing club was de-throwned hosting their third Eastern Collegiate Cycling Championship this weekend. The likes of Harvard, Penn State, Yale and the Massachusetts Institue of Technology vied for championship status along with 10 other Eastern schools. The tournament held four fields consisting of an A, B and C team for the men and a single women's event.

Plagued by a series of crashes and illnesses, the UMass women walked away with empty pockets. With the veteran leadership of Junior Kim Morris and the increasing strength of new riders Mary Serreze, Cathy Waslaske and Marta Luciano, the team is looking forward to a bright future of hard training and better results.

However, the strongest men's team of the two-day, three-stage event was MIT. The Town of Brimfield was the site of the first day of competition, where the course was fast winding and very exciting. UMass' Paul Swinand of the A Team took the stage win, benefitting from excellent teamwork by both Bob Wilson and Glenn Peck.

The B race also came down to a field sprint as team tactics prevailed. Dan Goldsmith led out teammate John Marshall for the win. As Goldsmith crossed the finish line Saturday, it looked like another UMass championship was underway. Unfortunately, day two did not end as well for the UMass cyclists.

A six-rider team time trial (TTT) is the most important stage of the championships because points earned are multiplied by six. History proves that the team wining the TTT is the team to take the cup. History pulled rank as MIT blazed through the 15-mile course two minutes faster than second-place Penn St. The UMass A squad finished fifth, the B squad took fourth and the C squad finished a distant 10th.

Later in the day, the criterium course, a tactical and demanding course held at Central and Orchard Hill Residential Areas on campus was the site of some of the finest collegiate cycling competition in the East.

UMass' Mike Stelse rode aggressively for the C Team at the front of his race, but finished 10th. Goldsmith was the fifth to cross the line out of 45 competitors in the B race.

Swinand and Johnson provided the star performances of the day for UMass. Though they crossed the line second and fourth, respectively, they did not earn enough total points to retain the Eastern Collegiate Champion title.

Relay team pulls in results for men at Brown Invit.

By KEITH BENNETT
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's track team competed at the Brown Invitational Sunday with some mixed results, according to head coach Ken O'Brien.

"We didn't have a bad day," O'Brien said. "I was mildly disappointed with some of the performances, but I would say that we had a couple of pleasant surprises."

The meet was highlighted by the performance of the 4x400-meter relay team. Tom Hooper, Kevin Walters, Brian King and Mike Grey combined to win the event with a time of 3 minutes, 26 seconds.

Grey and Walters were also successful in individual events. Grey placed second in the 400 with his time of 50.32 seconds and Walters placed third in both the 100 and the 200. His times were 10.97 and 22.7, respectively.

Craig Cormier grabbed the runner-up spot in the 1,500 with a personal best time of 4:01.3.

Joe Kourafas placed third in the high jump with a leap of 6 feet, 4 inches.

Jeff White and Paul Doyle both ran well in the 110 hurdles. White placed third in 15.69 and Doyle ran 15.90 to finish fifth.

Dave Borges and Art Picollo were the team's top performers in the 400 hurdles. Borges placed fourth with his time of 56.10. Picollo did not place in the meet but ran a personal best 57.37.

In the throwing events, Jeff Peterson took fourth place in the discus with a personal best distance of 138-6½ and Luke Simpson placed fifth in the hammer with a throw of 146-2.

O'Brien said he was especially pleased with the performance of Brian Bednarek, who was competing in only his second meet since recovering from an Achille's heel injury earlier in the season. He took fifth in the pole vault with a clearance of 13-0.

The Extra Mile: Three athletes noticeably absent from Sunday's results are distance runners Jon Corso, Gerry Squires and Matt Simon. These athletes competed in the prestigious Penn Relays in Philadelphia Thursday night.

"I was very enthused with the way they performed," O'Brien said. "Some of the best athletes in the sport competed in this meet."

Corso and Squires both competed in the 10,000 and cut more than 45 seconds off of their previous best times, with Squires running 30:15.10 to edge Corso by .10 seconds.

Simon competed in the steeplechase. He covered the 3,000-meter distance in 9:15.2. The time was a 10 second improvement over his personal best.

Crew rocks URI boat, ties Coast Guard

By LYNN FRANKEL
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's varsity crew handed Rhode Island a harsh loss on Saturday and then finished in a dead heat against long-time rival Coast Guard.

The eight boat was comprised of coxswain Mary Lockyer, Rich Scannell, Dave Ring, Mike Rademacher, Dave Schor, Brian Jewitt, Keith Burgoyne, Jeff Vohr and Chris Marino.

The JV men's team had an awesome weekend and came home with two coveted betting tees from URI and Coast Guard.

Sophomore Cameron Clark said that the two victories have helped prepare his boat for the upcoming New England and National Championships.

Second-year rower Bob Leahy said that his boat has "peaked at the right time."

Leahy and Clark row with Jeff Campabianco, Nat Delmanzo, Jared Browning, Steve Weiner, Steve Casco and Tim Stone. Jen Bragg is the boat's coxswain.

Although the women's varsity eight lost to URI, the JV boat continued their winning streak with a strong finish. That boat holds Annie Schwab, Ann Budreski, Laura Scollan, Susanne Maloney, Kim Kadzik, Lisa Maloney, Jenn Koiles and Laurel Collins and is coxed by Elizabeth Harford.

Sunday, the women's varsity boat participated in the Valley Girl Regatta, against Smith, Mount Holyoke and Amherst College. The boat came in three seconds behind the Mount Holyoke crew, the same squad that handed them a loss earlier in the season.

Senior co-captain Rachel White said all the components of the boat came together on Sunday.

Second-year varsity rower Courtney Harold said the boat rowed its best race of the season.

White and Harold row with Jennifer Geary, Deanna Cook, Jen Hinds, Kerry Clarkin, Allison Hurtwitch and Jen Lambert while senior co-captain Jen Blum coxes.

The team begins its post season racing this weekend, heading to Worcester to participate with other Dad Vail Division schools in the New England Championships.

Senior tri-captain Jim McAleavey (30) who had five assists against Rutgers Saturday, leads the team in assists with 29. The Gorillas host Boston College at 3 p.m. today on The Hill.

No. 10 Gorillas host BC

By ADRIEN MATT
Collegian Staff

You could say this is the calm before the storm.

When the University of Massachusetts lacrosse team faces off against Boston College at 3 p.m. today on The Hill, a victory will be the last thing on its mind.

What will be at the forefront of each player's mind is a solid game, well-executed and unselfish.

"We have to play well," said assistant coach Tom Carmean. "Nobody wants an ugly win."

Although BC has a tentative 7-5 record, their most recent wins were victories over Providence College and Stonybrook.

The Eagles return eight seniors and incorporate 17 freshmen, following a 4-10 showing last year. Juniors Colin McLane, who led the team in scoring last year, and Mark Gaffney return at attack and midfield, respectively.

"This is a better team than BC usually has," Carmean said. "This is a full out, full quarter game."

UMass (8-2) moved up two notches in the national rankings after a decisive 17-11 win over Rutgers Saturday. The Gorillas have arrived in the Top 10 while Rutgers (6-5) and Duke (7-5) tie for No. 11.

"They're right where they want to be," Carmean said of the team and the No. 10 spot. "They're happy with it. . .there's no suprizes."

The game (and name) looming ahead is, of course, Syracuse. The Orageman occupy No. 6 with a 8-2 record. Carmean said that in order for the Gorillas to stay focused for today's game they will have to play consistently.

"We need to keep stride to go into Syracuse," he said.

Senior Jim McAleavey and sophomore Mark Millon each have 39 points. McAleavey leads the team in assists with 29 while Millon leads the team in goals with 31.

Millon has scored in every game this season, netting five goals in three games and four goals in two games. He surpassed his scoring totals from last year by the first five games of the season.

Senior Ted Kellerman continues to have strong performances in goal, capping Saturday's game with a career-high 27 saves. He has had 20 or more saves in the last three games.

The second-to-final game of the season is one of those rare opportunities in which UMass' deep and effective bench could see a lot of playing time.

Freshmen contributions by the likes of Mike Orton, Wes Depp, Chris Nentwich and Joe Cahill have been significant. Orton, Depp and Nentwich boast three goals and Cahill has one assist.

NCAA Lookout: The Atlantic Coast Conference held a league tournament at Duke this weekend. In the first round Maryland beat Virginia 10-9 and North Carolina defeated Duke 11-8 on Saturday. Maryland then lost to North Carolina 18-8 in the final round on Sunday.

UNC is still undefeated and at No. 1 with a 12-0 record. Maryland (8-3) moved up one notch to No. 3 while Virginia (9-3) was bumped down to fifth from third. Duke and Rutgers are tied at No. 11.

In other Saturday games, No. 4 Princeton beat No. 14 Cornell and No. 6 Syracuse defeated No. 18 Penn. Princeton (10-2) was ranked fifth and Penn (5-6) was ranked 17th going into this weekend's games.

Pierce, Olver win primary congressional bids

By GAYLE LONG
Collegian Staff
and the Associated Press

While Steven Pierce walked away with 55 percent of the Republican votes in the First Congressional District primary, State Sen. John Olver of Amherst fought a three-way race to attain the Democratic nod for the June 4 general election.

Olver led the eight-candidate pack with 31 percent of the ballots, with 96 percent of the precincts reporting.

State Sen. Linda Melconian of West Springfield and Rep. Christopher Hodgkins of Lee were following closely behind, each carrying 18 percent of the vote.

Also in the Democratic race, Sherwood Guernsey, a former state representative from Willaimstown had 14 percent, and James Collins of Amherst, another former state representative trailed with 11 percent.

The candidates were vying for a chance to fill the seat vacated by the death of Silvio O. Conte, the only Republican in the 13-member Massachusetts congressional delegation. Conte, from Pittsfield, retained his office for 32 years, until his death in February.

Meanwhile, an attempt to dispel the myth of student apathy, students at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst organized an effort to bring students to the polls, according to Commuter Area Government President Susan Church.

There are 1,500 students at the University who have registered to vote in Amherst since this fall and at least 1,000 students voted yesterday, she said. Church said 700 actually went to the polls, while another 300 voted by absentee ballot.

"Especially for a primary, the voters turnout for students was amazing," said Church. "Nothing could please us more than the turnout today [yesterday]."

Church said a core of eight students, with the help of about 35 others, hung up informational fliers, called voters, drove cars and manned the phone bank which called all of the student voters.

"Students are going to make the difference," she said. "No state legislator or Gov. Weld can stand up and say that students don't care."

Church reported 300 students from Southwest voted, along with 100 each from Orchard Hill, Central and Sylvan/Northeast.

"These were our targeted zones," she said. "I keep going over the numbers in my mind and I'm absolutely astounded."

Church said those students involved were not just from Commuter Area Government but also consisted of coalition of other students.

Phone bank workers called on-campus students to tell them when cars were leaving to head toward the polls. Church said there were six cars which drove students all day, and the heaviest hours were between 2 p.m.-8 p.m.

In Amherst, with all precints reporting, the Town Clerk's office announced Olver won with a total of 2,194 votes. Collins of Amherst followed with 1,201 votes. Hodgkins came in third with 418 votes.

On the Republican side, former House Minority leader Steven Pierce came out on top with 313 votes of 552 Republican votes cast. Donald Thurston, a Clarksburg radio station owner finished with 176, and Pittsfield lawyer Janelyn Patashnkick with 33 votes.

Overall, 5,149 of the 12,372 (41 percent) of registered voters in Amherst voted.

There are 96 communities and 283,815 registered voters in the district, with 104,852 registered Democrats (37 percent), 38,283 registered Republicans (13 percent) and the remaining 140,680 (50 percent) are independent voters.

Tsongas eyes presidency

Offers outside view of Washington

MANCHESTER, N.H. (AP) — Paul Tsongas opened a long-shot campaign for the 1992 Democratic presidential nomination yesterday with a call for a new economic nationalism and with an outsider's criticism of Washington.

Accusing successive Republican presidents of lacking leadership, the former Massachusetts senator said, "Enough of this Washington avoidance. Enough of this Washington mediocrity," Tsongas became the first Democrat to declare his candidacy.

He began his campaign at a rain-drenched hometown rally in Lowell and then headed to nearby New Hampshire, the state that holds the nation's first presidential primary.

A drier, but smaller crowd heard the same speech in an auditorium at the Manchester campus of the University of New Hampshire.

"I feel like I'm home in New Hampshire," said Tsongas who grew up only a few miles from the state and them graduated from Dartmouth College.

From New Hampshire, Tsongas flew to Iowa, another early voting state.

Tsongas was likely to have the field to himself for the coming weeks and perhaps months.

Most better-known Democrats Sens. Albert Gore Jr. of Tennessee and Lloyd Bentsen of Texas, House Majority Leader Richard Gephardt of Missouri, and Govs. Mario Cuomo of New York and L. Douglas Wilder of Virginia are holding off, probably until the fall, on announcing their 1992 intentions.

"For the moment, he [Tsongas] has an opportunity to fill a void," said former New Hampshire Democratic chairperson Joseph Grandmaison, who stood at the back of the room to observe the Manchester speech. Grandmaison said Tsongas' outsider bid was a "type of candidacy that traditionally runs well in both Iowa and New Hampshire."

Tsongas' health could be an issue. He declined to seek re-election to a second Senate term in 1984 after he was diagnosed as suffering cancer of the lymphatic system. He underwent radical treatment and now says he is free of the disease.

His principal message is economic.

In an 85-page booklet in which he spelled out his positions on a range of issues, Tsongas advocated buying American products over foreign competitors because "I derive a quiet pleasure knowing that my money will remain in out economy and multiply. I instinctively understand that my economic well-being will eventually be determined by the economic well-being of

University Press honored with award for top publisher

By DAVID MASSEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Press, publisher of a wide range of scholarly books that also appeal to a general audience, has received this year's New England Booksellers Association Award as the top publisher.

Pat Carrier, who works at the Globe Corner Bookstore and was one of the members on the New England Booksellers Awards Committee, said she chose the UMass Press because of the "remarkable quality and depth of their publishing in the area of American history, specifically New England related items."

The award recognizes "not only the quality of their publications but that they publish books of interest to the general public," Carrier said.

Sharon Kirby, the publications manager for the New England Booksellers Association, said the UMass Press was given this honor for the "quality of their books and consistency of their quality."

The director of the University of Massachusetts Press, Bruce Wilcox, was "delighted" to win this "special honor."

This award, honoring the cumulative body of UMass Press publications over the years, recognizes not only the publications dealing with American history, Wilcox said, but also those dealing with women's issues, black affairs, poetry, literature, politics, philosophy and other subjects.

A landmark publication soon to be available this year by the UMass Press is the "Historical Atlas of Massachusetts," edited by UMass professors Richard W. Wilkie and Jack Tager. The coffee-table-size book offers an unprecedented visual portrait of Massachusetts through graphs, illustrations and full-color maps.

Regents postpone tuition decisions

Cut in public higher education to near $200 million

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

Because cuts to the education budget for fiscal year 1992 may jump from $115 million to $200 million, the Board of Regents, scheduled to meet Thursday in Boston, will postpone any decision on tuition increases for state public higher education until sometime in May or early June, Terry Zoulas, spokesman for the Board of Regents, said yesterday.

"The cut for higher education could be considerably higher than $115 million, it could be closer to $200 million," Zoulas said.

Gov. Weld pulled back his original budget and is expected to offer a new one in the next five to seven days, Zoulas said. Once a new budget is approved by the Legislature, the the Board of Regents is expected to either schedule a special meeting to discuss tuition, or discuss it at the next scheduled meeting on June 6.

Meanwhile, the board continues to receive letters asking them to not increase tuition.

Rep. Stan Rosenberg (D-Amherst) last week sent a letter to all the members of the Board of Regents asking them to reject any proposed tuition increase for public colleges and universities.

"I am writing to ask, as respectfully and urgently as I can, that you vote down any tuition increase which exceeds the rate of inflation," Rosenberg said in his letter.

"Any increase in tuition above the rate of inflation — and certainly any increase of 15 to 32 percent — must be ruled out of the question," he said.

The Board of Regents will not receive a formal recommendation from its finance subcommittee, which voted

Labor leaders say unions must change

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

Organized labor in the United States faces unprecedented challenges in the 1990s, according to four panelists who spoke on "New Directions for Labor: A National Perspective," last night to a crowd of nearly 100 in Thompson Hall.

The panel, held as part of UMass Labor Awareness Week, featured noted labor leader Victor Reuther, who founded the United Auto Worker's Union and gained fame leading sit-down strikes in the 1930s.

"We not only organized a union, but strengthened American democracy at the grass-roots level," Reuther said, referring to the formative years of American unionism in the 1920s and 1930s.

"Can you imagine what is more important than taking millions of workers and their families and educating them into American society?" he asked.

Although the American labor movement has played an important role in what Reuther calls the "unfinished, and yet imperfect, American Revolution," the 1990s hold out diminished prospects unless fundamental changes are made in the movement.

"There's no social agenda for Americans today, only a corporate agenda," Reuther said. "I have a feeling we've reached a watershed point in our great country.

"Soon the parades and flag-waving will end, and we'll realize that we're a debtor nation and we have 37 million people who are unable to draw unemployment insurance," he continued.

"We need a national policy to provide a basic income [for workers] and improve the standard of living of workers," Reuther said.

The other three panelists all spoke from their more recent associations with organized labor in the United States.

Elyse Cann, co-director of the Machine Action Project based in Springfield, sees three steps labor unions need to make to remain viable in the 1990s.

"The number one contractual issue is for unions to build control over the production process — what's being made, who's making what," Cann said.

Cann also pointed to the need for unions and firms to stop focusing too much on levels of production and for the need for new types of union leaders.

"For too long, wages have been tied to production increases, but I think this country has adequate levels of production," she said. "We produce too much, too fast, and there's a lot of waste.

"Let's produce what we need."

Jerry Tucker, a leader in the New Directions Caucus of the UAW, and Richard Miller, an organizer for the Union of Oil, Chemical, and Atomic Workers, filled out the panel.

"We want unions that are democratic, accountable, and work in solidarity," Tucker said. "We're looking for a New Order like George Bush is, but a whole different order."

Professor: unions exclude women

By AMY HENRY
Collegian Staff

Unions must change their structure in order to become more accessible to women, a labor studies professor asserted yesterday.

Labor Studies Professor Dale Melcher spoke to her class yesterday on "Women and Work" and "Women and Unions," as a part of Union Awareness Week. Melcher said unions need to actively recruit women. "The union rap is like can only organize like," she said. "Women should organize women because women will be more likely to join."

One participant said, "There should be no taxation without representation. If people [women] are paying union dues they should get representation."

Melcher said women are need to learn how unions operate to get get a position of leadership. "Women need to speak the language of the union to get elected," she said. Paula Blanchard, a BDIC major in the class said the problem of union accessibility lies in the lack of union role models for women. "Women in leadership positions serve to show women that they too can be in these positions," Blanchard said.

Melcher said, "We women have internalized fears about speaking in front of people and our abilities. Women will be less likely to feel confident to run for important positions."

"As much as [women] would like to support a woman leader, a woman's fears about herself would make her think a man could do a better job," she continued. "Most men think they can do a job or can learn how to do it if they get elected. We tend to underestimate our qualifications compared to men."

All suggestions made by the students take for granted the assumption that women know more about women's issues, Melcher said. Women's issues, like maternity leave that affect union activities, should become issues of concern to men too, she said.

"For example, maternal leave should become parental leave. In the beginning women made unions recognize their issues, now these issues can become marginalized since not as many women belong to unions as men," she said.

Anything seen as women's issues will not get the same attention other issues receive within the unions, Melcher said. "The union will be more likely to walk out because of a pension problem then a women's issue," she said.

Sabine Merz, a Sociology major, said women are more aware and sensitive to family issues and the social network then men.

Trish Gallagher a sociology major said, "It is very patronizing for men and some women to assume men can speak for women. Just like Whites can't speak for Blacks."

Melcher cited a study done by British researchers of full-time union officials which found it makes a difference having women in positions of leadership.

Students react to Chicago assault

By TRYSTAN SKEIGH
Collegian Staff

Editor's note: This is the last of a three-part series on the Chicago graduate student assault

Members of the UMass gay, lesbian and bisexual community say they are not surprised or shocked to learn of the March 17 attack against gay graduate student Chris Bauer at the University of Chicago.

Rather, they see the attempt on the life of Chris Bauer as simply one more incident amidst a long list of gay assaults. And they believe the attack on Bauer merely serves to further highlight the need for a national gay civil rights law.

Joann, a member of the LBGA who requested that her last name and major be withheld, said she wondered when she heard about the assault on Bauer, "What was the big deal?"

She said assaults against gays are a common occurrence. "Most of my male gay friends in Boston have been beaten up 10 times over," she said. "It happens all the time."

Joann also said that she has been assaulted for being openly bisexual.

Troy Cascia, another LBGA member, echoed Joann's frustration. "Gays are the one minority that it's publicly okay to shit on, harass, beat up and kill," Cascia said. "People who kill gays get the lightest sentences. . ."

Both Joann and Cascia agreed that a federal civil rights law is needed to protect gays. Joann, however, said she felt the problem also must be dealt with at a deeper level.

Joann said she believed there must be "swift punishment against the people" who harass gays combined with social education. "I think different attitudes need to be taught in schools," Joann said. "It has to start early."

Sean Sullivan, a member of the LBGA and the LBG Counseling Collective, says he also believes that gays need a law.

"The fact the FBI can't or won't investigate the [Bauer] incident highlights the real need for national civil rights legislation," Sullivan said.

In his view, a civil rights guarantee is a basic necessity to the gay community's struggle to gain social acceptance.

"I've heard comments within the GLB community that gay rights bills are only cosmetic, they make us look better, but there are more important issues. . .That view is completely erroneous," Sullivan said. "This case [Bauer's assault] demonstrates what we need to be working on in the first place."

Margaret Arsenault, a staff advisor in the Student Activities Office, also agreed that gays need a federal civil rights law. She said she felt the state-by-state approach has limitations.

"Some states haven't even accepted Martin Luther King Day," she said. "How can we expect them to deal with gay rights? If we're talking about changing societal attitudes, that has to start at the federal level," Arsenault continued.

Steven, another member of the LBG Counseling Collective who requested that his last name be withheld, predicted that "as gay activism becomes more vocal, there will be more direct personal attacks. . . [against gays]."

Steven said until there is a law explicitly providing protection to gays, the federal government will not be able to intervene in cases like Bauer's assault. "Their hands are tied. I mean, they can't really do anything [without a federal law]," he said.

Steven and Sullivan both expressed support for Chris Bauer. Sullivan said he hoped Bauer was receiving support from his local gay community and he said he hoped Bauer had counseling available to help him deal with the trauma of his experience.

"I would commend him for having the courage to continue with his politics despite the harassment," Steven said.

African students bring speakers, get cultural center

By PAMELA McCARTHY
Collegian Staff

Despite red tape and lack of funding, the African Students Association have been able to sponsor speakers to come as well as create an African cultural center in Orchard Hill.

Micere Githae Mugo, a Kenyan playwright, will be speaking today at 4 p.m. in the Campus Center Room 168 on "African Women and Theater and Their Role in the Political Struggle."

Mugo wrote a play called "Vision of Africa" and co-wrote "The Trial of Dedan Kimathi" with Ngugi wa Thiong'o. Because of her writings, she is exiled from Kenya and currently lives in Zimbabwe.

"We're basically bringing her down to prove there are lots of women in Africa who are involved in the struggle for democracy and freedom," said Kole Rotimi, African Students Association social chair.

African lawyer Gibson Kamatu Kuria is scheduled to speak on Wednesday, May 7 at 7 p.m. in CC 168, about human rights and the democracy movement in Africa. Kamatu was detained without trial numerous times after working on human rights issues in Kenya. He also won the Robert F. Kennedy Memorial Human Rights Award and the Lawyers Committee for Human Rights Award.

every other American.

"I think like a Japanese would. Or a German would. I think like an economic patriot."

His announcement in Lowell, to a crowd of several hundred in front of a renovated textile mull, was marred by the steady rain.

But the site had symbolic value as a reminder of development spearheaded by Tsongas when he was a city councilman and later a congressperson and senator.

Lowell boomed into the 1980s the days of the "Massachusetts Miracle" often cited by Michael Dukakis during his 1988 presidential campaign.

But like the rest of the state, the city now has fallen on hard times.

Grochmal said he hoped Tsongas "does better that the other person and you know who I mean, Dukakis ruined Massachusetts."

The comparison with the former governor they are both from Massachusetts, both of Greek heritage, and both regarded as liberals is one of the acknowledged handicaps faced by Tsongas.

White House spokesperson Marlin Fitzwater, asked in Washington about the possibility that President Bush might face another Massachusetts Democrat in 1992, said, "Who's that?"

House Speaker Thomas Foley, leaving the White House after a meeeting with Bush, said Tsongas' "coming forward is very welcome but he won't be last" Democrat to seek the nomination.

Tsongas' only reference to cancer in his announcement speech was indirect.

"Seven and a half years ago I began my own journey," he said.

"For me and my family it was a time of adversity. But during that adversity I derived a deeper faith."

He focused on the economy and international competition in the speech, and people in the crowd waved signs reading, "Another Economic Patriot for Paul Tsongas."

"We were never meant to be the world's greatest debtor nation," he said. "We were never meant to have our ancestors patrimony sold to the highest foreign bidder.

"We were never meant ot have American workers rank ninth in the world in wages."

■ union gender differences discussed

Some of the classes' assumptions such as, "Women are more likely to mentor women in unions than men, are more likely to mobilize women into unions, and have a greater all around sensitivity and remained much more in touch with the rank and file base of the union" were challenged by Melcher.

The group brain-stormed a list of barriers women face when trying to take leadership positions in unions.

Class members cited family conflict, time, unsupportive partner, funds, visibility, support systems and women's socialization among the many obstacles women in unions face.

Melcher said another study done by Cornell researchers found that education about labor unions has helped women become more involved in unions.

"Education about unions can make a woman feel more comfortable," she said. "Education also gives credentials and more respect from others which is important to get elected."

■ African group gets MLK center

"The main reason why we are doing both programs is because Africa has been ignored in the world press," said Rotimi. "Now things happen that affect Africa [and they] go unnoticed, like the lifting of sanctions on South Africa."

In addition to it's line-up of speakers, the association obtained office space to create the Martin Luther King Jr. Cultural Center in Dickinson Residence Hall last semester.

"The African students have been fighting for a center where it could represent them on campus," said Rotimi. "The New Africa House has the word 'Africa' in it, but its for African-Americans. Africans wanted a cultural center.

"Right now we're trying to get more funding. This semester, it doesn't look like we'll get the funds to buy the things we need and to bring the people we want to speak," he continued.

The MLK Cultural Center is a "multicultural center where not just people of African descent can come and learn about different parts of Africa," said Rotimi. "It is kind of like an educational center. [It makes] the community aware that Africa isn't a homogenous country where everyone has the same culture."

You have one night.

It seems unfair. The genius had all that time. While you have a few short hours to learn your sun spots from your satellites before the dreaded astronomy exam.

On the other hand, Vivarin gives you the definite advantage. It helps keep you awake and mentally alert for hours. Safely and conveniently. So even when the subject matter's dull, your mind will stay razor sharp.

If Galileo had used Vivarin, maybe he could have mastered the solar system faster, too.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Be nice to me

This might be a little late but, to those impressionable first- and second-year students who decided to keep their present dorm rooms for the next semester, a warning: off-campus living is as pleasurable as having your hair shaved with a rusty cheese grater while chewing on tin foil, or an experience resembling that.

A.R. Santiago

Here are some hints to consider if you're still bent on moving north or south of campus, in search of that proverbial social life you've been hearing so much about from people on the bus on Friday nights reeking of alcohol and the smell of their own vomit:

● Privacy. Aaahh. The beauty of being able to do what you want at all hours of day and night — blast your stereo as if music were going out of style, stomp around your apartment 'til the cows come home (or 'til your floor caves in or you find something better to do) or have keg parties and wild orgies Sunday to Sunday — without those pestilent RAs on your back.

All this in exchange for the mere sanity of those living below and above you (mostly below). What a deal. Students leave the claustrophobic dorms and their intrusive RAs for the freedom that usually accompanies life off-campus. Seems so innocent and romantic at first, doesn't it? However, many of these students also bring with them their insensitivity and thoughtlessness.

It would be very difficult to convince me that these people are actually willing to carry the financial burden of a UMass education because, apparently, they have yet to learn the very first rule of life: Never piss anybody off that can write about you in your school newspaper, circulation 19,000. It's just not good manners.

● Make sure the people you're pissing off (especially newspaper columnists) are not suffering from some sort of psychological disorder that drives them to fits of insane rage with or without provocation.

These people are not likely to think twice about sacrificing a rabbit and pinning its bloodied carcass on your door. It might also be helpful to know that people who work for a newspaper, specifically, are likely to be so encumbered by stress on the job anyway that the threat of serving time in prison for murder might be a welcome respite.

● If you're apt to blast dance music within hearing distance of those dwellers who happen to detest that genre, beware. Always make sure, that you have a better stereo system, one that can hold up to retaliation. Is Milli Vanilli really any match for the screaming guitar licks of Living Colour or the Jeff Healey Band? Didn't think so.

This ranting and raving might well land on deaf ears. The dorms, even as we speak, are already nurturing the next caboodle of Big Foot reincarnates who will torment the latest generation of off-campus inductees. These terrorists will pay their last dollar just to be able to live on the third floor of a three-story apartment complex merely to have the privilege of doing as they please, night and day, and never have to think twice about the fact that their thin, creaky floor is also my ceiling.

Before you poor kids move out here to pagan country, where the proliferation of these drunken misfits is increasing at an alarming rate, consider your actions. Better yet, consider your sanity. Do you want to keep it, or can you spare it? If all else fails, and you've already signed your name on that lease, become a columnist for New England's largest college daily and get the last say. I'm having mine.

So, to the Big Foot family of stompers that has tormented me for almost a year now, take this. None of your annoying late-night carousing, 24-hour stomping on my ceiling, or your bad electric guitarplaying at 3 a.m. is quite as powerful as the written word. My written word. Huh.

Afro-Am Studies profs discuss 'Frotter' strip

We have been much impressed by a spirit of social responsibility and journalistic fairness — qualities not always evident in previous years — in the operation of this year's Collegian.

This is why we think it particularly important that you re-examine your decision to terminate Garry Porter as a contributor, especially for the reasons given in a recent editorial. Had you fired him because he draws badly, or because his habits of personal hygiene left something to be desired, that would have been one thing. But to do so because some members of the minority community took offense at something he wrote and you published is quite another. That some readers find it offensive begs the question: Was the strip objectively offensive and in poor taste? And if were in fact intrinsically and substantively racist, should not your editors have picked that up before it appeared? So why is only the author being terminated?

We support your right and responsibility to deny your pages to racist utterances. The First Amendment may protect all speech. But nowhere does it require that all speakers — racists and hatemongers included — be given, as a matter of right, the platform of the press from which to disseminate their views.

But Mr. Porter hardly seems to qualify. It is not at all clear that his controversial "Frotter" strip was either intrinsically or substantively racist, insensitive or intended to insult Black people. On the contrary, while its subject was racism, it was quite clear that its targets were the race-baiting demagoguery of a David Duke and the smug hypocrisy of the corporate bureaucrats it portrayed.

To us, on first reading the strip, that did not seem at all ambiguous. So much so, that we thought for a long time that the consequent tumult and shouting had to be about some other strip, something genuinely insulting and derogatory which we had missed. We feel strongly therefore that to terminate Mr. Porter because he is "insensitive" or had "offended minorities" is, on the evidence of that strip, an extreme over-reaction on your part and grossly unfair to Mr. Porter.

That Black students will stridently protest perceived racism is inevitable and appropriate given the habits and history of the White media. Their highly vocal vigilance shows that this generation will not accept quietly any insulting ignorance or bigotry from the media. Usually they are right in their protest. Not so in this case, and the real victim is Mr. Porter.

Injustice done in the name of enlightenment and tolerance is not better, indeed is more galling, than that done out of prejudice and ignorance. That is why you should re-examine the entire issue and especially your actions.

Questioning use of new words

On page 13 of the April 23 Springfield Union-News it war reported that Lesbian, Bisexual and Gay Alliance member Sean Sullivan called stereotypes the "greatest threat" to alliance members. I agree completely. In fact, I feel a little threatened by one of Mr. Sullivan's statements reported farther along in the article:

"Heterosexuals assume that all members of the gay, lesbian and bisexual community are left-wing radicals who listen to the same kind of music and wear the same kind of clothes, for example, Sullivan said."

Carl Dodson

Even though Mr. Sullivan does not say "all heterosexuals assume. . ." the "all" is certainly implied (presuming this excerpt is an accurate quote or faithful paraphrase — note that it is nor reported as a direct quote). I would have to ask Mr. Sullivan to start with his own stereotypes if he wants to change things for the better. This sort of generalization is a minor form of a type of misunderstanding which is all too prevalent among those of the sociopolitically active persuasion. At worst, people like myself are mistaken for repressive, narrow-minded bigots simply because we are White heterosexual males — and this gets very tiresome. The fact is, I always try to judge everyone individually, and I strongly believe in the right of everyone to live, privately or publicly, in whatever way they choose, short of the harming of others. Mr. Sullivan should realize that he has more supporters of his freedom of choice than he seems to think, so that he might avoid alienating that support.

It's bad enough being told what I think by someone who does not know, but it's even worse to be told what I should think. All the above seems to be a bit of harmless misguidedness when compared to another phenomenon reported in the April 21 Sunday Republican: a list of "preferred terms" being distributed at local colleges. There is something sinister at work here. Take for example the word "ableism", coined by the authors of the "preferred terms" list to describe not just the belief that one who has disabilities is inferior to one who does not. No, it is also used to describe discrimination allegedly practiced by those who even use words such as "disabled." Someone who, say, cannot walk, may feel put-upon by being termed "disabled" (and then again, they might not) — but I can't see the logic in the claim that the use of such a word is always discriminatory or negative. This is an attempt to mold our language, and therefore our way of thinking, and I consider it wrong and dangerous.

Discrimination and oppression lie not in the words we choose, but in the intent behind those words. If gay activists can refer to themselves as Queer Nation, or people of color can refer to each other with racial epithets, without necessarily being branded "oppressive" or "discriminatory," then so can I, even though I do not belong to either group. I would bet my own hard-earned money that is is possible to use virtually any word criticized by the authors of the "preferred terms" list in a positive context, depending on one's intent and ability to communicate. To claim otherwise is to take a dangerously superficial view of thought and speech.

If anyone should accuse me of being hypocritical by my seeming denial of the "prefered terms" authors' right to say what they say, I would reply: that is not the case. I deny them nothing. Of course they are as free to think and speak as I insist on being. I just hope that enough people will respond by telling them they are wrong, or by simply ignoring them, so that eventually they will stop preaching their misguided gospel of right-mindedness.

We should not be silent in the face of oppression

We, the Chris Hani Coalition of students, staff, faculty and community members, protest the appearance of two blatantly racist and bigoted letters to the editor in the Collegian last week.

One of the letters openly threatened "Third World" students with physical violence. The other announced the formation of a secret neo-Nazi group on campus, calling on students to take action against "diversity" to be considered for membership.

We oppose and condemn racism, sexism, homophobia and anti-Semitism, and declare acts of bigotry and hate groups organizing such acts, will not be tolerated at UMass.

We do not consider letters such as these to be just talk. We know from experience that such "talk" is intended to create an atmosphere in which acts of bigotry and violence take place, in which many students may no longer feel safe and secure on their own campus. This kind of "talk" violates the rights of students to be free from from discrimination and treated with equality.

Chris Hani Coalition

This campus has a long history of racist and bigoted violence, from the 1986 attack on African-American students after the World Series, to the Sylvan attacks the next year, to the countless unpublicized — and, regrettably, unreported — incidents that daily impinge on the lives of students of color, women, and gay, lesbian and bisexual students. The formation of hate groups is not unique to UMass. It has been happening all around the country, encouraged by the racist policies of Reagan and Bush — the veto of the Civil Rights Act, the attack on Affirmative Action and the dismantling of the Civil Rights Commission.

Bigoted actions are also encouraged when the campus administration is silent in the face of neo-Nazi threats. Based on recent history, we should not be surprised by the silence. The administration has still not implemented the recommendations of the Hurst Report or the demands of the New Africa House sit-in, which it promised to do years ago. It has stood by silently while the number of UMass students of color has plummeted.

UMass students have a long history of protest against racism and bigotry. But if we fail to respond to bigotry today, as we have responded in the past, it gives the impression that we are indifferent to it, and the racists will be encouraged to act. Therefore, acts of bigotry should be reported.

More than ever before, in this period of budget cuts and tuition hikes, we need student unity to most effectively resist the attack on our education. All students are hurt by the cuts, but students of color are hit the hardest. We are strongest when we all stand together against cuts, racism and bigotry.

We demand that:

1) The Collegian, having helped imperil the well-being of many students by printing these letters, publish an editorial opposing their content.

2) The administration take action to protect potential victims of bigoted actions and to stem the growth of these hate groups on campus, including issuing a statement opposing acts of bigotry and the formation of hate groups on campus, imposing strong measures in the Code of Student Conduct against them, and implementing the recommendations of the Hurst Report.

Trade unionist say Cubans enjoy equity of wealth

By MARC ELLIOTT
Collegian Staff

Cuba is creating a society of equality and social justice, two Cuban trade unionists told a small group of labor activists and community members yesterday in the Campus Center.

"We are building a society where people are not worth what they have in their pockets or in their bank account," said Luis Guillermo Abreu Majias of the National Secretariat of the Cuban National Trade Union, with the aid of a translator.

As a part of Union Awareness Week, Majias and Joaquin Bernal Camero, also of the Cuban National Trade Union, led a discussion on the role of class and unions in Cuba since its communist revolution in 1959.

Camero told the audience, also through a translator, that all the Cuban people enjoy the country's wealth equally, in good fiscal times or the bad times. The "bad times" were the result of the collapse of the communist governments in Eastern Europe.

"Because all of our programs are directed to the social needs of the people and not to fatten the pockets of the rich, even in bad times [the programs] can better serve the people," Camero said. "Everyone can witness the fact that the ones that give the directions and the ones that follow the directions and the students and the workers and the people in general all have to overcome the difficulties and have to suffer the impact of the difficulties."

Responding to a member of the audience who asked whether the "failure" of communism in Eastern Europe might mean that capitalism is more attuned to human nature, Majias described the conditions the Cuban people before 1959 and the equality of wealth that exists in Cuba today.

Majias said when he lived in Cuba under Fulgencio Batista's capitalistic rule, he saw great inequality of wealth and people being evicted from their homes by great landowners who owned so much land that some of their property they had never seen.

"If human nature means that one must be exploited and there must be inequality and that some have a lot and many have a little, if one can think of this as human ideal, then yes, I guess you can say that capitalism is human," he said.

"More than one time I saw people being evicted with their families and belongings out in the street because there is no room for them," Majias continued.

He went on to say that Cuban society today directs all of its effort to the benefit of all the Cuban people.

"We are in a society where we are the ones with the property," Majias said. "If we have a lot of riches, we enjoy better conditions, but everyone does. We have less riches then we enjoy less the conditions."

Corbett and Junkins to read poetry at UMass

By DANIELLE DOWLING
Collegian Staff

I think I shall never see a poem as lovely as my left knee.

If you revel in rhyme, then today is your day. Two poets, William Corbett and Donald Junkins will be reading their works at UMass.

Corbett is the author of 10 books of poetry. Published in Equisite Corpse and the Boston Globe, Corbett will be leading poetry workshops at UMass during the fall of 1991 and the spring of 1992 in the Master of Fine Arts program.

Donald Junkins has also published 10 books of poetry including Agamenticus Poems, And the Sandpipers She Said, Crossing by Ferry: New and Selected Poems and his most recent work, Playing for Keeps which was released by Lynx House Press. Justin's work has also been published in a numerous amount of magazines including American Poetry Review, the Atlantic and the New Yorker.

Here is but a sampling of his work from "Crossing by Ferry":

"Out in the bay the island waits, green woods holding on, from this distance, as casually as my son standing against the chain rail, looking at the water, looking hard, trying to figure out something about fish or depth, not yet sure of the question: a picture of myself thirty-five summers ago looking into a mystery in another part of Maine. Not a real mystery, only a cellar hole. ."

Junkins has received two National Endowment fellowships for the arts poetry and the John Masefield Award. For 10 years, he headed the UMass Master of Fine Arts program in English and is the former poetry editor of the Massachusetts Review.

William Corbett will read from his works today at 4 p.m. in Bartlett Hall, Room 301 at UMass. He will be followed by Donald Junkins at 8 p.m. in Memorial Hall, also at UMass. There will be a reception after Junkins' reading, which is a part of the Visiting Writer Series and is sponsored by the Master of Fine Arts program in English and Lynx House Press.

Fun events for May Day

MAY DAY! MAY DAY! April is over and May has begun. Fourteen days until school daze are over so you should be handcuffing yourselves to your typing utensils. Why then did today's schedule have to be so packed with fun, and free fun at that? No one is exempt from temptation. Blues buffs, folk folks, rock hounds and food consumers alike will find a bit of entertainment tailored to their fancy at one (or all) of four events scheduled for today.

● The 20th Annual Black Musicians Conference kicks off its week long schedule of events with a panel discussion on the Blues and a Blues concert tonight in the Cape Cod Lounge. The legendary Jessie Mae Hemphill will be the featured soloist at the conclusion of the panel, "Perspectives on the Blues" with Albert Murray, Daphne Duval Harrison and Jeff Todd Titon. Things begin at 7:30 p.m.

● Jane Sapp, a community activist who "takes inspiration from her roots as a black woman," will perform in the Student Union Ballroom at 7:30 p.m. tonight. Her latest album out is called Take a Look at My People and she has sung on albums with Pete Seeger. UMass students pay $2, all others $5. For child care info call 549-9340.

● And yes, it's that time of year again, time for Southwest Week. From 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. you can cut a rug at the Horseshoe while sucking on some Bar-BQ and sinking a soaked soul in the dunking machine. Cotton candy will be on hand and in hair, raffles, caricatures (this means ugly pictures of you) and comedy in the evening will keep you a good safe distance from your responsibilities. Don't miss Dangerous Papers with their killer horn section slip into to the shoe at 3 p.m.

● Bring your tan and your cotton candied bangs to the Hatch for the "blazing hot dance grooves" of "the hottest new band in the valley," Detour. A fine way to unwind from a boff-o day.

Have Fun!

Serrano talks about 'piss,' blood and kotex

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Correspondent

For a man at the center of national controversy, Andres Serrano seemed light-hearted and easy going during Monday night's slide presentation at the Morill Auditorium. He spoke about his work in a jovial and matter-of-fact manner.

Serrano, a former Brooklyn Museum student and sculptor turned photographer, was in the heat of a battle against the National Endowment of Arts for his 1987 work, "Piss Christ." The national attention was sparked by right-winged conservatives such as Senator Jesse Helms of North Carolina, and was fueled by the Robert Mapplethorpe exhibit.

The photograph depicts a crucifix of Christ immersed in a plexiglass tank of urine. As Serrano explains, he said he never thought the image would generate much controversy.

"I think the NEA was forced into a situation of opposing me because of the attack the AFA (American Family Association) mounted," he said. Serrano also said that his main intent in his photography is not to offend people.

Serrano said that the "Piss Christ" work was a combination of two directions of his work, fluids and Christianity, captured into one image. He surmised that the titling of the piece may be at the root of this controversy. In every one of his works, Serrano uses literal titles, because he said he wanted the audience to know the composition, and to look beyond it.

"I don't think of piss as excretion, I think of it as bodily fluid," he said. "I didn't expect the controversy at all. It was certainly news to me."

"When I first started, I used to ask myself, 'Am I going too far?' Now I ask myself, 'Have I gone far enough?'"

The "Piss Christ" commotion helped to double the price of Serrano's photography, which he said is now "$7500-$8000 for my biggest prints and $4500-$5000 for my smaller prints."

"I produce four prints of 40-by-60 prints of each piece, and ten prints of 20-by-30," Serrano said.

Serrano's earlier work focused on dead animal photographs, and he progressed towards Christian images. His photograph "Heaven and Hell" depicts a nude woman stained with beef blood on her breasts and bound at the wrists standing next to a priest.

Serrano said that the work signified the tension between good and evil, although he maintained either half could represent evil. Serrano said that he has a religious obsession.

His next set of prints include works of blood and/or milk encased in plexiglass. And his work with urine was a very

THIRD WORLD AFFAIRS

Let us give a grand salute to mediocrity

The war ended satisfactorily. Which war? The Gulf War. A merry victory it was. The Iraqis provided amiable targets, scattered across the desert like pixels on the screen of a macabre computer game. Over 200,000 human beings were vaporized, roasted, riddled with bullets and blown into fragments.

Back in the civilized world the mighty heroes of Desert Storm swaggered off their transport planes, flashing "V" signs and flaunting their desert fatigues. They had war stories to keep many a veterans bar rocking into the night. Soon it would seem like every U.S. soldier in the region had survived Scud attacks, shot an Iraqi, ducked a bullet or lived through various combinations of these scenarios. The United States glowed with pride, virtually drowning in yellow ribbons. Whitney Houston crooned for adoring soldiers while most of middle America salivated in anticipation of the greatest Fourth of July ever.

In Iraq, proud Iraqis struggled to contain their grief. An entire generation of their youth had perished, shot like turkeys, their corpses littering the tarmac of the Kuwait-Basra highway. The flames of Kuwait's wells were a funeral pyre for the dead and those yet to die, as cholera, dysentry and typhoid waited to deliver the coup-de-grace to those left in the ruins.

Those responsible for genocide salved their guilt by weeping for the Kurdish refugees, the most visible pawns on the chessboard of a New World Order. In less inspired regions of the planet (i.e. — the subdued lands of the South), murmurs of unease could be heard. The subjects of Pax Americana were living through the spring of their discontent. Caution, pragmatism and subterfuge have always been the virtues of those that pay tribute to a mighty empire.

The Americans, Europeans, Japanese and their assorted mix of loyal sheikhs, generals and business subcontractors seemed to have lost sight of the fact that the nation which they ravaged with high explosives had about as many people as the New York metropolitan area (albeit better armed, organized and educated).

What is the one word which summarizes the behavior of people who display no magnaminity in victory, no humility in power, no regard for history, no concern for a legacy of hate?

Mediocrity.

All of us have it latent within us. Some choose to display it with gleeful abandon. In Amherst, many love to wallow in it.

So enough about the tragedies of people in distant lands. Let us commemorate the spirit of the post-Gulf era by searching for the spirit of mediocrity in this quaint New England town. Yes folks, this is another tiresome diatribe. For those so inclined, turn the page.

Pratip Dastidar

Why not start with ourselves, students and visitors from the South. How about those among my fellow Indian students who describe us (needless to say, behind our backs) as ingrates and hypocrites, troublemakers and arrogant truants? Perhaps Americans should reward these avid censors of free expression with the green cards or American passports that they covet so ardently. They serve their masters well, by attempting to instill a spirit of zombie-like invisibility among foreign students on this campus.

Notice the fact that this body of "nice, decent Third World students" are singularly visible in their inability to contribute to the atmosphere of discourse on this campus. Well, they weren't too noticeable on the campuses of India's universities either.

These extraordinary personalities charge us with "washing dirty laundry in public" when we criticize our governments in print. They cringe when Indian students introduce intellectual themes at a cultural night, preferring a two-dimensional reduction of our society to curried food and chic cultural cliches.

They howl with indignation when assertions are made that it is actually possible to spend the duration of a stay in this country in an atmosphere of frank expression of all views, including those that may differ with our host society, and to maintain self-respect in the process.

In fact, many of the same Americans they seek to ingratiate prefer to discourse with those who honestly and openly disagree, rather than with sycophantic foreigners who abuse American values (needless to say) behind their backs. Add to their servility the peculiar ability of these students to live in a drone-like "apartment-to-department" cycle .

May the Order of Mediocrity be bestowed on them.

How about the "Israel can do no wrong" society, which is a cultural organization one day, and a political watchdog group the next? They outnumber those that actively support Palestinian rights by a conservative ratio of a 100 to one. Despite all their rallies, boycotts and efforts to intimidate the critics of Israeli policy, some continue to speak. A very poor job of organizational efficiency and tactical planning.

May the Order of Mediocrity be bestowed on them.

How about those inspiring UMass administrators who delight in the art of speaking to foreign students from the South in patriarchal/matriarchal tones? Ever noticed how friendly these sage intellectuals sound when they talk to European exchange students? These are the same people who react to the slightest whiff of student protest by squealing for riot police and liberally dispensing academic suspensions.

The sages of Whitmore seem to be unable to comprehend the realization that the study of intellectual thought traditionally generates a healthy dose of dissent. Let us be thankful that these colorless bureaucrats will never command armies or secret police (in the current financial climate they are lucky to command a typewriter for their triplicate forms).

May the Order of Mediocrity be bestowed on them.

How about the American conservatives in their stuffy suits, who rave about "them evil furners" and the so-called American Left? They call themselves Republicans. Unfortunately, their class background would not permit them entry into the eating clubs where true conservatives wine and dine. They would be do better to study for their GRE and GMAT exams, so as to get into Yale and Harvard and actually glimpse some real Republicans. Incidentally, why don't they ever press their suits?

May the Order of Mediocrity be bestowed on them.

Last but not least, the delightful tie-die wearing, Marx quoting, Saddam bashing, anti-war, tree hugging, grass eating, Chomsky loving and utterly ineffectual American so-called Leftists. At least they add flavor to the souffle.

May the Order of Mediocrity be bestowed on them.

Enough said.

US wins Viet-Nam war

Alexander Nguyen

As the anniversary of Viet-Nam's Independence Day, known to the West as the "fall of Saigon," comes each year (April 30), the good Americans are criticizing the bad Americans and they are all criticizing the Vietnamese. As usual, the Vietnamese have always been and shall forever remain those horrible enemy gooks.

Although the Cold War is "over," people are still using the "communism" argument to obscure the injustices committed by the United States. And, most people, Americans as well as Vietnamese-Americans, are buying into to the picture completely. The good Americans criticize the bad Americans for killing Vietnamese civilians. But the good Americans, along with the bad Americans, support wholeheartedly the democracy struggle against communist aggression.

When Veterans' Day rolls around, Americans will mourn the "58,000" soldiers who died! The over 2 million Vietnamese killed do not exist, as don't the over 1 million Cambodians, the several thousand Panamanians and the over 200,000 Iraqis.

Since the United States suffered its greatest military defeat, which it made up for several times over spilling Iraqi blood in an extraordinarily efficient sweep, it has for 16 years waged war against the people of Viet-Nam through an international political and economic noose.

The United States has, in effect, taken a liberal stance against Viet-Nam. Instead of Agent Orange and B-52 bombs, starve the people to death through embargoes. Crippling Viet-Nam through this indirect yet highly effective scheme conveniently proves that Communist Viet-Nam has failed and that the United States was right, as the case of the Sandinistas.

For Viet-Nam, the 1990s is a decade for the continuous struggle to rebuild a nation. Foreign investment is needed. Therefore Viet-Nam must open doors to all countries including its killers who have forced many doors shut. Ironically, opening doors means allowing Western capitalist re-penetration, the main source behind the U.S.-Viet-Nam War.

With Western entrepreneurs groveling outside until the United States lifts its embargo, Viet-Nam lies wait for massive exploitation from people like Mobil Oil, General Motors and the CIA. But Viet-Nam has no other choices. It has been literally starved out of the international economy.

Unless Viet-Nam can juggle and manage foreign business, the cycle will begin to repeat itself. Eventually, there will be an American Embassy, American military bases and advisors and a blitz of American media. The colonization and indoctrination of young Vietnamese minds will continue at an accelerated pace.

But first, the world must see Viet-Nam on its hands and knees, crawling to America, asking forgiveness, begging for help and extending open and welcoming arms to the "great White saviors of the little yellow people who don't value their lives like we do in the West." Only then will American robbers be allowed to run rampant throughout South East Asia looting the people in the name of American capitalism. And guess what, a gang of those will be Vietnamese-Americans.

But until the U.S. embargo is lifted, Viet-Nam continues to lose the war for independence as the United States gloats in its suffering. The plight of the boat people, caused by the U.S. embargo, has become a buzzword for human rights criticisms.

The criticisms are endless, never looking into the real causes. But this is the success of American media and the closing of the American mind. Accept everything without too much questioning because in the end all Americans benefit from such adventures around the world.

For now, the United States is enjoying its latest victory. How long will the people of Iraq starve? How much profits will Americans earn rebuilding the countries they demolished? Who has been targeted as the next capitalist venture? The United States never really loses. The people of the Third World never really forget.

Silencing the voices

Dutta/Rao

The United States of America is a very strange country indeed. Contrary to the perceptions of most Third World people, it prides itself on being the bastion of democracy, the defender of the free world, the champion of people's rule everywhere, and, if necessary, an aggressor for peace. This veneer of so-called civilized discourse has so permeated the minds of people, that there are very few left who actually speak their minds.

However, there are some newspapers, invariably right-wing, that deserve the salute of the Third World community because they try to speak what they believe in — not in a roundabout way, plotting and scheming, but in a direct and straightforward fashion.

Meanwhile we have the wolves in sheep's clothing who plot and scheme. They loudly acclaim their undying devotion to the causes of diversity, freedom of the press and all the noble things that make them feel civilized. When they speak, the sweetness of their voices and their dulcet tones would make a cuckoo proud.

When they hear some voices of dissent from among themselves, they smile and marvel at the discourse of debate. When they hear some voices of dissent from communities from the outside, they pat themselves on the back and congratulate themselves on having a society which encourages diversity of opinion and is a melting pot of different cultures and communities.

But then, something goes terribly wrong when these outside voices rock the boat too much, when they create too much consternation, when they rip off the facade, when they call the bluff, when they test the true commitment to diversity.

It is clear to them that these voices must be silenced. But how? A direct, blatant move to do so is against all the values that they have been taught from their childhood to avoid. It shatters the veneer of proclaimed diversity.

It exposes them for what they really are, which they do not have the honesty to admit. No, they will invent convoluted charades, imaginary threats, twisted plots and concocted barriers to suppress these voices.

The reasons and justifications they give are immaterial. They are the prototypes of liberal attitudes prevailing in this country.

Now why do these voices insist on saying unpopular things? Why do they seem to so ungratefully and one-sidedly bash the North? Do they see any point at all in their diatribes?

Why have they been saying things like democracy maybe be bad, that the U.S. Left has no courage, that the United States intervened in World War II largely to maintain the balance of power in Europe, that most of what Noam Chomsky says is doublespeak to people from the Third World?

These voices are proud and honest, and refuse to be bought. Unlike many of the other voices in their communities, these are uncompromised and uncompromising. They make no pretenses and say no lies. They mirror the fundamental conflict between the North and the Third World. They believe in direct and open discourse, and confrontation if necessary.

They believe that maybe frank discussion between people of different countries actually encourages people to think and make the world a better place to live in. Through their angry discourse they actually believe that people can develop greater respect for one another, and negotiate over issues if they have to.

But again, maybe not. Maybe knowledge just gives people the power to learn how to exploit more.

Maybe a window dressing of political and cultural views through token handpicked people is indeed a good punishment for people who do not even have the foresight to read dissenting views. Who is to stop them if they want to be petty?

simple progression for him.

"I had used milk and blood, so I figured I'd add to my repetoire," he said.

Besides the Crucifix, Serrano also captured the word "God," an image of Satan, a statue of the pope and classical statues such as "The Thinker" and "Piss Discus" trapped in urine. When asked why Serrano uses the phrase "piss" instead of urine, he replied, "Piss is a more casual term than urine."

Later in his presentation, Serrano enthralled the crowd with pictures of his own ejaculations. Asked how he took the picture, he answered, "I held the release button in one hand, and my organ in the other."

The next logical progression for Serrano was imagery repesenting female reproduction. Naturally, he photographed the "Red River Series," which constituted pictures of bloody Kotex maxipads. More recently, Serrano worked with frozen sperm and blood.

Serrano's latest work includes the "Nomad series," portraits of homeless people shot in the New York subway system, and the "Klan series," portraits of fully robed Klansmen.

"I hope the Vatican collects my work someday," Serrano told a standing room only crowd. In the direction that his photography has taken, there's no big chance of that.

Metal band needs singer

As a wee little one, I would stand in front of the mirror, hair brush in hand, and croon along with Ozzy Osbourne, dreaming of the day when I too could be honored with the accomplishment of biting a live bat's head off.

If you too dream of leading a loud, raucous, headbanging group with your vocal talents, here's your chance. Judgement Day, a local thrash metal group, is in search of a lead singer. The prospective candidate must have a strong voice, experience, their own transportation and must be reliable.

The group has played in the local area for two years with a few gigs at Katina's in Hadley as well as some gigs in Greenfield. They play strictly original material and are curently recording their second demo tape. They have their own rehearsal and recording equipment and practice space.

If you are interested contact Dana or Karen at 256-1369 or write to: Judgement Day, P.O. Box 806, Belchertown, MA 01007.

Typhoon rages through Bangladesh

By HASAN SAEED
Associated Press Writer

DHAKA, Bangladesh — A typhoon slammed into Bangladesh's southeastern coast yesterday with 145 m.p.h. winds and waves up to 20 feet, killing hundreds of people and destroying tens of thousands of homes.

The storm roared in from more than seven hours, uprooting trees and ripping apart telephone and power lines, said a Relief Ministry official.

Contact with the stricken region was severed, and the only source of information on the disaster came by radio communications with the Red Crescent, the Muslim equivalent of the Red Cross.

An official at the Dhaka office of the Red Crescent said he knew of 246 deaths. "Thousands of people are injured and crops and houses over a 300-mile radius are damaged," he said. He spoke on condition of anonymity.

Other officials said details on the total number of deaths would be available only after regular communication links were restored.

The airport at Chittagong, Bangladesh's second largest city after Dhaka, was under three feet of sea water. A photographer who flew over it in an army helicopter said 5,000 people were huddled on the rooftops of airport buildings.

The runway at nearby Cox's Bazar, a seaside resort, also was under water, further hampering relief efforts.

Prime Minister Khaleda Zia flew by helicopter to survey the disaster.

Before the storm hit, about 3 million people were evacuated from an area where 7 million people live in 2,000 villages.

About 80 percent of the mud and straw huts in the region were blown away, said the Relief Ministry official.

"The deaths would have been on a much larger scale" if the residents had not been evacuated, the official said.

He said the typhoon whipped up waves that reached 20 feet and many offshore islands were under 12 feet of water. The storm subsided around dawn and dissipated.

The Relief Ministry official said the worst affected areas were the offshore islands of Bhola, Hatiya, Sandwip, Kutubdia, Moheshkhali and the mainland districts of Patuakhali, Chittagong, Cox's Bazaar, Feni and Satkhira.

The area describes an arc that is 125 miles from Dhaka.

The previous worst typhoon to hit Bangladesh was in 1970. It claimed nearly 500,000 lives when it roared into the coast with 138 m.p.h. winds.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Careful attention to detail reduces the chance of making costly errors. Work done at home will suffer fewer interruptions than that done in the office. Make certain to meet all your deadlines.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Stay in the background until ready to make a major announcement. It is time to improve communication between yourself and difficult associates. A new ally helps you decide when to make your move.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Take the time you need to do a great job even if a friend or co-worker tries to rush you. Your thoroughness will pay off. Put a new plan on the back burner.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Listen to your mate's advice if you want your savings to grow faster. Keep long-term objectives in mind when considering your employment situation. Balance logic with intuitive hunches.

LEO (July 23-Aug 22): Your encouragement means a lot to someone down in the dumps. Show how much you care. A thoughtless remark could cause hurt feelings. A peaceful home atmosphere is welcome after an emotional showdown.

VIRGO (Aug 23-Sept 22): The emphasis today is on returning items you have borrowed. Be careful not to lend something that is not yours to give. Your financial situation is about to improve. You feel romantic again.

SCORPIO (Oct 23-Nov 21): Talk with experts before signing an agreement. You could have some doubts about an important personal relationship. Try to resolve them before making a further commitment. Compromise promotes harmony.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov 22-Dec 21): A prominent person will respond best to a straightforward approach. A career move could cause a family upheaval. Soothe loved ones by sharing confidences and discussing alternatives.

CAPRICORN (Dec 22-Jan 19): A friendship enters the big time. You find the right showcase for your unique talents. VIPs are impressed. The business contacts you cultivate today could bring wonderful benefits.

AQUARIUS (Jan 20-Feb 18): Be willing to commute out of town. You will benefit greatly form developing long-distance contacts. Take your time when considering changes in your domestic arrangements.

PISCES (Feb 19-March 20): Greater teamwork is possible if you take the initiative. A banker or financial partner has good tidings to share. Home shopping is great as long as you do not go overboard.

Defense, experience seen as keys for Bruins to advance

By HOWARD ULMAN
Associated Press

BOSTON - The Boston Bruins have plenty of playoff experience, but not much against a team as explosive as the Pittsburg Penguins.

To get to the Stanley Cup finals for the third time in four years, the Bruins need to pay special attention to scorers like Mario Lemieux, Mike Recchi, Kevin Stevens and Jaromir Jagr.

The job begins Wednesday night when the Penguins, in the third round for the first time in franchise history, visit the Bruins in the opener of the best-of-seven Wales conference finals.

"Obviously, playoff experience helps in certain situations," Bruins defenseman Garry Galley said Tuesday, "but when you get to this point, your team is just going all out. I don't think you're worrying about experience so much as the effort you bring into the rink."

Being in the payoffs for the 24th straight season, an NHL record, won't replace aggressive checking as the primary weapon for stopping the Penguins, whose 342 goals were just two less than league leader Calgary. The Bruins had 299 goals.

"[Pittsburg coach] Bob Johnson has them playing some pretty good defense too," Boston coach Mike Milbury said, "but there's no question their strength is their creative offensive abilities, and they have plenty of people who can give you fits."

Recchi and Stevens each had 40 goals in the regular season, and Lemieux had 19 goals and 26 assists in 26 games. They are three of the top eight playoff scorers. Recccchi leads the league with six goals and 15 assists in 12 games.

Milbury said he doesn't like to assign one of his players as a shadow to guard the other team's top offensive threat, but he may do that on occasion against Lemieux.

Goalie Andy Moog, the star of Boston's seven-game series against Montreal that ended Monday night, should help stop the Penguins. The Bruins probably would have lost to Montreal were it not for Moog, Milbury said.

The Boston Garden rink, nine feet shorter and two feet narrower than Pittsburg's Civic Arena, also could be an asset.

"It might take away from our the skating part of our game," Pittsburg forward Ron Francis said. "But, in another respect, it might help us with the style we play, the quick transition, a lot of lane changes and quick reaction."

The Bruins beat Hartford, a far less potent team than Pittsburg, in six games in the first round, then advanced over the Montreal Canadiens. Each team had just 18 goals in the series.

But Milbury figures there's no need to change his game plan - sustained checking and pressing the attack with the lead - against the high-powered Penguins.

American Express Announces A Great New Travel Program.

Now students can get the Card and get 3 roundtrips on Continental Airlines, for only $129 or $189 each.

There's only one way to cover a lot of territory without spending a lot of money. And that's by getting the American Express® Card. It's the only card that offers an exciting new travel program exclusively for students—including three roundtrip certificates on Continental Airlines.

Just look at the map and pick the place you'd like to visit. If it's on your side of the Mississippi River, you can use a certificate to fly for only $129 roundtrip. Or, you can cross the Mississippi for $189 roundtrip.

You have your pick of more than 150 cities in the 48 contiguous states. And you can fly almost anytime—because there are no blackout dates. But you must make your reservations within 14 days of the day you leave. And the maximum stay is 7 days/6 nights and must include a Saturday night.

In addition to this great travel program, you'll also enjoy all the benefits of Cardmembership as well as other exclusive student privileges. They include a quarterly magazine filled with informative articles on summer jobs, careers, campus life. Plus valuable discounts from leading retailers.

But remember, there's only one way to get all this—and that's by getting the American Express Card. Just call us (have your bank address and account number on hand). What's more, with our special student offer, it's easier to get the Card now while you're still in school than it may ever be again.

So get the Card. And get ready to cover new territory on either side of our Great Continental Divide.

are only batting .244 against them. The Friars are batting .268 as a team and are averaging 3.5 runs a game.

The UMass statistics are significantly more impressive. The Minutewomen are batting an incredible .324 as a team. Marean, Holly Aprile and Rachel Lawson lead the way, since all are hitting at a .400 or better clip. Peggy Bush, Jen Miller, Tiffany Hodson and Cherie DellAnno are all batting above .300. The team is averaging 5.7 runs a game.

On the mound few tandems have been better than Aprile and Claffey. They have a combined ERA of 1.30 and opponents are batting a miserable .173 against them. She is 13-6 on the season with a 1.37 ERA. Her only loss since April 11th was a 14 inning, 3-2 loss to Connecticut. Aprile is also batting .416 on the season.

Gorillas pound on Eagles, 21-4

By ADRIEN MATT
Collegian Staff

Well, it never lacked aggressive play.

Between illegal body checks and slashing penalties, the University of Massachusetts lacrosse team brutally beat Boston College yesterday on The Hill 21-4.

But, boy, did they exhibit some nice play. UMass (9-2) made clean passes and sharp cuts to the cage — all this despite the mud and rain.

"Wasn't that fun?" asked UMass assistant coach Tom Carmean. "We saw what we hoped for today."

"I think the kids are realizing they're not just a good team, they're a great team," said UMass head coach Ted Garber. Although BC (6-8) was 15 minutes late in starting the game because the bus got lost, no amount of warming up would have prepared the Eagles for the barrage of shots they would endure for the following 60 minutes.

Once again Mark Millon had a hand in initiating the scoring, feeding to Rick Senatore to score the first goal of the game. Millon fed the stick of Jim McAleavey, 2-0. Millon scored unassisted. Jim Kushner assited Mario Guaglianone to the net. Millon netted a feed from McAleavey and McAleavey scored from a Guaglianone feed to end the first quarter at 6-0.

"It's hard to stop a team like UMass when they get going like they did in the first quarter," said BC head coach Ed Moy. "They're much better than I expected.

Rob Falvey had three goals for the day, a team-high to be tied with McAleavey who also contributed a total of three assists. Millon had a team-high four assists and two goals, the first game in which he contributed more assists than netted goals. Kushner and Guaglianone each had two goals and one assist and Chris Nentwich netted two goals.

Mike Cain scored unassisted in the second quarter followed by BC's first goal of the game by Mark Gaffney, his only goal of the game. Ed O'Callaghan assisted Falvey for UMass' 10th goal of the game and Cain fed to Frank Pepe to end the half at 11-1.

By this time, Garber has gone deep into the UMass bench and the team was having fun, cheering on teammates when a shot was wide or hit the pipe.

Nentwich took a feed from Bill Begien for the 16th goal then Falvey scored again unassisted. BC's Mark Wolfington responded with less than two minutes remaining in the third quarter and finished the scoring for that period at 17-2.

UMass' Don Avena scored from a Mike Orton assist, soon answered by unassisted Matt DelNegro and Gary Larkin goals, interruped by a Pete Cuda-Joe Cahill combination. Avena assited Cahill for the 20th UMass goal of the game, capped by a Cahill feed to defenseman Tom Brown, the first of the senior's career.

"It was good to have a big win, to keep the momentum going from Rutgers," said defenseman Brad Fitts. He and Jim Panetta along with Adam Kohart and Dave Ray saw defensive and faceoff time on the field.

"I think we're about ready to do some serious damage to Syracuse," Carmean said.

Jim Kushner, here seen against Rutgers, helped the Massachusetts Gorillas (9-2) crush Boston College yesterday, 21-4. Kushner had two goals and one assist against the Eagles.

Softball travels to meet Friars

By DAN WETZEL
Collegian Staff

How hot is the University of Massachusetts softball team?

They simply couldn't be much hotter.

The Minutewomen are 29-10 overall and have won 26 of their last 29 games. Connecticut is the only team that they have lost to since Spring Break.

UMass players have once again dominated the Atlantic 10 weekly honors. Sophmore Darlene Claffey was named, for the second consecutive week, A-10 pitcher of the week. Claffey earned five victories, as well as her first save of the year, raising her season mark to 16-4. She allowed just three earned runs in 34 innings, lowering her ERA to 1.24. Claffey is currently in a nine game winning streak and has taken 15 of her last 16 decisions.

Senior Barbara Marean was named Co-Atlantic 10 Player of the week, along with Cathy Philips of Saint Joseph's. Marean batted .500 last week collecting 12 hits, and knocking in nine runs. She had four multi-hit games on the week and is now batting a conference leading .470. The shortstop has five home runs and 30 RBI on the season.

Today the Minutewomen travel for a game at Providence College. Providence is only 21-22-1 on the season and have struggled to play .500 ball all season.

Last weekend the Friars dropped a doubleheader to Brown, 6-1 and 11-5. After a 5-1 start, they have played mediocre softball, dropping six of their last eight.

The PC pitching staff has a very respectable ERA of 2.76 and opponents

The race for the Cup at the halfway point

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

The National Hockey League has historically taken a lot of heat for allowing 16 of it's 21 teams into the Stanley Cup Playoffs. "Why let in all those mediocre teams?" asked the critics. "It's a waste of time to let in teams with losing records — they just get eliminated in the first round, anyway."

Don't tell the Minnesota North Stars. All season long, the North Stars were the NHL's version of Ice Capades, a just plain bad team that only made the playoffs because the Toronto Maple Leafs were even worse. They had the worst regular-season mark of any playoff team.

Two shocking series wins later, the North Stars are four more wins away from their second-ever Stanley Cup Final appearance. Meanwhile, both Chicago and St. Louis, two teams who were supposed to contend for the Cup, are sitting at home while the North Stars continue their dance with destiny.

That's the magic of the Stanley Cup Playoffs. All the regular-season accomplishments in the world can't win playoff games. Only smart, consistent, disciplined hockey and clutch goaltending can do that.

Look at the Black Hawks. They gooned their way to the Norris Division title with 101 points, but that didn't mean jack when the North Stars came to town. Like everyone else who awaited a Black Hawks - Blues series (including me), they looked past Minnesota. They lost their focus and now they're swinging Hogans and Pings on the golf links instead of Sherwoods and Kohos on the ice.

Which leads to another vital ingredient to a great playoff team — momentum. All the North Stars needed was a little confidence to get them going, and St. Louis found that out the hard way. They, too, looked past their poor cousins from the Norris, and suffered for it. I wonder if the Blues and Black Hawks play on the same golf course.

Playoff experience is another important aspect of a potential Stanley Cup Champion. Look at the Edmonton Oilers. They were a mediocre team all season long, placing third in the Smythe Division. Nevertheless, most of the Oilers have not only been to the playoffs, but won championships. They know what it takes to win big games under playoff pressure. Goodbye, Calgary Flames; asta la vista, Los Angeles Kings.

Boston does have several factors working for them, though. They have a hot goaltender in Moog, who was simply amazing against Montreal. They have just as much playoff experience as Edmonton, great team leaders like Neely and Ray (God on skates) Bourque, and tons of momentum from beating Montreal. They haven't looked past any of their opponents and have stayed patient, for the most part. I think the Bruins' chances to win the Cup, as good as they were before, are excellent. And the revenge factor can't be overlooked if they face the hated Oilers (overtime, anyone?).

The Penguins remind me of St. Louis as far as team style goes. They can ring up the goals as fast as anyone in the league and they can play respectable defense. Mario Lemieux and Ron Francis (Why did the Whalers deal him?) are two money players the Pens can count on in the clutch. But, the Pens lack playoff experience and consistancy between the pipes. The Bruins should beat them.

But what else could happen in this year of playoff surprises? A Stanley Cup parade in Bloomington, Minnesota would be poetic. While I still think the Bruins will win it all, if the North Stars have made it this far, why not all the way?

Commentary

And what of the Boston Bruins, you ask? Boston fans have to be happy that the Bruins finally exorcised one of the team's major demons, beating Montreal in the seventh game of the Adams Division finals. They had never done that until Dave Christian, Cam Neely and Andy Moog led the way to a 2-1 win Monday night.

Do the Bruins meet the criteria to win the Stanley Cup? Consistancy has been a question — the B's could've polished off both Montreal and Hartford sooner than they did, and it wasn't because of any heated divisional rivalry that they didn't. They just didn't play up to par on some occasions.

Kurdish refugees start long trek home to Iraq

The Associated Press

AP photo

An elderly Kurdishman carries his blanket past a British Royal Marine Commando as he heads for a British truck to take him to the Zakho refugee camp Tuesday.

NEAR IRAQ'S BORDER WITH TURKEY — Pickup trucks, trailers hauled by farm tractors and buses with broken windshields are winding down steep mountain roads, bringing thousands of Kurdish refugees one step closer to home.

The arrival of the first ramshackle caravans in the Iraqi town of Zakho marked the official start of a crucial stage in the rescue of Kurdish refugees — getting them out of the mountains.

About 800,000 Kurds fled to the hills along the Iraq-Turkish border from Saddam Hussein's crackdown on their rebellion more than a month ago.

The return of the first refugees follows efforts by U.S. and other allied officers to persuade the Kurds they would be protected — and a tentative peace agreement reached in Baghdad between Saddam and Kurdish leaders.

U.S. Marines want the refugees out of the mountains by June 1, when the creeks run dry. To meet that goal, about 25,000 people will have to descend each day.

By dusk Tuesday, more than 7,500 Kurds had left their squalid hillside refugee camps to come into the valley.

"They're going home," said U.S. Army Sgt. Paul Harrison, the supervisor of a checkpoint leading into Zakho through which all the Kurdish vehicles pass.

"Last night, we had lights, all the way from this point up the mountain. It was a beautiful sight," he said.

At one point in the day, he said, thousands of people an hour were moving through the checkpoint.

Truckloads of children, their hair matted and buzzing with flies, trundled by. Mothers stared out of the back, some clutching babies to their breasts.

Buses pulled broken-down compact cars, which in turn yanked Volkswagens with flat tires.

"It's a God-awful parade," said one U.S. Army lieutenant, surveying the Kurds' return. "They sped out. Now they're limping back."

Most of the Kurds passed by the refugee camp of 1,200 tents run by the allies and pitched by U.S. troops on a field of wild wheat and blood-red poppies just outside Zakho.

They decided instead to return home, a decision allied commanders hope many more Kurds will make.

"If they don't want to stay here, that's fine with us," said Gordon Murchie, a spokesman for the State Department's Agency for International Development, which is assisting the allied forces.

"The more people who go home, the better," Murchie said.

Many were going to homes in a swath of allied-protected territory south of the Turkish border. But many other Kurds have little choice about leaving the area. Their homes are in territory held by the Iraqi army. Returning there, they say, would mean punishment and possibly death.

"If I leave the American zone, Saddam Hussein will kill me," said Hussein Abdul Karim, a 21-year-old former soldier in the Iraqi army who hails from Dohuk, a city under the Iraqi army's control.

To help encourage people like Karim to return home, the allies plan to expand the security zone to include places like Dohuk, a provincial capital south of Zakho.

The Kurds think it's a good idea but worry about what happens when "Hajji Bush," their respectful nickname for the president, decides to withdraw his troops.

ANC threatens to cut off negotiations with gov't

Chris Hani

The African National Congress will cut off negotiations with the South African government on May 9 unless the various security forces the ANC claims are inciting "black on black" violence are punished, ANC official Chris Hani said last night.

More than 300 people squeezed into a room in the Campus Center while some 200 watched on two television monitors outside as Hani, chief of staff of the ANC's military wing and a member of the political bureau of the South African Communist Party, accused the government of doing nothing to stop the riots.

He demanded that President F.W. de Klerk dismiss the ministers of defense and the police as well as any other security officials believed to be guilty of inciting violence and asked the Askaris and other right-wing organizations used against the black liberation movement be disbanded.

"By May 9, if these demands are not met, we are going to pull out of the talks," said Hani, who spoke for more than 90 minutes.

He said the police have been arresting "so-called terrorists" who are fighting for the black liberation movement, but seem to be "unable" to arrest those who are attacking the ANC.

"Pretoria stood by watching the violence," he said. "We are not suprised, for the South African police is a racist police force. For years it has been used to emasculate our cause."

Hani defended those blacks involved in the violence, saying ongoing poverty and repression by the government's apartheid system leaves them no other outlet for their anger. Also, he said, the government is trying to divide the ANC and the communist party and incite ill will between the two.

Hani encouraged the "stepping up" of defense units to protect the black community from right-wing vigilante groups, like Inkatha.

Despite the ANC's problems with the government, Hani said de Klerk's warning to the white population Tuesday that unless concessions are made, a civil war could erupt, is a sign that negotiations can still succeed.

"There is still hope that the regime will listen," he said.

Hani also encouraged the audience to resist any attempts by President Bush to end the economic sanctions imposed on South Africa by the United States.

"Sanctions were imposed on South Africa so that South Africa could become democratic," he said. "It is the victims of apartheid, those who have been in prison, those who are banished and those who are in exile, who should

NASA station to cost $34 billion more

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The cost of building a space station and operating it in the next century will exceed NASA's estimate by at least 40 percent, or $34 billion, and even then may not satisfy research requirements, the government's chief auditor said yesterday.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration has said the station could be built and ready for permanent occupancy in 1999 for $30 billion and that it could be operated through the year 2027 for and additional $54 billion.

"We believe the $30 billion estimate is an inappropriate figure to use," Comptroller General Charles A. Bowsher said in testimony prepared for a congressional subcommittee.

"What we actually have is at least a $118 billion program — about $40 billion to achieve permanent occupancy and about $78 billion to keep the station operational between 2000 and 2027," said Bowshner, who heads the General Accounting Office.

NASA plans to keep the station operating for 30 years, beginning with periodic astronaut visits in 1997.

The testimony to the House Government Operations subcommittee on government activities and transportation added to the criticism heaped in recent months on the space station project.

Subcommittee Chairwoman Barbara Boxer (D-Calif.) said the space station's cost had been "vastly underreported to the Congress" and that her panel estimates it will really total $180 billion.

"I believe that the $30 billion NASA estimate will get us a garage in space with nothing in it and nothing happening around it," Boxer said in a statement.

The station, to be named Freedom, was proposed in 1984 by President Reagan and was to have eight potential uses. But escalating costs and a series of redesigns resulted recently in a scaled-back version that would permit only microactivity and life science research.

Those are "two scientific endeavors that many scientists believe are incompatible and are not best conducted on the same station," Bowsher said.

In addition, he said, the unreliability of the space shuttle must be taken into account because it is to be the only means of launching and servicing the station. NASA also must consider risks posed by orbital debris and the lack of an emergency crew rescue vehicle, he said.

He said NASA's construction estimate understates the real cost by $10 billion. It does not include costs of developing the crew lifeboat, installing a centrifuge, conducting science projects and the $7.5 billion required for 20 shuttle flights to assemble and occupy the station by 1999, the GAD chief said.

Bowsher said NASA's projected $54 billion operating cost is low by $24 billion because it fails to include shuttle flight costs, salaries of ground-based personnel,

Students to get a chance to discuss Arab-Israeli conflict

By PAMELA McCARTHY
Collegian Staff

Experts and professors have spoken widely on the Arab-Israeli conflict, but tonight students will have a chance to voice their opinions at a 7 o'clock forum in the Earthfoods cafeteria in the Student Union.

The forum, sponsored by a student group that calls itself "Direct Expression," will be operated by students for students, said Ziad Abillama, one of the forum's organizers.

"We're trying to get people to calm down," Abillama said. "We are trying to get people to listen to each other, to voice their frustration, but to take each other seriously. We are hoping people will voice concerns without being afraid that they will be silenced."

Abillama said because students would participate, the forum would be more active than an ordinary lecture.

"We are hoping diverse positions will be addressed," he said. "We're just trying to provide a place for people to discuss, rather than being a receiver."

Nathan Krystall, another organizer, said the forum would also give people an opportunity to hear a wide variety of opinions on a the controversial topic.

"The agenda will be determined by the people there," he said. "It's a chance for people who have been thinking about these issues and who feel isolated to get together and see what people are saying."

DAY AT THE BOOK MILL — Rosa Jacobson-Friedman, age 3 and a half, of Amherst, watches the waterfall at the Montague Book Mill last Saturday with her grandfather, Lou Jacobson, visiting from New Jersey.

Abillama said the group had a similar forum at Amherst College but had problems because people "personalized" the issues.

"We had people give short presentations and we opened the floor for questions [but] people were talking about themselves in regard to the conflict," he said.

Krystall said: "People tried to personalize politics."

The organizers said attendance will determine the success of the event. "We're hoping as many people will attend as possible," Krystall said.

Bike path to connect Amherst and Northampton

By DAVID MASSEY
Collegian Staff

The construction of a bicycle lane connecting Amherst and Northampton is expected to start next fall and be finished next spring, according to spokespersons from the state Department of Environmental Management.

The 9.2-mile-long and 8-foot-wide bike path will be "totally separate from the road" including a separate bridge over the Connecticut River, said Tom Dyer, project manager and an employee of the DEM.

Terry Blunt, also from the DEM, said the new path will help save energy by encouraging drivers to use bikes instead of cars, increase traffic safety by providing cyclists an alternative to 'dangerous' Route 9, and provide many new construction jobs during tough economic times.

"Anything that helps to reduce the number of cars on Route 9 is a considerable advantage," Blunt said. Pedestrians also may use the path, he said.

Currently, the project is being put out to bid, meaning that the Department of Public Works is advertising the project and will choose a construction company to take on the project from the applications it receives.

"Anything that helps to reduce the number of cars on Route 9 is a considerable advantage."

—Terry Blunt, state Department of Environmental Management employee.

David Mozer, director of the International Bicycle Fund, an organization which promotes bike transportation, said he was unaware of the project but said that bike paths offer people a cheaper form of transportation and "provide people with the opportunity to build exercise into their daily routine."

"Evidence shows if you make bicycling convenient enough, people will start to use more non-motorized transportation," Mozer said. He also listed many environmental and economic benefits of promoting cycling through bike path construction.

Every day, about 140 million cars in America travel almost 4 billion miles and consume 200 million gallons of gas, severely affecting the environment, according to Department of Transportation statistics cited by the Earthworks Group, a national environmental organization based in Berkeley, Calif.

As the gasoline is burned, about four billion pounds of carbon dioxide are released into the atmosphere every day, contributing to global warming and other environmental problems, according to scientists cited by Earthworks.

The Earthworks Group also reports that if 1 percent of the car owners in America left their car at home one day a week, the nation would save an estimated 42 million gallons of gas a year.

This action would prevent an estimated 840 million pounds of dangerous carbon dioxide from entering our atmosphere, the group said.

Author Marcia D. Lowe views bicycles as a vehicle for a small planet in her article titled "Cycling into the Future," which appeared in the book, "State of the World 1990."

"For every person who makes a trip by bicycle instead of by car there is less pollution, less fuel used, and less space taken on the road," Lowe wrote.

Bicycles are a practical alternative to cars, which create congestion, traffic jams, and the byproducts of gas combustion: air pollution, acid rain, and global climate change, she wrote.

New York cycling activist Charles Komanoff wrote that bicycling is "a living, breathing alternative to the city's domination by motor vehicles. There is magic in blending with traffic, feeling the wind in one's face, the sheer fact of traversing the city under one's own power."

In the United States, the most bicycle-friendly communities are two university towns in California: Davis and Palo Alto, Lowe wrote.

In Davis, there are 48 kilometers of bike

Crane to be gone by Friday

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

The giant crane stationed outside the northeast entrance to the Campus Center is part of a $320,000 project to replace the building's 22-year-old air conditioning system, said Barry Simon, the campus energy manager.

The crane is being used to replace the old cooling tower with the new one and should be gone by Friday, said Forrest Davies, director of auxiliary services.

The entire project should be finished by June, Simon said. It is financed by Northeast Utilities, which has given $185,000 and is installing the system, and the University of Massachusetts with $135,000, he said.

The new system will be computerized and features a built-in temperature control system, Simon said.

"We're replacing pumps and valves as well as the cooling tower which will make the system much more efficent," Simon said. "Other parts of the school already have this same type of system. The Campus Center is one of the last places to get it."

The system will have increased cooling capacity but will save energy by eliminating leaks and improving equipment, Simon said.

"The old tower was in such bad shape," said Ashote Ganguli, director of Auxilary Services. "It was leaking profusely and it was totally inefficent."

Massachusetts 'out of business'

The Associated Press

BOSTON — The Bay State dropped from 48th place to 50th place in Financial World's second annual evaluation of states' fiscal management.

The national business magazine, which ranked Utah as the best-managed state, said there was no competition for last place.

"If Massachusetts were a business, it would be out of business," the Financial World article declared.

"The state barely hits the ball in the ballpark with its revenue and expenditure estimates. It has fallen into the bad habit of appropriating large sums of money after the budget is supposedly set."

The magazine's assessment of the Bay State:

"Big revenue estimating problems: expenditure-revenue imbalance over several years; big unfunded pension liability; bad habit of substantial appropriations; rolling over Medicaid bills, no performance measurements in budget process, little long-range planning."

Alix deSeife, deputy press secretary to Gov. Weld, said the evaluation isn't surprising.

"Would you expect us to be higher than last when we've only had four months to dig out of a hole that took [former governor] Michael Dukakis eight years to dig?" deSeife said.

Alan Macdonald, executive director of the Massachusetts Business Roundtable, said the evaluation "hurts the confidence of those who may invest in our commonwealth through bond offerings, also in the ability of Massachusetts to attract and retain businesses in an environment that is a negative one in terms of how public monies are handled."

lanes for 161 kilometers of streets and 32 kilometers of separate bike paths. As a result, 25 percent of the total trips made in this community are by bicycle, Lowe wrote.

The town of Palo Alto has spent millions to maintain smooth roads and bike paths, secure bike parking, provide bicycling incentives, and build 65 kilometers of bikeways.

Ellen Fletcher, a member of the Palo Alto Council and a national cycling advocate said: "All you have to do is make it easier to ride a bike than drive a car. People will take it from there."

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

A campus-wide survey of elevators

I was leaving an office on the sixth floor of Herter Hall when I saw it happen. The unsuspecting victim cried out in fear, as the doors closed on her. Once they hit her, they reopened and closed again on her. Opening and closing, the elevator assaulted the woman as if the doors were the powerful jaws of a giant mouth, chewing on a snack. By the time she successfully escaped the elevator, the startled student was none the worse for wear, but awfully shaken up.

The two Herter elevators have often been compared to wild horses. They can be dangerous if the rider can't control them. They can smell fear. However, they are easily tamed and with the reins in your firm grasp, you control the most responsive elevators on Campus. You must first learn the rhythm of the doors. Then you must memorize when indicator lights don't work. However, Herter's Otises are the only elevators on campus that will immediately close when you push the 'Close' button.

Mark B. Adler

The twins in Herter are related to the four Campus Center elevators who share their cousins' animosity towards their clients. Sometimes the bell outside rings when the elevator arrives, sometimes it doesn't. The cars have been known to go on a sit-down strike from time to time, refusing to close their doors and move to the desired floor. Using the 'Close' button only annoys them and it provokes them to wait longer. Don't ever provoke elevators. They are our friends.

The Campus Center doesn't have stairs above the third floor. There are emergency fire stairs which only permit the traveller to exit the building, not to move from floor to floor. You must take one of the elevators, the four Horsemen of the Apocalypse. When a floor is not in use, the hotel desk 'turns off' the floor, preventing the elevator from stopping there. For a brief time I had the key to the service elevator and I had free rein of the building.

The Tower Library has two express elevators and three locals, but like a librarian or a police officer, they are never around when you need them. If your study carrel is on the 13th floor (like mine) then you can either take the long ride on the frequently-stopping local elevator or take the express to the 16th floor and walk down the stairs. These express elevators are notorious for a high g-force. The Library's stairs are worth the walk if only to see the beautiful murals generated through Mass Transformation.

Grad Tower has three huge elevator cars. Despite their size I still get claustrophobic in them. I think that fear is connected to my three unhappy semesters in the Math department. I used to take the elevator to the 15th floor just to discover that my professor was out for the day or that I flunked another exam.

The elevators in the dorms are the most bizarre machines on campus, with the possible exception of the new telephones. The Southwest towers have express elevators which still take forever to transport the eager student to their floor. In my Orchard Hill dorm, it is quicker to walk to the 7th floor than to ride the reluctant elevator.

A favorite recreation of mine involves running up the stairs ahead of the elevator pushing the call buttons on the next floor, then waiting for the car to arrive. When the door finally opens I wave to the people and run up to the next floor. Fun for hours. Never a dull moment.

Letter from Pike

On behalf of the entire brotherhood of the Pi Kappa Alpha Fraternity, I would like to take this opportunity to apologize to Jeanne Hagarty for the unfortunate incident which occurred on Thursday evening, April 25.

[Hagarty, in a letter to The Collegian said she was harassed as she walked by their house April 25. She said in addition to 'howling and barking,' some fraternity brothers called out obscenities such as 'pussy.'

It is unfortunate that such an isolated incident could tarnish the solid reputation of the fraternity and the Greek area at large. The Greek area tends to be an easy target for stereotyping. All Pikes do not find it acceptable to scream obscenities at or harrass women.

We are proud of the rich traditions and numerous accomplishments achieved by the brothers of Pi Kappa Alpha. Seldom do these positive aspects of Greek life receive coverage in the Collegian, which unfortunately tends to emphasize the few negative incidents.

This semester the brotherhood has worked diligently in the area of philanthropy. On April 6, 1991, Pi Kappa Alpha raised the most money in the team category for the Newman Center's annual Run for Runaways. Furthermore, Pike sponsored a book drive for the Red Cross in which we exceeded their expected goal for blood donations.

Pi Kappa Alpha also stresses academic excellence. This semester, in collaboration with the Sigma Delta Tau sorority, we held a formal gathering with the faculty of the five-college area.

The brotherhood would again like to apologize to Jeanne Hagarty for the aforementioned incident. Pi Kappa Alpha is committed to excellence in all aspects of collegiate life, and we condemn such unfortunate occurrences which detract from our committment.

Trustee McQuilken raps coverage

I would like to encourage The Collegian to immediately remove Mr. Alex Dering from his Student Government beat. Though I realize that Mr. Dering is a newcomer to this responsibility, I believe I have perhaps never seen a more blatant violation of journalistic ethics than Mr. Dering's one-sided and editorialized story on the SGA "lawsuit" this past Friday (SGA votes to seek legal counsel). The unethical nature of this story is perhaps rivaled only by Mr. Dering's article this past semester about then-SGA Treasurer Karen Talbot's supposed impeachment. Mr. Dering, it is not difficult for a reporter to talk only to his close friends and print what they have to say. It is far more difficult, and in fact it is your ethical responsibility as a self-purported journalist, to present both sides of every story, regardless of where your alliances happen to fall. You have done a great disservice to a great college newspaper, and I expect that they will deal with you accordingly.

About that lawsuit anyway. Talk about anal-retentiveness. These two jokers who call themselves student leaders (Kevin Newnan and David Gagne) are now suing the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, claiming that they should be recognized as Student Trustee and SGA President respectively. They claim that the elections which they and their friends ran on April 9 were the voice of the student body. This after having received six weeks prior notice that the results of these elections would not be recognized by anyone other than themselves. Do students on this campus really need a Student Trustee who doesn't sit on the Board of Trustees, or a President who no one in Whitmore will even invite to a meeting? I think not. Who has done a disservice to students here?

Angus McQuilken

These unrecognized "I'll pat your back if you'll be my friend" elections weren't even legitimate! The coordinators of these elections didn't even advertise the availability of nomination papers for people who wanted to run!! Would you have known how to get your name on the ballot if you had wanted to run? This is how Fidel Castro stays in office. Equal access to the ballot is perhaps the most basic premise of democracy. Only those on the inside had access to the ballot on April 9.

So, Mr. Newman and Mr. Gagne, while you self-credentialed student leaders are pleading your case to a judge and jury in the courtroom, who is going to be pleading our case to Bill Weld in the Governor's Office? Who is going to be representing student views to the campus administration? Who is going to fight for students while the two of you are fighting for yourselves? And by the way, where were you guys when we were planning that two day budget cut protest a couple of weeks back? And where were you guys when we brought 700 students together at the State House to lobby on April 17th? And where have you guys been all this past year while those of us who care have been trying to get something accomplished? Leadership is not in a title, an office or a resume item. Leadership is a character trait. If you think you have it, prove it to us, and do some damned work for a change.

There will be legitimate elections held for the position of Student Trustee on Thursday, May 9. At that time, a referendum on the restructuring of student government as a whole will also be held, coming from a commission set up to research and develop a new model. I would encourage all students to educate themselves on the issues at hand and to turn out and vote on May 9th.

Undecided students chart their own paths through life

Yes, it's absolutely true.

All rumors are correct. I used to be a Math major; now I'm not. I'm not saying it was a bad choice, just not the best one for me.

So last spring, in the final days of Add/Drop, that's exactly what I did.

What a relief I felt unloading the burdens of calculus from my mind and back (those math books are the heaviest). I classify myself as a person with many interests. So I figured why settle for one specific major? At UMass, there is a program in which it is possible to combine everything you're interested in into one major. The name of this program?

BDIC.

BDI-what? BDIC. It stand for a Bachelor's Degree with Individual Concentration. These four little letters saved me form becoming a hopeless major chaser. Not only did this relieve me from my unresolved desire to major in something, but allowed me to choose exactly what I would be studying.

Before jumping immediately into BDIC, I asked around for any information about it tht I could get. For the most part all the raves were positive, except for one. What stuck out in my mind was "It takes too much time". The reason it stands out so clearly is because, after having gone through and completed the project, I can honestly say it hardly took too much time. The yen for wanting to learn, but more, learning what really interests you, is push enough to give it the time

And the people at BDIC are wonderful. They answer all questions and each student is assigned their own peer advisor. The peer advisors themselves are full-fledged BDIC majors, who know the ropes of the program already and who help you every step of the way.

Having gone through the process and been accepted, I can happily say it wasn't bad at all. In fact, I have come up with a few steps to make the process that much easier for anyone interested. Remember, it's there for you - so take advantage.

Felice Cohen

1) Ask yourself if you're content with your major. If yes, congratualtions. You're one step ahead of the rest of us. If no or not sure, go to step two.

2) Locating the BDIC office. It is located in the basement of Bartlett Hall, room number 15. The door is always open.

3) Introduce yourself. (Always a good idea.)

4) Get copies of all the handouts offered. Read everything.

5) Ask questions. Don't come empty-handed. Write down a list of your interests and bring them.

6) When you've come up with a list, you're ready to begin. Don't worry about the list being too long. The broader your interests, the better. BUT, make sure they all form a cohesive program.

7) And the part you've all been dreading. Yes, you must write a proposal, but that's the easy part. Really. Just ask yourself why you've chosen those specific areas to study. When you realize it's because that's what you're interested in, the next step is just putting it on paper.

8) Choose an advisor. You're welcome to keep the one you have now or you may choose a new one - of your choice. This can be fun. By now there are professors you've come to know and there are some you like and some... When choosing an advisor, there are two important considerations: make sure he or she is knowledgable in the are you wish to pursue, and make sure she or he is easy to reach, for the most complicated step in the entire process is obtaining signatures. Sign this and this and this...But it's worth it!

9.Then wait.

By following these steps, plus your determination to learn about what interests you, I can almost guarantee your acceptance. (That and you must have at least a 2.0 GPA.) Remember, you are doing this for yourself so make it enjoyable.

If you thought BDIC stood for 'Big Dipper Is a Constellation,' I hope this was helpful. For me, I'm glad my 'major chaser' days are over. I'm both relieved and excited. A whole new major and one that I created myself. And the best part?

No more calculus.

Resident questions UPC policy

Friday, April 26, was like any other day. Until noon, that is. Are you sitting comfortably? Good, we shall now begin. Neither Elvis nor the local "Ubermensch" had taken roost at the Sunderland 7-Eleven; I waited patiently at the bus stop, shielding my nose from the "eau de spring" which blew from the local stables. Hmm...Celtics start tonight...Bruins have to win one more...Madonna gets it on with a bottle in her new movie...Weld is a weanie: all was well with The Boston Globe.

On campus: off key would-be folk singers, ducks, "Don't cut off our circulation!": la plus que sa change, la plus que sa reste meme. Pick up the Collegian: Sparsely attended lectures, Armenian holocaust (interesting memorials in Belmont and Watertown if you want more info on this tragic event) and, to my surprise: "UPC gives list of acts for concert." Great, probably a bunch of MTV hype I don't care about. But wait. Chucklehead: Are they Superfunkicalifragisexy? Heard good things about them but still wonder if they're named after the candy like the Pez People in the Pig Picture? Genes Loves Jezebel: although "if you can't say something nice," has never been my policy, I'll use it here. The Feelies: Great band, seen them a lot, but since I never got to see VU, they'll do in a pinch (I wonder if they'll do the one that starts off slow and quiet and gets loud and fast?). De la Soul: anyone who steals this much from Otis and James is worth a listen to. And saving the best for last, Bob Dylan. Great, it means I won't have to spend my 4th of July at Tangle(d up in blue) wood listneing to John Williams conduct bits fo "Raiders of the Lost Empire Pt. IV" and "The 1812 Overture" for three hours while waitign for Bob. This is good.

This is bad: "A valid UMass ID is your ticket into the show." A call to UPC: "Is there any way that someone who is not a UMass student can get into the show?" "No" C'est domage. Is this a valid ID that matches up with a valid student? Will the ID checkers at the entrances let any of their friends in regardless of credentials? Shall I eat a peach? Does this mean I won't get to attend the show with my partner, and other students won't get to attend the show with my partner, and other students won't get to attend with their spouses and lovers (hopefully one and the same person)? Was this concert situation designed exclusively with undergraduate cliques in mind? How come Lou Rawls isn't on the bill? Is there some way that students could get partners who don't attend UMass into the show? A donation to a local food bank or a homeless shelter? A vote in favor of overriding Prop 2 1/2? Just some questions. Some answers, UPC?

Latin Americans need better programs

At a time when we are trying to break away from such stereotypes as Puerto Ricans are crooks, lazy, welfare-dependent party people, the two main representative organizations on our campus, the Bilingual Collegiate Program and the Latin American student organization RIGHT-NOW are promoting these stereotypes. The fact that many people wish to cover-up, forget, and support various crimes, and actually attempt to condone some of the unethical behavior of SOME of our leaders, is typical of a cowardly colonial mentality. At a time when budget cuts and fee increases are weeding out students, faculty, and other University personnel, the ex-president and treasurer of RIGHT-NOW took a $1045 (plane trip, car rental, hotel rooms) weekend trip to Washington D.C. The fact that an "honest" and "hard-working" member of BCP went along to baby-sit our leaders, and that a woman who doesn't even attend UMass enjoyed some of our money, is a crime.

I can continue, pointing out problems with these organizations, but it is not my duty to do so. It is the duty of the Latin American student community to demand a superior quality of support. If, however, our attempts to reform and point out some of the problems, are ignored, criticized, censured and condemned, then we will seek the help of others. If getting an A on an independent study for one's tour guiding expertise, clerical work, party organizing skills, and cooking abilities is not promoting ignorance, then I apologize. Moreover, if rice and beans and dancing (usually to the beat of the same old Puerto Rican bands) is representative of the Latin American culture, then there is a problem.

Moreover, the conception of elites, and success being measured by prosperity, is representative of the colonial mentality that many people are victims of. Another sad effect of colonial dependency is the increasing amount of illiteracy. What is happening to the Latin American literary tradition that so heavily relied on symbols? Are the "intellectuals" the only people who can carefully scrutinize and understand literature?

Legally, Puerto Ricans are born US citizens (Jones Act of 1971). We are not immigrants. In the Supreme Court case Harris v. Rosario, Puerto Rico was labelled a territory, a property of the US. Although some of us claim our Latin American heritage, the world considers Puerto Rico a colony. Governor Weld is the governor of Massachusetts, Governor Rafael Hernandez Colon is the governor of the free associated state of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico. The fact that many Puerto Ricans are oblivious to reality, and the problems that we face, the nihilistic attitude on behalf of some of our leaders,is my concern. We cannot continue to promote our own assimilation to a racist system, which allots us a place below the rest.

We are intelligent and unique people. Let us recognize our people with pride and honor. Let us not stand below anyone. Let us stand at an equal level.

Being bisexual is not being spared from hate

On Saturday, May 4 I will be marching in the annual gay pride rally in Northampton. When I was little, I marched with my mother, who is a lesbian. When I got to college I marched with my friends as a straight ally. I have always felt welcome. I love these people for their courage, their beauty, and their pride. This year, however, is different.

This year, in fact, this month, I finally came to the realization that my love and affection for women is more than just platonic. Yes, I have come out,...as a bisexual. I am attracted to women, but that does not mean I am no longer attracted to men.

So, I am bisexual. I ready myself to leap into the arms of the gay community as one of them. Unfortunately, things have changed now that I am out as a bisexual. It was fine when I was a little dyke daughter, they used to love me, but now that I am ready to admit to the world that I love women, I am suddenly unwelcome. Why? How can they say to me, now that I'm gay too, there is no place for me in their community, that I don't count?

I also don't understand what they mean when they say that bisexuals have heterosexual privilege. Do people honestly believe that someone who is open about their bisexuality is not going to get harassed? I beg to differ.

Jessame Hannus

Last year, when I still thought I was straight, I put a sign on my dorm room door saying I was proud of my lesbian mother, and my door was vandalized for the rest of the year. I was scared and upset, and nobody could do anything about it. Nobody could help me stop these people. So how do you think I feel when I want to march to show that I am proud of my bisexual self and the gay community claims I don't need to be recognized in the march, because I can hide behind my heterosexual privilege?

Once, when I was talking to my mother about my bisexual friends (I'm not out to my mother yet) she said,"Don't you think they're just a little confused?" Mom, what do you mean confused? I know I like men. I know I like women. Who's confused? I also don't understand why people think bisexuals are incapable of being monogamous. Because I have gained the ability to love women as well as men, I have lost the ability to maintain a long-term monogamous relationship? The logic doesn't follow.

Now if I had decided that I love women and no longer love men, the gay community would not have questioned me in this way. They would have been supportive. But no, instead I must deal with the prejudices of both the homosexual and the heterosexual communities, and it hurts.

I am very grateful for the support and understanding of my gay peers, here at UMass. I just hope that the rest of the world will begin to understand that my bisexuality does not mean I am a reckless and uncaring nymphomaniac. I hate the way our society divides us, please don't let it divide us even more. I want to be free to love, without being hated for it.

A tribute to roommates, compulsive cleaners and all

As graduation creeps closer, I begin to realize, as many of you eventually will too, how much I will miss my roommates. Sometimes roommates drive you crazy, but you know you'd never want to replace them. Maybe my tribute to my four roommates can be a university-wide tribute to all those roommates of yours that you just want to say, "Thanks for being you!" Let me introduce you to Elana, Heather, Marisa, and Melissa.

Elana Rogers. Psychology major. It's 6 a.m. and Elana's up. What she does four hours before her first class I have yet to find out, but what I do know is the wacked-out dream she had last night or the fascinating tidbit she learned on the news that morning or the predicted temperature for that afternoon. This is because Elana is LOUD!! She's the pet rooster I never had. The rooster that at the break of dawn wails, "Oh my God, that's HILLARIIIIOUS!!!"

But I love this girl! It's never been so easy for me to get up so early in the morning. I've started to run before class, read before classes, and even enjoy a good cup of coffee with a great roommate: Elana. Thanks, Elana!

Heather Wightman. Communications major who missed her calling as a Psychology Major. Beware of Heather, my friends: She will Psychoanalyze you!!

(ME:) Yah, Heather, I bit my tongue.

(Heather:) Why? What made you bite your tongue? Did it happen while you were talking? Maybe, you subconsciously stopped yourself from saying something that you really didn't want to say! You know what I mean?

Heather is a very inquisitive person who examines everything. Everything interests her. She is not prying or nosy, just curious and inquiring.

And I love the girl! She's made me really think about things and I know if I share my convoluted thoughts with her, she'll always be more than willing to try to straighten them out. Thanks, Heather!

Sunny Stastny

Next. Marisa Morini. Management major. I mean management major. Marisa is our housekeeper. She is a compulsive cleaner. I get up to shower and when I get out, the dishes are washed, the living room is vacumed, and my bed is made. The girl will then look at me with satisfaction and gleefully declare, "I condensed the bulletin board by trashing all the unnecessary clutter, but don't worry (!!!), I wrote down all stray phone numbers on a clean piece of paper — in alphabetical order." Sometimes I think I'm living with my mother. Marisa always has an answer to the frustrating question: "Marisa, do you know where my bla-bla is?"

But I love this girl! She has rescued me from the true slob I was destined to be. I find myself cleaning up my own mess so that Maresa won't have to, and this routine has spilled over into other areas of my life. Thanks, Marisa!

Finally, Melissa McPherson! Communications major. She communicates, all right! One would never guess this seemingly conservative, reserved, and quiet person by day can not help but ask the question, "Wanna go uptown?" at night. She is the tazmanian party devil that needs to be caged because no matter how sick, how much homework, or how tired she may be, she will never turn down an invitation to go out.

But I love the girl! Sometimes I need some social action myself and I don't even know it. Melissa will get me out and make me realize I need a break. She keeps my intensity in check. Thanks, Melissa!

There you have it! My roommates!! I truly adore them and their particularities. Everyone in this world you come in contact with contributes something to the entire you. These guys have had a positive influence on me in the above ways and in many other ways as well. I know I'm impossible to live with at times, but I'm sure they too make light of it and see the plus side. Thanks Elana, Heather, Marisa, and Melissa.

The sanctions can be lifted after the creation of a new constitution for South Africa, Hani said.

"When we are at a state of visibilty and are sitting down writing a new constitution, then we shall come back and say 'Thank you friend, sanctions can be lifted,'" he said.

Hani discussed his proposals for the future government of South Africa, including the nationalization of several major industries, legislating a "living wage" for the black working population, as well as affirmative action.

Scientists want to use the near-zero gravity conditions on the space station to develop stronger materials, purer crystals, better insight into human disease and purer medicine to treat it.

Life sciences research is necessary to determine how humans would fare on a two-year round trip to Mars, a goal of the United States by the year 2019.

"We believe that a space station is required to prepare humans for long-duration space missions to other planets," Bowsher said. And he conceded that economic benefits from microgravity research "could be enormous."

Bush addresses fears over agreement

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Bush yesterday promised to protect U.S. workers and the environment from negative effects of a free trade agreement with Mexico.

The president told members of Congress in a written statement that he will work with them "to ensure a worker adjustment program that is adequately funded and that provides effective services to workers who may lose their jobs as a result of an agreement with Mexico."

The program's price tag and details would be worked out with Congress when the trade negotiations are finished, officials said. It would provide dislocated workers "with comprehensive services in a timely fashion," according to a White House summary of Bush's proposals obtained by The Associated Press.

Bush also promised to ensure in negotiations with Mexico "that our right to safeguard the environment is preserved."

The document said Mexico has an environmental law of 1988 which "is a solid foundation for tackling its environmental problems," and that "enforcement has in the past been a key problem, but Mexico's record has been improving dramatically."

Bush also pledged to retain the right to impose stringent pesticide, energy conservation, toxic waste, and health and safety standards, and keep out products that don't meet the standards.

On tariffs, the Bush administration will seek to negotiate a procedure that allows for temporary reimposition of duties in cases where dropping tariffs results in "injurious increases in imports."

Bush's responses were outlined in the executive summary of a 150-page answer he sent members of Congress who had voiced concerns about the impact that removing tariffs with Mexico would have on labor and the environment.

Bush developed the plan as part of his campaign to persuade Congress to give him a free hand — so-called fast-track authority — to negotiate an amendment-proof trade agreement with Mexico.

Opponents of the fast-track extension, including textile makers, consumer activists, environmentalists, organized labor and some farm groups, contend a free trade agreement could prompt an exodus of jobs to Mexico, where wages are a fraction of U.S. levels.

Presidential campaign announcements now made for show

By WALTER R. MEARS
AP Special Correspondent

WASHINGTON — In The Announcement Game, a politician figure repeats what anybody who's been listening already knows, and declares his candidacy for president of the United States.

It is customary for the candidate's voice to drop solemnly when reciting those final four words. It also is customary for assembled supporters, or at least the campaign staff, to applaud at that point.

Those formal announcements always have been predictable. They are rituals, not real campaign starting points. And nowadays, candidates don't even observe the old amenities and pretend they aren't running until they say they are.

There used to be a point to coyness, when a declared candidacy opened the prospect of equal broadcast time requirements for anyone else seeking the same office, while undeclared politicking did not.

But under the federal campaign finance law now in force, announcing a candidacy doesn't really change the legal situation. Raising and spending money to seek the White House does that.

So the announcement is ceremonial, a ritual programmed for maximum political impact. It usually is redundant, since most candidates will have said in advance that they are running and that they will formally announce it on a date to be announced.

Most of them also will announce it more than once, in more than one setting — first at home, then in appearances in early primary and caucus states.

News Analysis

It's something like throwing out the first baseball on opening day. Politicians do that, too, and even if the pitch bounces on the way to home plate, the season is on.

This season, the first pitch came from Paul E. Tsongas, the former Massachusetts senator, formally announcing his long-shot candidacy for the Democratic presidential nomination Tuesday in Lowell, Mass. with reprises in Manchester, N.H., and Des Moines, Iowa.

First in the race counts only for show: the object is to be the last candidate standing. But for Tsongas, an early solo is an asset as he tries to make a name and make a case.

In crowded fields like those of 1988 and 1984, his entry would have been a footnote.

For now, his is the only presidential show in the opposition party, which means national attention and television time. He'll gain both on his announcement tour, which also takes him to a half-dozen cities in the West and South. That kind of visibility will be out of reach later, in the foot-soldier phase of the campaign.

That's why candidates wring all they can out of the ritual.

Tsongas said weeks ago that he had decided to run. He's been giving speeches about it ever since, reserving his formal announcement of candidacy until Tuesday.

For a while, there will be an advantage to Tsongas in being alone.

But he's not going to be nominated by default; there will be formidable, front-rank candidates. The only way outsiders gain that standing is by beating more established contenders, in debate, matched speechmaking appearances or other forums, in the buildup to caucus and primary election contests.

That's what Jimmy Carter did in 1976. His campaign skillfully manipulated an advance straw poll in Iowa to lead the field, gaining recognition and vital headway before the first test of that campaign year.

So far, there are no such forums, and no targets for an underdog trying to prove the credentials of a real contender.

Lowell son announces run for presidency

The Associated Press

LOWELL, Mass. — Rita Lane and Kay Morin remember the days when a young Paul Tsongas knocked on their doors campaigning for the city council.

Lane and Morin are "seniors" now, as they put it, and this time, they trudged out to see Tsongas.

Despite his high aspirations and impressive Congressional career nearly a decade ago, Tsongas' announcement had all the flavor of an old-fashioned, hometown gathering. And despite the doubts of his former classmates, political opponents, babysitters and neighbors, they figured the least they could do is cheer him on.

"I don't know how he will do it, but he will," said Mary Pietryka, an elementary school teacher who lives in Tsongas' Lowell neighborhood.

Rebecca Lipochitz, an 18-year-old who used to babysit the three Tsongas girls, brought a friend from Brandeis University to the announcement. "I'm hoping for a really good recession that makes [President] Bush look bad," she said.

The most prominent officials attending the soggy rally were a few mayors and U.S. Rep. Chester Atkins (D-Mass.), a longtime ally who in part owes his latest re-election to Tsongas.

"Part of his strength is he has always fought conventional political wisdom," Atkins said after the announcement. He predicted Tsongas will win the support of average folks first and the "power brokers will follow."

Many attending the speech said they came to the renovated Boot Cotton Mills in Lowell National Park because they are hoping Tsongas will once again help revive the ailing economy.

Tsongas is credited with winning state and federal money for several regional revitalization projects. When the mill renovation is completed it will contain the Tsongas Industrial Center, a museum named after him.

"He could do nationally what he did for Lowell. He recognizes business isn't bad," said Armand Mercier, a real estate agent who followed Tsongas to Manchester, N.H. to witness the speech a second time.

Joel Bates, a school teacher laid off last week, said he now has time to volunteer for the campaign.

Bates predicted Tsongas' similarities to former Democratic nominee Gov. Michael Dukakis will hinder him, but can be overcome.

"A victory for Paul Tsongas could be a victory to the economy here," Bates said. "But a loss will not be as devastating as his predecessor's loss."

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): New expenditures could have hidden pitfalls. Maintain a practical, thrifty outlook. Despite an attractive job offer, sit tight. Romance takes more glamorous turns tonight.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Use your charm to win clients over to your way of thinking. Favors and financial support will come from an unexpected quarter. Seize an opportunity to combine business with pleasure this evening.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Those who mean th most to you are sometimes difficult to understand. Be patient. Let romantic partner know in advance exactly what you have in mind. If possible postpone signing legi papers.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Antagonism could suddenly surface in a business situation. Displaying a cocky attitude will only add fuel to the fire. Refuse to be goaded into losing your temper. Put romance on hold.

LEO (July 23-Aug 22): Stand up for your rights! Someone who tries to exploit you may want to see how much you will take without making waves. Adopt and assertive but nonaggressive approach.

VIRGO (Aug 23-Sept 22): Goals that have previously eluded you are suddenly within your grasp. An attractive member of the opposite sex may issue an ultimatum. Make certain you have all the facts before giving your answer.

LIBRA (Sept 23-Oct 22): Focus on accomplishing as much as possible by noon. Give your subordinates more freedom. Someone young and inexperienced has good idea but is nervous about speaking up. Loved one shares a secret.

SCORPIO (Oct 23-Nov 21): Work goes best when you move at a steady moderate pace. A creative idea will swell profits and impress higher-ups. Conversations with your associates give you fresh insights.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov 22-Dec 21): An intriguing job offer could be part of the day's scenario. Stress your professional attitude and wealth of experience. Think carefully about what you want and what you already have.

CAPRICORN (Dec 22-an 19): Seek expert advice about credit, loans and investments. Advice you give to a relative may fall on deaf ears. Others must learn form their own mistakes. A sudden windfall lifts your spirits.

AQUARIUS (Jan 20-Feb 18): Be alert to changes in the work atmosphere and shifts in opinion. You can beat the competition by adopting new, streamlined methods. Have the courage of your convictions!

PISCES (FEb 19-March 20): Work alone until the time is ripe to approach others. A friend or associate may not live up to a promise. Do not fret. The situation can still work out to your advantage.

THE GREATER SPRINGFIELD FORD DEALERS HAVE THE KEYS TO YOUR SUCCESS

WIN A TWO YEAR LEASE ON THE ALL-NEW 1991 FORD ESCORT. DETAILS BELOW.*

THESE KEYS COULD BE YOURS.

One way to get started on the road to success is getting the keys to a new Ford. Ford Credit and participating Springfield Metro Ford Dealers can help get qualified college graduates going with the Ford College Graduate Purchase Program and $500 cash back from Ford Motor Company.

Here's all you have to do to qualify: Graduate with a Bachelor's or advanced degree between October 1, 1989 and December 31, 1991; have verifiable employment beginning within 120 days of vehicle purchase; have a salary sufficient to cover living expenses as well as a car payment. Although a prior credit history is not necessary, if you have one, it must be satisfactory to Ford Credit.

Ford Dealer sales representatives will be on your campus soon to explain the details of the program and offer you a chance to win a two year lease on a 1991 Ford Escort. Look for us on campus or stop by any participating Ford Dealer for details and entry form:

Aprile, Claffey continue brilliance, shut down Friars 6-0, 10-0

By DAN WETZEL
Collegian Staff

For the fourth time this season the University of Massachusetts softball team swept a doubleheader without allowing a run. This time it was Providence College that was humbled by the Minutewomen, 6-0, 10-0.

UMass (31-10) once again got big performances from its pitching duo of Holly Aprile and Darlene Claffey. The two have now combined for 19 shutouts in the season.

In game one, Aprile struck out eight Friars en route to her 14th win of the season. The shutout lowered her ERA to 1.30.

Aprile got all the run support she needed due to a Providence error in the first. With Jen Miller on first, coach Elaine Sortino had Barb Marean (batting .470), sacrifice bunt. The Providence second baseman fielded the ball, attempted to force Miller out at second, but overthrew the shortstop covering the bag. Miller hustled around to score on the three-base error.

In the fifth, Marean got the opportunity to swing away and belted her fifth homerun of the season way over the centerfield fence. Marean, who last week was named A-10 player of the week, leads the Atlantic 10 in homeruns, batting average and is second in triples with three.

Other offensive heroes were Sherri Kuchinskas, 2-3 and first baseman Chris Collins who went 2-4 with an RBI.

Aprile helped her own cause by hitting a single and a double and knocking four teammates across the plate.

It was more of the same in game two. Claffey struck out 10 as she improved her record to 17-4. Claffey has been named A-10 pitcher of the week the past two weeks and has now won 10 straight. Her ERA is now a mere 1.18.

Once again UMass got on the board early, pushing a runner across in the first. With one out and Miller on first, Marean walked. Aprile came up and doubled to centerfield, scoring Miller from second.

In the sixth inning UMass broke the game open as they batted around. The rally was the product of some rarely used reserved players, who proved they may deserve more opportunities to play in the future.

With two out, freshman Tracy DuEst, with only nine at bats on the season, started the rally with a single. Aprile doubled sending deLuce to third. Catcher Beth Fulcher, also with nine at bats on year, slapped a single into rightfield scoring both runners.

Next up was Jen Devlin, who had only two previous at bats on the year. Devlin cranked a double deep off the fence in center field. Fulcher went to third on the hit that missed being a home run by only about a foot.

UMass pitcher Holly Aprile, here seen earlier in the season, pitched a shutout yesterday, beating Providence College 6-0. Aprile struck out eight Friars as she improved her record to 14-6.

Spot starter Chris Collins knocked both Devlin and Fulcher in on a single.

By beating Providence, UMass continued their mastery of area teams. The Minutewomen are now 28-3 against teams from the north. They have now won 17 of their last 18 games and seven in a row.

Diamond Classic This weekend Totman Field will be the sight of some tremendous softball between some of the best teams in the contry. UMass is playing host Florida, Princeton and arch rival Connecticut. On Saturday, UMass will square off against Princeton and then get one last shot at the only team to beat them since spring break, UConn. Last time the Huskies were in town, UMass split a doubleheader with them. The day featured a tremendous 14 inning opening game that UConn won 3-2. The Minutewomen rallied in the night cap to win 6-0. On Sunday UMass will face Florida.

Men's track goes to Easterns

O'Brien expects repeat performance

By KEITH BENNETT
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's track team will travel to Rhode Island Saturday looking to finish among the top three teams in the Eastern Conference Championship Meet.

The Minutemen placed third at Easterns last year and coach Ken O'Brien said he expects a similar finish this year.

"If I had to make a pre-meet prediction, I would say we should probably finish third," O'Brien said. "Rhode Island would be looked at as the favorite. After that, it would probably be Southern Connecticut and then us."

O'Brien said he will look for continued strong performances from the athletes who led his team to a 4-3 record in dual-meets this season.

Joe Kourafas consistently placed in multiple events for UMass this season and O'Brien said he will score in three events this weekend. Kourafas will compete in the high jump, the long jump, and the javelin. He has jumped 6 feet, 6 inches in the high jump, 21-8 in the long jump and thrown the javelin 174-1.

Jeff Peterson will also compete in three events. He will throw the shot put, the discus and compete in the triple jump. He has thrown the shot 42-6 1/2, the discus 138-6½ and jumped 41-1¼ in the triple jump.

Sprinter Kevin Walters will compete in both the 100- and 200-meter races. He placed fourth in the 100 and third in the 200 at Easterns last year and brings times of 10.97 and 22.2 seconds, respectively, to the meet this year.

Steve Brown was undefeated in the 800 in dual meets and should be a favorite to place at Easterns. He has run 1:53.6.

O'Brien described senior Mike Grey as a solid bet to place in the 400. Grey brings a best of 49.9 in the event.

Matt Simon will try to improve on his third-place finish of last year in the 3,000 steeple chase. He is coming off of a personal-best 9:15.2 at the Penn Relays last week.

Other solid bets to place, according to O'Brien, are distance runners Gerry Squires and Jon Corso. Squires will compete in the 1,500 and Corso will run the 5,000.

Squires has competed in races ranging from the 1,500 to the 10,000 for the Minutemen. He has a best time of 3:56.3 in the 1,50 this year.

Corso, who has run 14:37.8 in the 5,000 this year, will try to improve on his fifth-place finish from last year. He will be joined in the 5,000 by freshmen John Raach, Brian Fallon and Craig Cormier.

Bill Wallace will compete in both the 800 and the 1,500 at Easterns. His best times are 1:57.2 and 3:58.9, respectively.

Jeff White and Paul Doyle will both compete in the 110 hurdles. White has run 15.6 and Doyle has run 15.9.

Doyle will also compete in the 400 hurdles along with teammate Dave Borges. Doyle has run 56.8 this season and Borges is coming off of a personal-best 56.1 at the Brown Invitational.

Luke Simpson will compete in both the hammer throw and the discus. O'Brien sees his best event as the hammer, which he has thrown 153-5.

Some other athletes to look for are Brian Bednarek in the pole vault and Pat Ryan and Mike Davis in the 10,000.

The Rocket's on a roll, Cooney, Comisky and all

By BEN WALKER
The Associated Press

The first time Joe Morgan saw Roger Clemens, he knew there was potential. But to predict all that all that would follow, no one could have known.

It was eight years ago, when Clemens was pitching his team toward the college world series championship, Morgan had been promoted to a scout by the Boston Red Sox, and his first trip took him to Texas.

Here's the report Boston's future manager filed on May 16, 1983:

"Above average fastball. Heavy ball tha has hop to it. Good slider. Could pitch high in the stride zone wiht his fastball. Summary: Could be a definite power pitcher."

Not bad, Joe. Still, ever wonder what Clemens would've done with a good fastball?

This season, Clemens has made nearly everyone K like Kittle. He's done it with an improved forkball that dips into the dirt and a mix of up-and-down fastballs — as the players call it, "high heat" and "cheese at the knees."

Plus, there's a change that those around Clemens sense, one that could be working in his favor. He seems more relaxed, more at ease when he's not pitching. The security of his $21.5 milllion, four-year contract may be the reason.

"On the mound he's got the same intensity," Red Sox general manager Lou Gorman said. "Off the mound, so far, he's keyed down a little bit."

Clemens, recently indicted by a grand jury on charges stemming from an off-season scuffle with an off-duty policeman at Bayou Mama's nightclub in Houston, isn't convinced he's any different.

When Clemens comes back Friday night in Chicago after his five-game suspension, umpire Terry Cooney will be at Comiskey Park too. Clemens hopes his reputation of being an umpire-baiter is behind him because he wants to concentrate on good streaks, not mean ones.

Clemens is halfway to Hershiser with 30 consecutive scoreless innings. He hasn't given up a home run to a right-handed hitter since Jose Canseco connected on Sept 15, 1989. He hasn't allowed more than two earned runs in his last 17 starts.

At 4-0 with an 0.28 ERA, Roger is on a roll. In 32 inings he's struck out 34, walked just two and permitted only 17 hits. If those sound lide Denny McLain-style stats from 1968, they are. And Clemens is aware of it.

There was a time when people compared him to his contemporaries. Guys like Gooden and Viola, Saberhagen and Stewart.

Gooden, age 26, is 122-47 (.722) with a 2.84 ERA. In 1,545 innings, he's walked 430 and struck out 1,458.

Clemens, at 28, is 120-51 (.702) with a 2.81 ERA. In 1,545 innings, he's walked 430 and struck out 1,458.

They're each on course to break the alltime record for winning percentage wit'i at least 200 decisions, held by Whitey Ford (.690). So it looks even, right?

Well, not really.

Consider that the Mets, in games since 1984 without Gooden are still a .566 team. The Red Sox meanwhile merely win at a .501 clip without Clemens.

Also, look at where they each perform. Gooden plays at Shea Stadium, a pitcher's paradise, while Clemens is at Fenway Park, one of the best ballparks for batters.

And while Clemens is facing guys like Dave Parker, Harold Baines, Alvin Davis and other designated hitters who add an average of a half-run per game in the American League, Gooden gets to mow down pitchers such as Don Carmen (a career .059 hitter), Terry Mulholland (.069) and Mike Bielecki (.076).

Les Liasons Dangereueses tells of the lustful Valmont

By THOMAS SCULLY
Collegian Correspondent

Les Liasons Dangereueses
Longsworth Arts Village, Hampshire College
Thursday, April 25

A portrait of sexual power games extraordinare, Les Liaisons Dangereuses opened last weekend at Hampshire College. As usual, the recently formed Hampshire Independent Productions delivered bare-bones theatre, outdoors under the tin solar panels, with sparse lighting and primitive set pieces, however a solid cast and vivid staging prevaiked over adverse conditions. Chris Werler carried the evening with panache and conviction as the scoundrel Valmont, who uses his sexual guile as a kind of social occupation with which to while away his otherwise pointless existence. Susan Henderson and Rachel Sledd also deliver intensely focused performances as the virtuous wife and the conniving vixen, respectively, both loved by Valmont. Consistency and charm marks the rest of the acting as well.

The play itself, by Christopher Hampton, is quite interesting, and was made into a movie a couple of years ago, released under the title Valmont (earning an Academy Award nomination for extravagant period costumes, I remember, but perhaps missing the emotional core somewhat). The rather complicated plot follows two fellow schemers and former lovers who, for rather absurd motives of vengeance and pride, manage to destroy the love of two innocent young people, and some others along the way. Valmont is the tragic anti-hero, and as the play progresses he – strangely enough – becomes more human and vulnerable, as he discovers that he really loves one of the women he has been exploiting (not the one he raped and impregnated, I mean, the other one). His female counterpart, on the other hand, maintains her superhumanly cynical but brutally useful philosophy to the bitter end, when she realizes perhaps...no, there are no realizations.

If there was some social point in the production (as the program notes seem to indicate), it went over my head – though I must say some of Valmont and Merteuil's ideas on marriage have also been articulated by my dorm mates in very suave late-night parties. But in any case there were many moments of true pathos in the characters' inability to find for themselves what they truly wanted, with a light enough touch to permit unsanctified giggling along the way, for these are characters who manage to snatch misery from the jaws of contentment. Seldom has the tenderest of human emotions – the L-word – been subject of such wounded grandiosity precipitated by such flagrant waste as in Dangerous Liasons.

Les Liaisons Dangereueses continues outdoors at the Longsworth Arts Village at Hampshire College Thursday through Sunday at 8:00 p.m.

The crises of college

Bill and Karen
Hampden Theatre
Tuesday, April 30

As one student was overheard saying when leaving the Tuesday evening premiere of Bill and Karen, "I can't believe a student wrote that!" Indeed, UMass senior Zachary Slovinsky has penned an hilariously creative play which his cast acts out flawlessly. An imaginative, humorous testament to the emotional, economic, and romantic crises of the archetypal college student, Bill and Karen proved to be a truly entertaining show.

The story revolves around Guy (Bill Larkin), a self-conscious, hyper-analytical engineering student with a penchant for using his humor as a shield, as he endures the seemingly unendurable. He is infatuated with Karen (Lynda Newton), a "free-spirited but volatile," earthy Deadhead. Karen, however, has long been seeing Bill (John Guilderson), an apparently brain-cell deficient member of the same type. Guy, while attempting to fend off the advances of Sue (Mandy Janis) the impudent coquette, fails to understand how Karen, with all of her intelligence, charm, and confidence can sustain her seemingly vacuous relationship with Bill.

After his original roommate drops out of school, Guy is forced to room with a dim-witted fraternity pledge, Ted (played hilariously by Bill Fidurko), who wears his weight-lifting belt like Linus clings to his security blanket. Ted is invariably at the side of his fraternity superior, Kevin (Michael Lombardi). Lombardi offers several show-stopping scenes, including:
literally transforming himself into his hero, Robert DeNiro, when he feels insecure; and inventing what will surely become the new "politically correct" appellation for the diminutive.

Through freak miscommunication, after Ted leaves for the frat house, Karen's boyfriend Bill becomes Guy's roommate. Guy is frustrated in having

Weinberg and Bernstein to bring good-natured fun

By ANDREW BROADHEAD
Collegian Correspondent

When Tom Wilson-Weinberg sings "I Might Lose My Funding," he hilariously addresses the concerns of all artists funded by the National Endowment of the Arts. The song lyrics weigh the temptations towards self-censorship but conclude by saying to hell with it do what you want and just deal with it.

This Friday night, the intimate atmosphere of Hamden Theater will be host to this and other witty and humorous songs by Tom Wilson-Weinberg and Lisa Joy Bernstein. Fresh from the enjoyed success of their off-Broadway musical The Ten Percent Review, this composer and musical director/accompanist offer "an evening of politically up-front, gay fun." When they take the stage with their new collaboration entitled "New Songs From the Composer of the 10 Review" anyone from the National Endowment for the Arts to Cardinal O'Connor will be subject to some good-natured kidding.

Wilson-Weinberg is an intelligent and sane writer. His lyrics are neither destructive nor random diatribes. When addressing concerns or taking issue with specific people and institutions, he is exceptionally good-natured. One critic has described his lyrics as clinging to his music so organically that one almost imagines Wilson "discovering" his songs like some natural underground rock formation. "It's difficult to believe they didn't exist before he made them up," says critic Robin Bernstein.

One of their show highlights is a song composed entirely of exerpts from Eleanor Roosevelt's letters to her female lover. "It's my first collaboration with Eleanor Roosevelt," jokes Weinberg. Bernstein's talented accompaniment on piano brings a dynamic interaction to songs like "If We Brought Them Out," "Color Blind Blues," and "High Risk for AfrAIDS."

Whether addressing serious issues with constructive and sensible anger or joking about coming out experiences, Weinberg and Bernstein offer an interesting thought provoking evening.

Tom Wilson-Weinberg and Lisa Joy Bernstein will perform at UMass in Hampden Theatre at 8 p.m. Tickets are $3 with UMass ID and $5 without.

The Black Women's Survival Kit
Curtain Theatre
Wednesday, May 1

The University of Massachusetts is in for a treat. On Wednesday, in the Curtain Theater, the cast and crew of The Black Women's Survival presented their first open performance.

The play, which takes place in a funeral parlor rotates around various scenes that all contribute to the play's central theme. What is the theme? Go see the play.

Talk about a cast, this cast was great! Each character acted out their roles with an abundance of feeling and enthusiasm.

The humorous remarks made by the character Shaunelle played by Jo Ella Costello created a more than comfortable and pleasant atomsphere with out taking away from the serious message of the play. What was this message? Well, go see the play.

Do you enjoy real music, none of that synthesized, echoed stuff, I mean real music! Well this play has got it! Lots of great authentic African music. Music which put pictures in your mind. What kind of pictures? Go see the play.

Have you ever gone to a play and thought to yourself, "What beautiful costumes." Well I found myself saying that all night. I have never seen a play which had such beautiful costumes, but nevertheless, the costumes did not take away from the play or the great acting done by these very talented women.

Guess what? Great acting, music, slides, and costumes aren't the only things this play has to offer, dance is yet another treat given in the play. You can really tell by the way the actresses dance, that they are enjoying themselves.

I strongly recommend this play because of the great things it has to offer, but more importantly, I recommend it because of the serious message it reveals. This message is important to us all.

The Black Women's Survival Kit is a must see. If I were you I would go out and buy my tickets before the play is sold out.

To the cast and crew I say "Thumbs up, Well done, and Yessss My Sisters".

The Black Women's Survival Kit will appear at UMass in the Curtain Theatre Thursday through Saturday night at 8 p.m. with a matinee perfomance on Saturday at 2 p.m. Tickets are $5 for the general public and $3 for students and elders.

to deal with Bill's utter inaneness (executed with impeccable timing by Guilderson). Moreover, he must concoct a way to approach Karen, who now frequents his dorm room.

Lynda Newton is excellent as Karen, as she succeeds in titillating Larkin's Guy throughout. Bill Larkin, on stage for the duration of the play, is superb once again, performing with comic flair and exquisite timing. One truly identifies with his myriad dilemmas and unrequited love.

Bill and Karen has been extended for one more performance this evening at 8 p.m. at Southwest's Hampden theater. Go see it! Even the curtain call is creative. Admission is FREE.

Bullish on Bollocks

By BRIAN HARRINGTON
Collegian Staff

They're big, they're bad, and they're a ripe old load of bollocks! Let that be said for the Big Bad Bollocks, a rising local talent, who will appear this Saturday at Pearl Street to celebrate the release of their album Hanged at Gibbet Rock on the JamaDisc record label.

The Big Bad Bollocks are a band in the tradition of the Pogues. Their music can best be described as mix of English, Scottish and Irish drinking songs, traditional ballads, roots rock covers, and original compositions. This is a pub band in the most literal sense, mixing humor and wit with ribald revelry. The Big Bad Bollocks adeptly combine raw acoustic instrumentation with a raucous and sometimes fierce Celtic energy that is enough to boil your blood, wrench your guts, and set your pint glass trembling.

The band is fronted by lead vocalist and songwriter John Allen who hails from Derbyshire. Allen describes his small village of Tideswell, in the ancient rolling hills of Northern England, as a place where "men are men, and sheep are nervous." He attended the Liverpool Art Institute and his working class roots, combined with his artistic flair, are best represented in the vivid images that are conveyed in the songs he writes about life in Britain. Allen plays the jester when onstage, and his cutting wit and silly Monty Pythonesque humor make for unexpected hijinks and much audience laughter and participation.

The backbone of the Big Bad Bollocks is comprised of Patrick Owens, a Detriot native, on guitars and vocals. Owens composes and arranges most of the band's original material in a cooperative effort with his lyrical partner Allen. But even more to his credit, Owens serves as the straight man and fall guy to Allen's comedic onstage antics. Drummer Bob Richards provides a thunderous and merry beat on a stand-up kit composed of a snare and cocktail drum. John Reily rounds out the lineup on acoustic mandolin. The show is being billed as a "Bacchanalia and Saturnia" and anyone bringing a fertility object to the show will receive a dollar off admission. Opening is Amy Allison and the Maudlins.

The Big Bad Bollocks will have a record release party Saturday night at Pearl Street.

UM program receives $5.9 million grant

By GAYLE LONG
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts program designed to support change for families and communities living in poverty received a $5.9 million, three-year grant, according to the director of the project.

Director Margaret Slinski said the Cooperative Extension program has outreach branches in the city of Springfield and rural areas such as Huntington and Chester.

The grant, from the W.K. Kellogg Foundation of Battle Creek, Mich., has designated the University program as one of seven model "Care for Action" centers.

"The program has to be utilized as a model for other states," said Dean Robert Helgensen of Food and Natural Resources. "It has to be replicable."

Helgensen said recent budget cuts implemented by the Weld administration have emphasized a state program rather than county program.

He said the budget for fiscal year 1992 was "meager," and after this year's cuts they were operating on a support staff.

"I think we've done an excellent job of salvaging the program," he said.

The grant is allowing for the program to implement "Youth at Risk" programs, which will train volunteers who live within the community to teach responsibility to people such as teen-agers and young adults in the community.

According to Virginia Green, a member of the support staff in Springfield, the program gives people in the community confidence in themselves.

Previously, Green was a volunteer in the Springfield housing developments, then received her Associate's Degree to join Cooperative Extension's staff.

"Personally, the program gave me the confidence to get a higher education," she said. "I saw life in a different light."

Green said a teen-ager who was using drugs came to her because he felt he could approach her.

"After we had spoken he felt relieved," she said. "It was only afterwards I found out he was contemplating suicide."

Cooperative Extension modified their program in 1985, but the money needed for long-term support of impoverished families was unavailable.

Later that year, the director of Housing and Human Services helped access funding for the program as a cost-effective way to enable these families to become self-sufficient.

Local factory makes blankets for Kurds

LAWRENCE, MASS. (AP) — A local textile manufacturer yesterday shipped 5,000 new blankets to Kurdish refugee camps in Iraq.

Officials of Malden Mills Industries Inc. expect to send another 5,000 blankets overseas later this month.

Employees worked overtime to produce the blankets made of Polartec, a material the company makes for outdoor clothing, said Howard Ackerman, general manager of the mill's apparel division.

"We had read so much about the volunteer relief efforts for the Kurdish refugees," Ackerman said. "When it became obvious that we should do something, I recommended that we take a given amount of yardage and turn it into blankets."

Polartec, a double-faced polyester, is lightweight; about one pound per yard and insulates well.

"When it gets wet, you can wring it out and it dries very rapidly," he said. For that reason, the durable fabric could also be turned into tents, he said.

Because he didn't want the blankets to look like military issue, Ackerman selected fabric in a range of medium and dark colors, including purple, royal and navy blue, empire green, red and black.

"It's going to be very colorful, believe me," he said. "If anyone wants to take them and cut them into fabric for clothing later, they can."

Making blankets was a departure for the mill, which usually produces fabric for ski wear and mountain climbing clothes. But because Polartec doesn't ravel, it needs no binding, he said. Workers made the blankets simply by cutting fabric to size.

Blankets will be given to refugees by volunteers for AmeriCares, a nonprofit organization based in New Canaan, Conn., and the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee of New York City. Roadway Express, will transport the blankets to Andrews Air Force Base near Washington, D.C. and Bradley Airport in Hartford, Conn.

The Kurds, with their distinct culture and language, have struggled for self-rule since World War I. Iraqi President Saddam Hussein signed an autonomy agreement with Kurdish representatives in 1970, but it was soon abandoned.

10th annual pride march marred by controversy

By MEG KROEPLIN
Collegian Staff

On Saturday, May 4 the 10th annual "Lesbian and Gay Pride March" will take place in Northampton.

Although one might expect this day to be one of celebration, for the past three years the march has been embroiled in bitter controversy.

Lesbians have accused gay men and bisexuals of unfairly excluding them from the 1989 March and rally and bisexuals charge lesbians with unfairly excluding them from the march's title for the last two years.

Lis Brook, a lesbian member of this year's Gay and Lesbian March Committee says there was no lesbian conspiracy against bisexuals this year.

Brook said that, contrary to rumors, the Committee, which includes most of the 1990 march organizers, did not meet in secret to plot against those who wanted to change the name to include bisexuals. She said the current group stepped in when no other group formed to help take responsibility for organizing the march.

She said those concerned with changing the name should have spoken up sooner. "We waited since last May for [those who wanted a name change] who said they would create dialogue to do so. It became the middle of March 1991, and we decided we better do something or there will be no march."

She said at that point the group decided to leave the name unchanged, as the "Lesbian and Gay Pride March," because no one had a "political agenda" that supported a name change, and began forming work groups. She said letters were sent inviting interested groups to attend a work session.

A bisexual UMass student who asked that her name be withheld, said she attended the first work meeting announced by the Committee in March.

She said she felt the march committee "tried to railroad past the [name change] issue."

Those who wanted a name change got together afterwards and formed a separate group, called the "Committee for an All-Inclusive March" to begin working to include a visible bisexual presence at the pride march, she said.

The UMass Lesbian, Bisexual, and Gay Alliance is working with this committee, according to Sean Sullivan, an LBGA spokesperson. He said the group is selling t-shirts that include "bisexual" in the march's title and will be marching behind a huge banner that includes "bisexual pride" at the March on Saturday.

Meagan Rosser, a bisexual member of the LBGA who supports the Committee for an All-Inclusive March, said the main crux of the march should be to raise awareness and confront homophobia, something gays, lesbians, and bisexuals all experience. She sees the lack of inclusion as an example of "bi-phobia."

According to J. Mary Sorrell, a lesbian from Northampton, to understand the view of lesbians who got together in 1990 to restore the original "Lesbian and Gay Pride" title, one needs to understand the last three years of March history. She said the whole controversy started when the 1989 Committee was blamed for excluding lesbian speakers and issues from the post-march rally. She said many lesbians also felt the name change reflected the Committee's insensitivity to lesbian concerns.

Sorrell said she approached the march committee three years ago in February offering to speak on the "herstory" of Lesbians in the valley, but the committee turned her down. She said she was told the speakers list was already filled, with two speakers on bisexuality, one on AIDS, and one on the gay civil rights bill. She said there were no lesbian speakers scheduled.

Later that spring, in a meeting that has since become a controversial subject, Sorrell said the title was changed to the "Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual Pride March."

According to Pamela Kimmell, editor of the lesbian publication THE CALENDAR, "a group of self-identified bisexuals packed the [1989] march committee meeting and pushed through the name change.

"I think if the name change had been done differently, if it had been introduced respectfully," things may have been different, Kimmel said. She said she felt the group showed "an extreme lack of understanding and respect of lesbian and gay history and the people who lived it ..."

Kimmell's criticism was echoed by Sorrell, who said many lesbians were upset because they felt the group, which she said included many young bisexual men and

Colleges receive $9.8 billion in private donations for 1990

NEW YORK (AP) — Private gifts to U.S. colleges and universities totaled $9.8 billion in 1990, up 10 percent from the previous year, according to a survey released yesterday.

The increase in donations from corporations, alumni an?ther private philanthropic sources follows a 9 percent rise in 1989 and a 3.5 percent drop in such giving in 1988, according to the annual estimate by the Council for Aid to Education.

Harvard University received the most private support of any single institution — $213.5 million, equal to $8,743 per student, and up 15 percent from 1989 levels. Stanford University was second, attracting $202.2 million, or $14,325 per student, a gain of 7 percent from the preceding year.

Alumni giving totaled $2.54 billion, up 10 percent over the previous school year.

Corporate donations were up 11 percent to $2.17 billion, more than double the 5 percent increase in 1989.

Philanthropy from all sources has increased by 55 percent since 1984-85, according to the council. Adjusted for inflation, donations were up 21 percent from five years earlier.

Such giving "is a well-embedded tradition" that has consistently defied fluctuations in the economy and the stock market, said Priscilla Lewis, a spokesperson for the nonprofit council.

"These days there is also a great deal of emphasis on education as a critical factor in national competitiveness. There is plenty going on now to sustain the tradition of giving to schools," she said.

But she noted that the latest survey covered donations received during the 1989-90 school year, slightly ahead of the recession that economists say began in July.

The council's estimate was based on mailed surveys to 1,056 colleges and universities that together account for about 85 percent of all donations. The council extrapolated national totals based on those survey findings.

Among the results:

- Non-alumni individuals donated $2.23 billion, up 7 percent from the preceding year.
- Foundations gave $1.92 billion, 10 percent more than 1989.
- Religious groups donated $237 million, up 1 percent from 1989, and donations from clubs, unions and other sources increased 11 percent to $700 million.
- Four-year research institutions received by far the biggest share of private aid.

Seventy private research universities alone accounted for $2.9 billion of philanthropy. The next highest recipients of private aid were 108 top public research institutions, reporting $2.6 billion.

By contrast, community colleges attracted just $59.5 million.

Weld's aides reject developer's plan to build Mt. Greylock resort

ADAMS, Mass. (AP) — A Connecticut developer, tabbed by former Gov. Michael S. Dukakis to build a $250 million vacation home resort on the state's highest peak, said he is pulling out of the stalled project.

"Enough time is enough time. I do not see any hope," said Richard Carnaghi, vice president of the Heritage Development Group of Southbury, Conn. "We put a lot of time, dedication, devotion and over $2 million into this. But there comes a time when you just have to say no."

Carnaghi said a meeting Wednesday with town and state officials failed to budge aides to Gov. William F. Weld. In January they rejected a proposed land disposition agreement with Heritage for the proposed cross country skiing and golf resort on the lower slopes of Mount Greylock.

"I'm upset this day came and had to come," said state Environmental Commissioner Peter Webber.

"But in a way I'm relieved that it has come to an end and we can move forward with something new," Webber said, maintaining the state still hoped to see a resort built on the pristine mountain.

Heritage initially sought to create a new resort village on the pristine peak featuring 1,250 condominiums and overnight accommodations for 3,000 people.

But following protests from all of the state's major environmental groups, the proposed resort was scaled back to 850 detached homes and condominiums on a 1,000-acre site. The state seized the property by eminent domain from a bank that had foreclosed on a private developer's failed attempt to build a downhill ski resort on the property.

Dukakis had called the proposed resort a key to revitalizing the economy of the northern Berkshires.

women, was being insensitive to lesbian issues.

"There's a fear that when we [lesbians] give up our space and let others in, we will become invisible," Sorrell said.

She also said she thought the decisions that were made in 1989 reflected an "ahistorical" view of lesbian history. "There was a complete ignorance of what it means to be a lesbian," she said.

Kimmell said that in 1990 about 35 lesbians got together to reorganize the march because the way it was done in 1989 "isn't o.k. with us." She said they invited lesbian and gay speakers and restored the original name.

"It was like a military coup," Kimmell said.

UM student says Liberians' needs ignored

By AMY HENRY
Collegian Staff

Donations are needed to provide food, clothing, housing and medical care for the millions of refugees escaping Liberia, said William Landford, vice president of the Liberia Education Foundation and Relief Fund, yesterday in an interview.

Landford, a senior agriculture economics major at the University of Massachusetts said, "The United States has paid a lot of attention to the Kurdish refugees but not the Liberian refugees."

Currently in Liberia there is no government and warring factions have caused complete chaos and killed 30,000 people in the past 14 months," according to Landford.

Liberia has been a U.S. ally for more than a 100 years, yet the United States is ignoring the human outcry for help, he said.

He said presently there are 750,000 refugees including his own family members on the Ivory Coast, 350,000 in Sierra Leone and 500,000 in Guinea from Liberia.

"Some of the refugees in Sierra Leone have been beaten on the streets of Freetown, the capital, because of the National Patriotic Front of Liberia's incursions into that country.

The one million displaced Liberians in the country who are being controlled by the NPFL are physically abused, tortured and killed, resulting in a mass exodus to neighboring countries," he said.

According to Landford, all of the refugees in these countries are in desperate need of food, shelter and medical care.

Landford received a letter this week through the American Red Cross from his brother, recounting his journey from Liberia to the Ivory Coast.

The letter read: "All along the things were very difficult and we suffered seriously and lost many of our belongings. In as much as I have survived, I thank God. I am completely out of place. I am suffering from pneumonia, cold and severe malaria because of the bad sleeping conditions. I got here with only two trousers that are completely worn out and three shirts. There is no good accomodations, all the houses are full so we have to sleep in an old lady's living room. Conditions is very bad, I am a complete destitute. I desperately need clothes and money to buy food. I am begging you to please help as soon as possible."

Landford said, "After I received this letter it was not clear if the family followed my brother, are on their way or are still trapped in Liberia."

A peace conference was supposed to occur between all Liberian political factions on March 15, 1991.

The Economic Community of West African States sent in a peacekeeping force called Ecomog in July 1990 to protect the lives of Liberians and other West African Nationals and also for the stability of the region, he said. "My family is trying to leave Liberia because ECOWAS are left with no other option than to use military force to rid the NPFL rebels out of the country which will result in bloodshed."

According to Landford, the only person concerned in the U.S. Congress is Sen. Ted Kennedy (D-Mass.), who has proposed a bill for $127 million in aid if the peace process goes through.

"Liberians have been neglected by the United States since the beginning of the Gulf crisis and also the world has forgotten that Africa is bleeding and she needs help. The United Nations should provide protection and relief aid to all the refugees of Africa because their plight has been forgotten by the West," he said.

Lanford said he plans to go to the Ivory Coast with other members of the Foundation at the end of May. "I will be doing relief work and helping my family possibly come to the U.S."

The Foundation was established last year to help the refugees resettle when the war is over in Liberia and provide funds for students returning to any level of education.

Donations can be sent to the Foundation, P.O. Box 2961, Amherst, Mass., 01004.

Rob Skelton

Local singer to run for Noho city council

By MARC ELLIOTT
Collegian Staff

Lead singer for the local band Free Press, Rob Skelton, announced his candidacy Wednesday for Northampton's city council at a press conference at the Northampton Parking Garage.

Skelton, 27, said that while he has an unusual vocation, he has lived in Northampton for six years and has the same concerns as the average citizen, such as parking and quality of life.

"Politics and entertainment are not too far apart," he said.

Originally from Sharon, Mass., Skelton studied music and journalism at the University of Massachusetts for four years and must complete one more semester to graduate.

Skelton is running for the at-large seat on the council now held by council President Mary Ford who is leaving her seat to run for mayor.

"This kind of opening in city politics doesn't come around that often and this time it came around at a time I was ready for it," Skelton said.

The city council needs a new voice, Skelton said.

"Have you ever seen the council?" he asked. "There's a lot of old men hanging around killing their retirement and I'm a fresh voice, a change of pace."

A self described "liberterian with social and environmental conciousness," Skelton said he has the right political "blend" to represent Northampton, which he says is "a conservative city with a liberal veneer."

Skelton was the only candidate for the council seat as of yesterday and he is confident he will win the election.

"It's going to blow people away, but I'm going to win it," he said.

No stranger to city politics, Skelton ran a write-in campaign for mayor two years ago to protest the "dullness" of the campaign, which he said was due to the two candidates' similarity.

"I just wanted to add some spice to what I considered a boring race," he said.

Skelton said he will make some changes if elected. For example, Skelton wants the city to take charge of the Northampton State Hospital, which he says has been dormant for 10 to 20 years.

Skelton also said he wants to repeal the "paper bag fees" which mandate that citizens pay a dollar for every bag they dump.

"I'm going to be shaking up the council a little bit, just a little bit," he said.

Seniors to hold first semi-formal in 20 years

The "Going out in Style" Semi-formal, the first senior class semi-formal in more than 20 years, will be held this Saturday at the University of Massachusetts, according to members of the Senior Celebration Committee.

If this year's event proves to be a success, the semi-formal could become a lasting University tradition, an unidentified committee member said.

The dance, which will be held in the Bluewall, is scheduled for 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Tickets are $10 per person, $30 for a group of four people, and can be purchased at the dance. No date is required.

Music will be provided by Perfect Mix Productions. The dance will offer hors d'oeuvres, a cash bar, and a photo booth.

Among other senior celebratory activities this month is the Senior Class Picnic, which is scheduled for Friday, May 24 on the Metawampe Lawn from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m.

In addition to the food and games, WRNX FM 100.9, which is sponsoring the event, will be conducting giveaways and raffles.

Tickets are $5 and will be on sale starting Wednesday, May 8 on the Campus Center Concourse.

Tickets will also be sold the day of the picnic. Tickets are for food only. People who wish to attend the picnic events but not eat do not need to buy a ticket.

Lambda Chi's help feed the homeless

By AMY PRENDERGAST
Collegian Staff

They stood over huge dishes of mashed potatoes, corn, and chicken, staring out at the hungry faces in front of them. No, they weren't working in the University of Massachusetts Dining Commons, they were the pledges of Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity.

About 80 homeless people gather at the Second Congregational Church in Greenfield every Tuesday and Wednesday night to join in a community dinner. Sister Mary Peter has been organizing these dinners since last September.

"Lambda Chi Alpha donated the money to pay for tonight's dinner," she said. "We will probably have a large crowd because people don't get paid until the beginning of the month. We have seen many more children than usual this month, which is really sad."

The pledges were put to work in the kitchen the momemt they entered the church. While Peter delegated duties, the smell of baking chicken filled the kitchen. Mashed potatoes and corn were cooking on the stove as the pledges began to chop up a salad.

When 5:30 p.m. rolled around, the pledges began to serve the meal. Three tables of guests emptied and formed a line behind the tables at which the pledges were stationed.

The guests included small children, disabled people, and a few families.

UMass freshman Jean Foureau served the chicken. "It was really great to be able to help those who are less fortunate," he said.

After the meal was served, the pledges washed the dishes and mopped the floors. Most agreed the journey to Greenfield was well worth the trip.

Greg Bishop said, "Today I realized how truly lucky I am, and how much we take many things for granted."

Marc "Flounder" McDonald, also a UMass freshman, said, "It was an eye-opening experience to see the true reality of what goes on in all of our cities and towns."

Tim Struna said, "It was educational and inspirational to see that the people of the Second Congregational Church donate their time twice a week to help those in need."

■ program receives grant

The program was then implemented in the housing developments of the Springfield Housing Authority. Trained volunteer residents worked to create change in the lives of their friends, neighbors and relatives.

Rev. Willie Pearson, who lives in the Springfield community and is active in supporting the program, said the program has had positive repercussions in the neighborhood .

"I used to see kids, especially [teen-age parents], who were drifting off, with no sense of responsibility," he said. "But because of the program there have been teens who have seen their mistakes and have straightened out."

Slinski said the program helps to teach people to communicate peacefully. "It's okay to have emotions," she said.

Pearson said another positive aspect is the longevity of the program, which has been in the community for five years.

"I'm used to no follow-up program," he said. "The community needed to find a program that wasn't going to leave them alone."

My philosophy professor looked up painfully from his tattered copy of Hume's Treatise. He gazed out over a packed classroom and sighed. "You know why you're here, don't you? You're here to be trained for middle-class jobs. Some of you for upper-middle-class jobs."

Jeremy Levinson

We didn't answer. We sat there, pens at the ready, wondering if we were going to be tested on what was just said. It was all too clear to us that we weren't learning as much about Hume's value to humanity as about how to take tests well, respect deadlines and be happy when the prof gives us an A.

This philosophy professor looked us over for a while, sighed again and began to lecture. It was hopeless. The only way students would come to find real value and satisfaction in their education would be if we were to be graded on it.

But, we're not. After three years in higher education, I have realized that grades have no correlation whatsoever to anything of value extracted by a student from the course material.

This will go down on your permanent record.

Oh, yeah? Well don't get so distressed.

When test time comes around, students are handed question sheets and those insidious blue books. We're given an hour or two to prove to our teachers that we deserve a grade that won't help narrow our opportunities in the future.

No pressure. At least you can stop worrying about how to afford grad school.

My first experience with a test in college was in an introductory philosophy class at a community college in New York. All semester long I had impressed the teacher with my essays and comments. Now, I had an hour and a half to coherently review several hundred years of earth-shaking philosophy. I couldn't do it. My mind froze with the understanding that a semester of hard work — my debut in college after quitting high school — was all for nought unless I could produce right then and there.

So, I bugged out, leaking ink from my fountain pen all over the test booklet, breaking into a sweat and torturing myself nearly to the point of tears. In the end, I handed in a half complete, incomprehensible test.

Somehow, I am supposed to believe that this is a student rite of passage; a character-builder. Sort of like a training-ulcer.

Indeed, the proper way to take a test is to de-learn the material. In the Humanities and the Social Sciences, we're generally dealing with human events, processes and institutions so the subject matter takes on their depth and dynamism. People write for years about this stuff without saying anything of consequence and we're expected to present it well in an hour.

Some would say that students are not expected to develop detailed meditations. We're supposed to demonstrate that we have wrestled with the material.

Testing is the only method educators have for gauging whether or not students have done the class-work — nothing more. Read pages 12-71, seen a film, or heard a lecture.

The result? Students learn very quickly to pick up and regurgitate that which will make it appear that we've dealt with the material. Not because we're lazy. But, because that's what's expected. That's what gets that A most of the time.

And that's what's important. Some 'liberated' teachers will tell us not to worry about grades and to dive with zest into the material. Their intentions are good but their memory is lousy: It was grades that originally put them on the path to professordom, not their better-than-average engagement with course material. Never confuse an A with having derived value from a course. Nor a D with the reverse.

Occasionally the academic grind slows enough for students to explore on their own terms — that's when 'Education' happens. Besides that, our task as students has little to do with bettering ourselves. Our task is to get the shit done.

In the end, we won't understand our world, ourselves or each other any better. But, we'll be well-practiced in skills we'll spend the rest of our lives using: Meeting others' deadlines, spitting out what the boss wants to hear and wagging our tails when we get patted on the head. It's a living. Or, so they say.

Can You Guess Who Al D'Amato Hung Up On?

Waitress victim of prank

Last Saturday night, eight college students went to the Peking Garden restaurant on Route 9 in Hadley, ordered more than $100 worth of food and drinks, and performed a classic "dine and dash." Funny.

Not so funny for their waitress, a petite 37-year-old graduate student studying education at the University of Massachusetts. The woman said she was afraid to use her name but wanted her story told.

She left her husband and son in Xian, China, over a year ago and came to Massachusetts to study, because in China, women her age cannot get an education.

The woman, barely five feet tall, is certainly not a bouncer. She works as a waitress to earn the $480 a week that pays for her tuition, fees, housing, and — although not often, because money is tight — phone calls to her husband and child.

At the urging of a teacher, she came down to the Collegian to tell her story and ask the students, whom she thinks are from Amherst College according to the IDs they produced for drinks that night, to pay for the check.

She asks this because she had to shell out nearly one quarter of her monthly wages to pay for their food and their drinks.

There are several things she cannot understand, she said, speaking nervously, sometimes waving her hands in anger as she remembers that night.

She filled their water glasses several times, because she knew they would be thirsty after all that food. She brought them plenty of fortune cookies and gave them extra time to smoke before paying. And then they were gone and she was stuck with the bill.

This is the second time this has happened at the restaurant, she said, but the first time it has happened to her. And the restaurant's policy penalizing waitresses does not help matters much.

"Why would they do such a thing to me?" she asked imploringly, then shook her head.

Perhaps she expected more from students in a college town; students who, if not suffering from a lack of money themselves, at least can see poverty on the street or read about it in the newspapers.

Perhaps she thought that things were so tough already that they couldn't get any worse.

Or perhaps she trusted too much and the eight students who bolted Saturday night did not stop to think about the consequences of their actions.

"If they feel guilty, maybe they will give the money back," she said. "But I don't think so."

Hopefully, she is wrong. But she is sad, disillusioned, and wonders why people don't spend more time on education instead of hurting others.

And if the students have half a brain, forget about half a heart, they will return the money to the restaurant and the waitress they left in the lurch. This is no time to be playing games with people's lives.

Don't forget to leave a tip. The waitress certainly has left a generous one.

Actress praises 'Survival Kit'

Wednesday, May 1, 1991, The Black Women's Survival Kit opened for our first show in the Curtain Theatre. As a member of the cast, I cannot adequately relate how I felt when we came out to perform the prologue. I guess you could say we were all on 'Cloud 9'. Being that I have never performed in theater before, I must say that this experience is one I'll never forget. And for those of you who think that the Malcom X parties and annual funk-o-thons are all that there is to take advantage of, think again. I urge you to get more involved.

And to my fellow cast sisters and to Kym Moore, our director: ladies, it's been real. Thanks for sharing yourselves with me. Thanks for accepting me as one of you, because together we made it happen. We were able to translate the Black woman's experience into a beautiful poetic experience and artistic piece. Thanks to the playwright, Andrea Hairston. Ladies: "Keep on keeping on!"

And to UMass and Five College area students, come check us out before we're sold out!

Challenging the establishment is difficult

Whoa! what a campus! Reactionary "Ubermenchen," the Guy Glodis Talk Show, the new "hardcore" Minuteman, ROTC "Fashion Shows," Kiss-ins, Queer Nation — What can people make of it all?

The African-American community bristles over an offensive comic strip, Middle Eastern Students scream of Western atrocities in Iraq, Latinos and Hispanics vehemently decry their partying stereotypes — How does it all fit?

Women faced with uncertainty vocalize on issues like abortion rights, labor equality and reproductive options — All this too?

Now throw in draconian budget cuts, furloughs and labor disputes — Where will it all end?

There are many who would dismiss this campus as a volatile bed of "liberal" thought. Some feel diversity is stressed too much here; they feel a need to combat it. Who can't understand why? It's so easy.

It's so secure and easy to buy a Desert Storm T-Shirt and hate Saddam Hussein. It's easy to get upset reading editorials against the war, and its horrid aftermath. It's very secure and easy to watch Liz and Jack on Channel 4 report another shooting in Boston. It's easy to read about the spread of AIDS in urban ghettoes and to wonder why people still put themselves at risk. It's an easy, secure, white-as-snow world that too many of us have cocooned ourselves into.

That's because it's hard enough to survive in this society. It's even more difficult and insecure to learn about how the American Dream is a nightmare for so many. It is difficult and insecure to look at the mighty U S of A through the eyes of her disinherited. For many people, learning about racism and other forms of oppression is difficult enough — let alone accepting it within themselves.

The mission of the University is to educate. Education is something which goes far beyond classroom instruction. The more people there are who are educated about themselves and the world we live in, the more people we have to save the crumbling juggernaut we call our country. The structure of this country has too many weak pillars; America rests on too many injustices to stand. It is through learning about these crises, accepting them in our own lives and working to change them that this country can begin to save itself and avoid the fire next time.

Gossip is harmful

What is it that makes people gossip so much? This is a question I ask myself a lot, especially, since I am Puerto Rican and we are known for doing this all the time.

Well, I have news for some people. This is something I don't do. I don't gossip about anybody because I don't like it and because I don't like people gossiping about me either.

I would like to address this letter to those Puerto Ricans who have contributed to maintaining this image of gossip and talk; especially to those on this campus. I wouldn't say what I'm saying without being supported by facts and experience.

Many of you out there know that I'm right. I don't know about you, but I personally hate the thought of sitting at a table surrounded by people who assume the 24-hour task of talking about what another person did or said. 'What? When? How and with Whom?'

That's all you hear! It's sickening to me! We must learn to respect other people's privacy and worry about our own problems. I have never seen a situation where people try to hide their doings over the weekend out of fear of being reviewed by "The Coffee Shop Conference Review Board" the following Monday. We must have in mind that gossip can create situations which can escalate to greater proportions beyond our control. Let's not wait for this to happen and let us start setting an example.

States debate rape victim privacy laws

(AP) — The controversy that erupted when news organizations identified a woman who said she was raped at the Kennedy estate in palm Beach, Fla., has spurred legislative drives in several states to protect the privacy of rape victims.

Media executives and legal experts say the proposed laws are unneeded and that most would probably be overturned in court.

"Specific restrictions for the press have been overturned by the courts as unconstitutional," Everette E. Dennis, executive director of the Gannett Foundation Media Center in New York, said Wednesday. "I can't imagine that news organizations wouldn't immediately challenge it."

The debate over naming rape victims escalated when several news organizations, including NBC and The New York Times, identified the woman who alleged she was raped by William Kennedy Smith at the family estate last month.

The case is under investigation and no arrests have been made. Smith, the nephew of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, has denied any wrongdoing.

Lawmakers in Iowa, Missouri, Alaska, Pennsylvania and Louisiana are considering adopting laws to protect the privacy of rape victims.

Some states, including Florida, already bar media identification of rape victims, and virtually all news organizations, including The Associated Press, withhold rape victims' names except in extraordinary circumstances.

That few victims are identified suggests that "this whole topic has taken on a near hysterical tone," said New York attorney Floyd Abrams, a First Amendment expert who opposes such legislation.

"For states to seriously consider adopting legislation dealing with a problem which generally does not arise. . . is ill-advised," Abrams said.

"You don't really need to pass legislation to outlaw a practice unless there is a problem," said Ann Kirkwood, publisher of the Wrangell Sentinel and president of the Alaska Newspaper Association.

Frank Gibson, president of the Society of Professional Journalists, said he plans to send Missouri Gov. John Ashcroft a letter stating his opposition.

"It's a prior restraint to be threatened with a criminal action for publishing the name," said Gibson, metropolitan editor of The Tennessean in Nashville.

Ashcroft has not decided whether to sign the bill, said spokesperson Bob Ferguson.

In Alaska, the House unanimously approved legislation Tuesday to withhold the names of sex-crime victims from public records. The measure goes next to the Senate.

Earlier this year, the Iowa House approved a measure that would prevent police from releasing a rape victim's name until someone is charged. The measure, which was introduced last year, but gained adherents since the Kennedy investigation, failed by a single vote in the Senate.

After the Kennedy case broke, a Pennsylvania lawmaker said he would introduce a bill this month that would bar police and prosecutors form releasing the name of sexual-assault victims. And a bill prohibiting the disclosure of rape victims' names was filed in the Louisiana Legislature on Monday.

Abrams said courts are likely to strike down laws that bar the reporting of victims' names, ruling they place unconstitutional prior restraints on the media.

Other proposals, like the one in Alaska, to limit information on public records could be upheld because there is no specific constitutional provision for open records.

Mock jury acquits Lee Harvey Oswald

PEORIA, Ill. (AP) — A mock trial jury of college students has acquitted Lee Harvey Oswald of charges that he assassinated President John F. Kennedy.

The trial, condensed to three and one half hours, also resulted in an overwhelming vote of innocence for Oswald from the audience of about 100 people at the federal courthouse this week.

"It was unanimous on the first vote," said jury foreperson David Oliver, a business management major at Bradley University.

"A majority of the jury believed Oswald was involved, but they didn't know to what extent."

Evidence at the trial included a videotape of the Nov. 22, 1963, assassination as Kennedy's motorcade drove past the Texas Schoolbook Depository in Dallas.

Witnesses who testified before the Warren Commission and congressional committees investigating the assassination were portrayed at the trial.

Jurors also were shown photos of Dealey Plaza, where the assassination occurred, and a photo of witnesses dropping to the ground and looking toward a grassy knoll where, according to some conspiracy theories, a second gunman hid behind a fence.

There was even testimony from a witness portraying Oswald's widow Marina. She detailed Oswald's communist beliefs, defection to the Soviet Union and support of Cuba's communist revolution.

"The people have not proven Lee Harvey Oswald fired 'the shot' that killed President Kennedy," defense attorney Mark Rose told jurors in closing arguments.

Prosecutor Robert Gaubus urged jurors to ignore the conspiracy theory and focus on the rifle and three spent cartridges, bearing Oswald's fingerprints and clothing fibers, found near the sixth-floor window where police spotted a sniper.

"It's time to bring to justice the man who snuffed out President Kennedy's life," Gaubas said.

ARTS & LIVING

A forecast of the upcoming trends in jazz

By BILL ROSENBLATT
Collegian Staff

In the subways of New York City (where I plan to move this summer), there are various ads showing people saying what they would do with the money if they won the Subway Lotto. Well, here's my little dream: I'd hire a promotions staff and a good contract lawyer, and I'd start my own small record label. Style of music: Latin jazz, a/k/a Afro-Latin or Afro-Cuban.

Why? Because I think that recent activity in this style will be the next important influence in the evolution of jazz. There is currently no label that does this style enough justice. Such a label will encourage and support the music's development, and, yes, there is probably a bit of money to be made.

Jazz hasn't really evolved in the last 15 years or so — an eternity by its own standards — and it desperately needs a creative shot in the arm. Right now, the music is caught in a tangle of three dead ends.

Dead end number one is "traditional jazz," as espoused by the Marsalis-led neotraditionalists. This music was vital 30 or 40 years ago; it is technically and artistically impeccable, but it has retreated into the rarified domains of the concert hall, the $40-a-set nightclub and the ivory tower.

Traditional jazz has been "classicized," i.e., given the history-and-scholarship-based trappings of European concert music, thus all but assuring its irrelevance to the here and now. Its industry is sustained mainly by the deaths of veteran musicians (already in tragically short supply), their album reissues and their young imitators. Traditional jazz sales are modestly respectable, but they will soon diminish to a level analogous to that of the European classical "warhorses."

Dead end number two is "contemporary jazz" (a la Kenny G), a thinly-diluted version of the "fusion" movement that began auspiciously and audaciously in the late 60s. It is well on its way to becoming the Beautiful Music of the 90s, as evinced by the astounding success of contemporary jazz radio stations like CD 96.7 (Boston) and CD 101 (NYC), whose formatting ideas have been used elsewhere to surround the likes of Mantovani.

Valley Jazz

Despite the occasional artist (George Benson, Grover Washington) who plays both traditional and contemporary jazz, the latter is generally disavowed by critics and will probably drift even further away from the jazz tradition — though record sales will remain high.

The third dead end is the "avant-garde." This music was formed out of the great creativity and unimpeachable intentions of John Coltrane, Ornette Coleman and members of grass-roots artists' collectives in the mid-60s through mid-70s. Now its main outpost is the Knitting Factory club in New York's SoHo, a Mecca for lovers of the eclectic and the arcane. Although it is certainly unfair to use a single label for a scene that includes such a wide variety of music, this is just what well-meaning fans and critics in magazines like Wire and Option have effectively done.

So-called avant-garde music demands highly developed ears; it is by nature inaccessible. It has constantly found itself backed into corners of form and structure and thrashing around wildly for new sources of inspiration.

I include the M-BASE movement, in Brooklyn, as part of the avant-garde, at least for now: their eclectic mixture of jazz, funk and hip-hop has yet to pan out as something with more than purely intellectual appeal.

So much for the dead ends. Jazz needs a new direction that is inspired by existing elements of the tradition and is artistically substantial, yet is not exclusionary and has ample room for creative growth. The new Latin jazz scene fits these criteria. The music has been called a "fusion," but unlike previous "fusions" such as Third Stream — and unlike some older Latin jazz — the new music explores very deep common roots in Africa. One could even look on it as restoring African drums, banned in the U.S. during slavery times, to African-American music.

The new music contains an astounding array of traditional Afro-Caribbean-Hispanic polyrhythms that complement the flowing time of modern jazz perfectly, underscoring the music's heritage, while not excluding recent developments. The role of the bass has also changed in an important way: instead of acting as a harmonic anchor (as in earlier jazz styles) or a vehicle for melodic virtuosity (as with masters like Charles Mingus and Ron Carter), the bass in the new Latin jazz has become a bridge between the multidirectional rhythms and the melody.

Musicians like trumpeter/percussionists Jerry Gonzalez and Dizzy Gillespie are a generation apart, but both are equally well informed about (and comfortable with) all stages in the development of jazz and Afro-Latin music, from traditional jazz and Salsa to rock and even the avant-garde. Thus they are equipped to move the music forward.

Their music is also getting increasingly popular. Evidence: Gonzalez is getting lots of gigs and work as a sideman on non-Latin musicians' albums. Record stores can't seem to keep his own records on the shelves. Virtuoso Cuban trumpeter Arturo Sandoval recently defected to the U.S. amid a welter of publicity. Gillespie, who first put Afro-Cuban music on record in the 40s, has a fantastic new album (Live at the Royal Festival Hall, on Enja) with his United Nation Orchestra, a heavily Latin-tinged all-star big band that includes Sandoval. Master percussionists Tito Puente and Poncho Sanchez are selling more and more albums lately too.

However, none of these musicians have the label support their music needs. Sunnyside, Gonzalez' label, covers too disparate a range of styles on too small a scale to focus on one style properly. The same is true for Enja. Concord's Picante subsidiary, which records Puente and Sanchez, has better focus and distribution but too "polite" an approach to album production. Worst of all, Sandoval has signed with GRP, king of the fuzak labels. Moreover, for every musician I've mentioned there must be dozens more who deserve label support but don't have it.

Hence the need for a label totally devoted to the new Latin jazz. Just find me a few hundred grand and I'll start it — I've got it all planned out. The only question that remains is: what do I call it?

Spectrum contributes to artistic delinquency

By DANIELLE DOWLING
Collegian Staff

On a wonderful spring day in the lovely month of May, how can your time be better spent than by defacing public property?

Well yesterday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., at the Fine Arts Center pool, people were given such a chance to express themselves. Provided with colored chalk, they scrawled on the concrete without fear of having a UMass cop chase them away. The graffiti ranged in content from personal advertisements to cool artwork and poetry.

This bit of naughtiness and self-indulgence was entitled Legal Graffiti, a chalk mural sponsored by Spectrum Magazine. The Spectrum, the University's literary magazine, used this event as a way to promote themselves and the upcoming release of their latest issue.

Cynthia Conrad, poetry editor of the magazine, said, about the chalk mural, "We're really psyched that we have a forum other than the magazine for people to express their artistic talents."

The people at the Spectrum were also psyched about the turnout. Scores of people turned out to leave their message. In fact, so many people turned out that the Spectrum had to purchase more chalk, supplying a total of 4 grosses, I was told that at 3 p.m. they were almost totally out, with the really cool colored chalk running out first.

The only people that weren't psyched were the skaters that usually inhabit the pool, practicing tricks and learning new ones. I asked one skater, who was drawing a skull, if he was miffed that these amateur graffiti artists were treading on his territory.

Collegian photos by Dondi Ahern

People deviantly pursue the mass defacing of property yesterday with the threat of rain looming in the air.

"I'm not," the 18-year-old UMass HRTA major replied, "But they are." He pointed to two guys skating between the pools.

But with finals looming in the air, one must ask of those who stop and take some time to leave a message on the chalk mural, "Why waste precious time on such frivolous endeavors?"

"Because it's fun," Mercedes Johnson, a 19-year-old UMass student, claimed as she scrawled her name on the cement. "It's kind of neat that everyone is doing their own thing."

Fun is not the only perogative that drives these people to deface public property, some also want to send a message, like Joshua, a 21-year-old student from Empire State College in New York, and his friend Collin, a 24-year-old UMass engineering major. Their mural said "Peace Moves: Together in Diversity," a project on which they have been working.

"We figured we'd get this down before it rains," Joshua said and just as he spoke those words it started to rain, but the people stayed, continuing in their artistic project that would soon wash away.

The Spectrum arranged for this last semester when they got the big "Okee-dokee" from Building Operations. But won't there be one of hell of a clean-up when it's all over?

"They told us not to sweat it," Conrad said. "The pool is self-cleaning."

Well, that's a relief.

The Spectrum will be holding a reception for the debut of the latest publication next Thursday (that's May 9) in Campus Center Room 101 from 7 p.m.-9 p.m. The reception is open to the public with the extra added bonus of FREE FOOD. Can't beat that.

UPC stands firm on policy

By NOA BEN-YEHUDA
Collegian Staff

A Smith student wiggles her tongue around and rolls her eyes as she describes how she will make her way into the fenced in boundaries of this year's Spring Concert at UMass where Five College students are traditionally not allowed.

The Smithy thinks that after the first set, security will loosen up and she will be admitted to the biggest UMass concert of the year, "no problem."

"That's what she thinks," said Dave White, Co-Security Coordinator Union Program Council Productions, the producers of the show. "Officially we never open the doors but in the past, it's true, towards the end of the show we have actually opened it up to the public. But this year has to be different."

Why? Bob Dylan, De La Soul, The Feelies, Gene Loves Jezebel and Chucklehead . . . that's why.

"We have been getting calls all the way from Vermont and New York from people who want to know how to get tickets to see Bob Dylan," said Brian Stearns, production manager of UPC.

But there are no tickets to be had. UPC made the decision not to vend tickets when the Spring concert moved outdoors ten years ago. Stearns explains that it would be too difficult to deal with tickets at an outdoor concert of this size and, more importantly, "it would not be fair to the UMass students who want to attend. Our capacity is 15,000 people and there are more than 15,000 UMass students. We need to ensure that they can see the show, after all it's their money that is paying for it."

The concert costs $93,000 to produce. In addition to SATF fund money, funds come from the Board of Governors, $2,000 was contributed by Commuter Area Government, $20,000 from The Student Government Association and venders pay $400 to sell big sweet yummy things.

The spring concert has been produced by student run Union Program Council Productions since 1979 featuring the best musicians. The Grateful Dead, U2, Santana, Jimmy Cliff, The Talking Heads, have all graced our pond ala UPC.

"This is our 'thanks,' our payback to the students of UMass. They paid for it, they deserve to know that there will be space for all of them to rock the pond," said White.

There are two solutions for all you non UMass peeps. Work for UPC the day of the concert and not only will you be admitted free, you will get a t-shirt and food. Call 545-2892 for all that business. Otherwise, sit in the grass across the pond. It's fun too.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19) A creative approach will greatly improve your chance of career advancement. Be careful when it comes to making new investments. Deal only with those who have a reputation for reliability.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Business and financial endeavors will benefit from a more enthusiastic approach. Tend to paperwork related to budget matters. A new division of domestic chores may be in order.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Double-check all details relating to financial matters. Speculative ventures are too risky now. An influential person could be hard to contact. Relax this evening with close relatives.
CANCER (June 21-July 22) Let the experts handle any financial negotiations. A stubborn person can be a valuable ally. Your sense of humor makes you a welcome addition to any group. Enjoy a young person's company tonight.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Refuse to let minor interruptions keep you from achieving your main objective. An older relative can be very demanding. Give this person more attention, but not during business hours.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Allow an associate's project to develop further before offering any suggestions. You can glean useful information from watching how other people operate. Give romance a second chance.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Do not allow you personal feelings to interfere with your ability to make a wise career or business decision. Choose the best person for the job. Stock tips help you turn a quick profit.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) A positive attitude and good manners are the key to success today. Have the courage to tell your loved ones how you really feel about a controversial subject.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) Be careful not to leave your valuables where they might tempt someone. A good friend offers helpful advice. Take it. Keep in touch with loved ones at a distance.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) A promotion or raise could make this a red-letter day. Keep abreast of world affairs. The most interesting people to know are those who can talk about something other than themselves.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) A conflict at work could reveal a great deal about an associate's true goals. Moderation is the key to good health. Look to the future with confidence.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) Family members could be touchy today. Be careful how you phrase any suggestions you make. Get better organized, both at work and at home. Your spirits will rise along with your productivity.

Pitching featured at Diamond Classic

By THOMAS A. GEORGE
Collegian Staff

You might not be able to believe the heat.

It's coming courtesy of the collective pitching of the staffs of the teams competing at Totman Field.

The red-hot pitching of Florida State University, ranked 11th in the nation, Princeton and Connecticut come to town to face the University of Massachusetts softball team in the UMass Diamond Classic Tournament Saturday and Sunday.

Five regular season games remain for the University of Massachusetts softball team. Three will go down this weekend, as UMass faces up against Princeton, Connecticut and FSU.

Saturday action pits UConn vs. FSU at 10 a.m.; Princeton vs. UMass at noon; UConn vs. UMass at 2 p.m.; and FSU vs. Princeton at 4 p.m.

On Sunday the show begins at noon with UConn vs. Princeton, followed by the clash between the Lady Seminoles and the Minutewomen at 2 p.m. to close the tourney.

UMass is on a seven game win streak, it's last loss coming from UConn in a fourteen inning marathon battle.

Strong performances from starters Holly Aprile (14-6) and Darlene Claffey (17-4) have kept UMass in the money. Aprile has a 1.30 ERA with 80 strikeouts and 135 innings pitched. Claffey, who has thrown fourteen shutouts and four no-hitters, has a 1.18 ERA, and 93 strikeouts.

The UMass bats have been as hot as branding irons. The cumulative batting average is .326. During the last seven games, the team has averaged over nine per game.

Senior shortstop Barbara Marean, who leads the Atlantic-10 conference in home runs and RBIs, also is ranked in the country's top hitters with a .455 batting average.

The fourth NCAA poll, taken on April 26, had FSU in the number 11 position with 57 points. The Seminoles hold a 53-10 record. Those contests consist of a 5-1 road record, 21-7 in neutral turf games, and 27-2 at home.

Numbers tell a large part of the FSU story. Opponents have been out-hit 238 to 454. FSU has scored 246 runs to their foes' 80. In a strange but telling stat, the Lady Seminoles have had 573 total bases to a mere 281 from their opponents.

The Seminole starting pitching staff is young; Rebecca Aase is a freshman and Toni Gutierrrez is a sophomore. This hasn't seemed to present much of a problem. FSU pitching has sent 499 batters back to the dugout with Ks.

Princeton, with a standing record of 28-11, has relied heavily on starting pitcher Lisa Moore. Moore is a freshman, from Wellesley, MA. She has thrown for 132 of the team's 259 innings pitched. Moore posts an 0.79 ERA, and has 186 strikeouts on the season. She has a season record of 16-6 with one save. Moore has had problems with control, having hit eight batters and thrown 16 wild pitches.

Of the remainder of the Tiger hurlers, Stacie Bonner has seen the most time on the mound. Bonner has thrown 60 innings of ball, marking a 5-4 record with no saves.

Both UMass and UConn have used two pitchers almost exclusively. For the Huskies, Kim Mizesko (19-7) and Pat Conlan (15-4 ERA) have been the pitchers of record for all but two of the 47 games this season.

Mizesko is another pitcher who is capable of terrorizing batters. She boasts an ERA of 0.43, has 223 strikeouts and twelve shutout performances.

UConn, who recieved votes in the NCAA poll, split a double header with the Minutewomen on April 25, 3-2, 0-5, ending a 15 game winning streak. They have also faced FSU and Princeton.

The Huskies dropped two close games in March to the Lady Seminoles, 1-2, 0-1 in Tallahassee. In that meeting UConn out hit FSU 7-6, yet chocked up more errors, 6-3.

At the Princeton Invitational, UConn downed the Tigers in two shutouts 2-0, 1-0. UConn had only eight hits in the two victories.

Alongi has hit at a scathing .455 clip.

Rutgers will most likely throw Dave Hoelher and Phil Schnieder against UMass. Both are ranked among the A-10's top 15 pitchers. UMass will counter with its top guns, Rich Graham (5-3 ERA) and Scott Meaney (4-4 ERA, 33 strikeouts). Graham is 3-1 during the Minutemen's 15-5 tear, while Meaney is 4-0. Both went the distance in UMass' wins over Rutgers.

Syracuse has lost to No. 7 Johns Hopkins (18-12) and No. 1 North Carolina (10-3). UMass lost their season-opener at No. 14 Cornell (16-7) and were robbed by No. 2 Brown (13-12) in overtime at home.

UMass is 2-for-3 in sudden death overtime situations while Syracuse has yet to go into extra minutes this season.

Ted Garber has yet to face Syracuse, either as a coach or as a player. Roy Simmons, Jr. has faced Garber's Gorillas strictly as a coach, playing for the Orangemen as an undergrad.

Garber never played for his father, unlike Simmons who was coached by Roy Simmons Sr. at Syarcuse. Instead, Garber played at New Hampshire and later coached his alma mater.

Simmons, and assistant coach John Desko scouted the UMass-Harvard game last week. Garber has watched Syracuse game tapes galore.

These men are ready, as are their players.

"We're just as talented as they are," said UMass assistant coach Aaron Jones. "We're a lot more physical than they are . . . if we play like we can, we could beat them."

UMass' Ted Kellerman has made 91 saves in the last five games. He reached a career-high 27 saves against Rutgers and has been slowed down only by a 21-4 blowout against Boston College, resulting in a mere five saves. He was named New England Player of the Week for his performances against Delaware and Dartmouth. The senior has made 20 or more saves six times in his career.

Mark Millon has scored a goal in every game this season and was named NE Player of the Week for last week's six goals and three assists against Harvard and Rutgers. The sophomore leads the team with 33 goals and has 12 assists.

Reverse those numbers, and they almost match tri-captain Jim McAleavey's. The senior leads the team in assists with 32 and has 12 goals for the season. He holds the UMass assists record at 166, breaking Jeff Spooner's record ('77) of 141 against New Hampshire. He has yet to surpass Spooner's career points record of 275 but is close behind with 260.

Tri-captain Rick Mullins has only been scored on once this season and was named NE Player of the Week for his outstanding defense against Yale and Providence. Against Delaware, the junior scored his first collegiate goal.

Senior Jim Kushner, sophomore Mario Guaglianone, senior tri-captain Rick Senatore and junior Mike Cain have each contributed over nine goals.

UMass is still struggling during man-up situations, converting only 12-for-43. They are almost even facing off, winning 48 percent of the draws.

The lone Canadian remaining on the Syracuse squad is leading goal scorer, Tom Marachek, with 35. The junior has contributed 16 assists and also leads the team in total points.

Close behind his numbers is sophomore Jamie Archer with 24 goals and 25 assists. Sophomore Matt Riter has netted 20 goals and contributed eight assists while freshman Charlie Lockwood has 17 and six.

The Orangemen take 58 percent of their draws during faceoffs and are a poor 24-for-66 in man-up situations.

Gorillas hungry for Orangemen at the Stadium

Mark Millon, who leads the University of Massachusetts lacrosse team in goals with 33, will be a key concern for Syracuse as the Gorillas and Orangemen meet at Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium tomorrow at 1 p.m.

By ADRIEN MATT
Collegian Staff

The Gaits are in Detroit, the Orangemen are in Syracuse and the Gorillas are waiting in the Stadium.

Faceoff is 1 p.m. Saturday.

Gone from the Syracuse roster is faceoff man Kirk Pratt, goalie Matt Palumb, Attackman of the Year Greg Burns and that Canadian tandem, Paul and Gary Gait.

This is the year the University of Massachusetts lacrosse team (9-2) has 13 seniors on its roster, just like the Orangemen did last year with the aforementioned players on that roster.

UMass will host Syracuse (8-2) in the McGuirk Alumni Stadium for 'crowd-control purposes,' according to the sports information office.

The last time the Orangemen were in the Stadium, UMass lost by one point.

Let me repeat that, one point.

So, the Stadium could be the better place to play Syracuse, considering the tighter scores between the two teams have been at 'home.'

"I think the volume [of the crowd] makes up for the distance difference," UMass assistant coach Tom Carmean said in reference to play in the Stadium. The proximity of the crowd to the players is much closer on The Hill.

Last year, Syracuse leapt to a 4-0 lead within the first four minutes of the game in the Carrier Dome. Although the score was cut to 6-3 at the half, the Orangemen walked away with the second half, resulting in a 23-9 slaughter.

In 1989, UMass was down by 6-0, 7-1, 9-3 before scoring four consecutive goals, but Syracuse cut the rally short and scoring ended at 10-9. Tim Soudan had a team-high three goals and Jim McAleavey had two goals and one assist in front of one of the largest, and most vocal, Stadium crowds.

For the series, begun in 1976, UMass is 4-for-15. The Gorillas have not beaten Syracuse since 1981, but have been very close a number of times. UMass won by two in 1977, won by three in 1979, lost by two in 1982 and lost by one in 1985.

Within that time-span, the Orangemen have been National Champions four times, consecutive winners for the past three years.

Similarities between the teams abound.

Both are Top 20 teams, on winning streaks, have lost only two games and have a father-son coaching dynasty.

The No. 10 Gorillas are on an eight-game winning streak while the sixth-ranked Orangemen have won six in a row.

Minutemen face Rutgers for first place in A-10 Saturday

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

How important is Saturday's doubleheader with Rutgers to the University of Massachusetts baseball team?

A sweep or a split with the Scarlet Knights will give the Minutemen their first ever Atlantic-10 Eastern Division title. Two losses, however, would give Rutgers the Eastern title and knock UMass into second place.

The Scarlet Knights have a lot riding on this doubleheader as well. Two losses would send Temple to the A-10s instead of Rutgers because of the Owls' better record vs. UMass.

It all starts at high noon Saturday at Earl Lorden Field. And while the lacrosse team's annual showdown with those guys from Central New York (what was their name . . . Syracuse?) is tomorrow's main attraction on campus, UMass baseball fans should know that these are the most crucial games the Minutemen have played all season.

Another historical note accompanies this weekend's series. Sports Information Director Howard Davis, in looking back through the baseball program's records, found that the Minutemen are two wins away from 1,000 total wins in the program's history. A sweep of Rutgers would bring them to that esteemed plateau.

"It's a great challenge for us," said UMass coach Mike Stone. "We've never been the first seed going into the A-10 Tournament and never won our division."

UMass enters tomorrow's action at first place in the A-10 Eastern Division at 10-4, having already clinched a spot in the A-10 Tournament May 10-12 in Boyerstown, Pa. The Minutemen are 22-20-1 overall, but that mark does not show how well they have played of late. They are 8-2 in their last 10 games and 15-5 in their last 20.
